DEAR SIR: I see the appropriation matter for fighting hog sickness is up for consideration now, so I thought I might be able to cast a little light upon the subject. You will see that I, with a lot of my patrons and friends, are interested. I am interested from a professional standpoint—a breeder myself—and for a lot of my friends and for breeders who have been stung by this serum mistake. It is a failure as a preventative and a cure. Seven years has proved that it neither prevents nor cures the disease, while, on the other hand, it has killed thousands of well hogs and spread disease into thousands of well herds and caused unnecessary expense and loss. It will continue to do so as long as it is used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. He states further:

Every dollar that Congress appropriates to further the manufacture and use of serum is only pouring oil upon the burning fire and helping a lot of fellows who are taking advantage of the conditions to graft off the unfortunate hog men.

* * * * * * *

Stop the use of serum and spend $100,000 one year in this way, and make a lot of political soft-job grafters keep their mouths shut for one year and quit sending in false reports of how many thousand hogs serum has saved. Then we will stop the whole trouble. But as long as Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture will be dictated to and listen to these Bureau of Animal Industry serum boosters and agriculture college boosters and veterinary college boosters, who all have an ax to grind, just that long hog sickness will continue to spread and rage and cause loss. I think seven years has been long enough to aid these jobbers and grafters in their fat jobs.

I might continue, but it is a long letter. That is what this veterinarian writes, so you will see that there is a difference of opinion on the subject.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman has read a letter here the purport of which, it seems to me, renders this item of $510,000 absolutely unnecessary, but he as chairman of the committee seems to approve it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I stated at the outset, we provide for $188,000 for the inspection of these plants and to regulate the sale of the serum, which guarantees a potent serum to the user. We appropriate $29,000 for research. Those two items are entirely proper. The department contends the serum is perfect and it would seem that there is no necessity for further investigation.

Mr. LAYTON. If all the research you have had up to date is no good, why not cut it out?

Mr. HAUGEN. The main differences of opinion is as to the necessity for the demonstrations. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] believes the demonstrations are necessary. Others believe they are not. In view of the great losses of hogs, we should take the necessary precautions, and the committee therefore recommended the $292,000 for demonstrations. In view of the contentions the committee felt warranted in making this much of an appropriation for this phase of the work.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman himself believe this treatment has merit?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think it has. I think the serum has merit. But I am pointing out that there is a difference of opinion as to the advisability of spending more money for further demonstration, the necessity of which has been questioned.

Mr. LAYTON. I want to ask this question: Have you, after all these years, any clinical record that is established as a fact as to the utility of these manufactured articles that you are talking about here in respect to serum?

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will refer to the hearings he will see that great claims are made for it by the department. The department claims large decreases in mortality as a result of its work.

Hog cholera comes and goes. It comes to our section about every 7 or 10 years. When it makes its appearance, of course, we have a 100 per cent increase and when it disappears naturally we have a 100 per cent decrease.

In reference to the claims of the department, I refer to a letter received dealing with accuracy of the number reported in Iowa in 1914 when hog cholera was at its height. It reads:

I noticed in the hearings before the Agriculture Committee on hog-cholera work that there was some discrepancy in the figures furnished concerning the losses of hogs in Dallas County, Iowa. I believe the Government people were using figures showing that there was a loss of 9,180 head and that you used figures sent out—the bankers' estimate—showing that there was a loss of 15,967 head.

As you are perhaps aware, every assessor in Iowa this year was asked to gather data in every township concerning the hog-cholera losses. I have just received the figures from Dallas County as compiled by the county auditor, and they show that the farmers in Dallas County during the year 1913 lost 16,124 hogs from cholera.

The department's figures show 9,180, but by an actual count the loss was 16,124.

The contention at first was that it was necessary to supervise the manufacture and sale of serum so that we might have assurance that the serum manufactured and sold was potent. Congress provided for the inspection. The committee is now reporting an appropriation of $188,000 for that purpose and an appropriation of $29,000 for research work. In addition to that the committee reports $292,000 for demonstration work, which is less than the amount of $411,000 estimated for. The committee cut the appropriation, but felt that some appropriation was warranted for the work.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not want to be understood at all as opposing this appropriation. What I was trying to get at was this, that this matter has been a matter of Federal control and aid for many, many years, and I was wondering whether or not there were any statistics in respect to the utility of these hog serums, as there is in my profession, for instance, in respect to the serum that we use for treating diphtheria and other diseases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to call attention to an act passed in Canada:

At the Government House at Ottawa, Saturday, January 4, 1913, present: His Royal Highness the Governor General, in council.

Whereas it is deemed advisable and in the public interest that the importation, manufacture, or sale of hog-cholera serum and virus be prohibited in the Dominion of Canada:

Therefore his royal highness the Governor General, in council, in virtue of the provisions of clause 1 of section 28 of chapter 75, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, is pleased to order as follows:

The quarantine regulation established by order in council of the 30th of November, 1909, is amended by adding the following section thereto:

"SEC. 88½. The use of hog-cholera serum or virus being considered a source of danger, the importation, manufacture, sale, or use of such serum or virus is prohibited."

F. K. BENNETTE,
Assistant Clerk of the Privy Council.

That is the action taken in Canada. I understand that they now may use the serum and virus. Gentlemen, are we to appropriate more than a quarter of a million dollars here to pay for Ford cars and hotel expenses and railroad fares of the specialists sent out on the demonstration work? Have we not dealt liberally with them, gentlemen, when we give them $292,000?

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAUGEN. They employed 139 men in 1919. They propose to employ 173 men this year. Their expenses for 1919 were $232,000. They now ask for $441,000. I believe that the amount reported by the committee is adequate to meet all the legitimate demands.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I trust that every member of this committee will give serious attention to the consideration of this item that we now have before us, because in a few minutes we are going to be called upon to vote on it.

Let me say at the beginning, my friends, when an item like this is being assaulted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the chairman of the committee, he is assaulting an item that he is not a friend to. He does not believe in the hog-cholera campaign that this Government has had on for the past few years. He does not believe in the treatment that it gives. He does not believe in the remedy that is being prescribed. He does not believe in a dollar of the expenditure that is being made.

Now, what are the facts?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. In a moment.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman is not going to misrepresent me?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The gentleman can answer in his own time. I do not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I do not yield now. We had on the 1st day of January, 1919, in this country 75,587,000 head of hogs. What tremendous value this great industry is to the Nation! And yet there is not a man who comes from any agricultural community who does not know without my having to tell him that there is a constant threat hanging over the hog industry of the country, because every section of it is swept periodically by the hog cholera. We have found a remedy that will finally stamp out this disease. The Federal Government has taken charge of this great campaign by virtue of the funds that you and I have voted to it, and told them to employ these experts and thus aid the farmer in protecting this great industry on which the people of the Nation must depend for their meats. [Applause.]

Now, at the beginning of this campaign the death rate amongst hogs was 137 per thousand. Last year it had been reduced to 37 per thousand. Are you not familiar, my friends, with the campaign that we must make to protect the health of the human family? Where is there a man to-day who would stand up on this floor before any American audience or before any audience in the world and protest against the serums that are being used to prevent smallpox outbreaks, diphtheria outbreaks, and kindred diseases that sweep over the human family?

We have passed the old preliminary stages, and we have now found the remedy for this disease. The question now is, having found a remedy and educated our farmers from one end of the Nation to the other with respect to it, are you going on the false cry of economy to retrench and further add to the burden of the man on whom you and I must depend for our food supply that we need from day to day? You lay out your campaign along any line of business, and when you are winning in that campaign you spend more money if necessary to make that campaign a complete success.

Oh, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] talks about the Ford automobiles. He talks about hotel bills. He talks about traveling expenses. Yes; you have it all. How are you to get your experts to the farmers of the country unless you send them? How are you going to send them unless you pay railroad fare and automobile hire? How are you going to get this information to the people who need it unless you spend the money to get the information there? That is what this money is for.

Another thing, $180,000 has been appropriated for the purpose of driving out of existence these frauds which have set up business by holding up the farmers of the country and selling to them spurious preparations. The Government has a Federal inspection system. We are paying for it. We know what the remedy is. We are paying out money to see that that remedy is kept pure and to see that it reaches the farmers' hands in a pure state, so that the herds of hogs may be protected. I am going to sound this warning, that while you cry out "economy," it is not economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. This is not economy. It is not economy to cut down an item like this when you save multiplied millions of dollars to the farmers of the country and add to the meat supply not only of our own Nation but to the meat supply of the world. Ah, you can not be too careful about these inspections. Only recently in my little town one of these serums was sent out by a manufacturing institution in Philadelphia as an alleged preventive of diphtheria. They made a mistake in its preparation, and when they went down there among my physicians in my town and in the city of Dallas and surrounding cities meetings were held and children were called in, and this serum was pumped into their arms, and when the reaction came they died because a poison had been administered.

You need inspection to protect the human family. How much, then, do you need inspection to insure the purity of this product? Our Government does inspect it, and does see to it that a pure product is sent out to our people. Now you want to cut down the expense. Now you want to say that they can not have it.

Now you say you are going to cut the program, and when you say it you are saying to the farmer, "We are withdrawing from you the help that the Government owes you."

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I shall use none of my time in defending the chairman of this committee as to his friendship for the farmer. Every man in the United States who is at all familiar with his record in Congress knows that he needs no such defense.

Let us see what this proposition is. This bill appropriates $510,000 for the department on the hog-cholera proposition. Of this sum $188,280 is for the inspection of the serum manufactured by hundreds of individual concerns, advertised and sold to the farmers. No man can raise a hog to-day without getting advertisements soliciting him to buy that serum. Twenty-nine thousand dollars of it is to continue experiments. What does the rest of it go for? How are you defending the farmer? Let us see. There are 143 veterinarians paid by this Government. You know them. They traveled 2,500,000 miles in this country last year to talk to 300,000 farmers about hog cholera. That is what the balance of this appropriation was spent for last year.

Mr. THOMSON. It is stated in the hearings that they traveled over 2,000,000 miles.

Mr. TINCHER. They traveled 2,500,000 miles last year, these 143 expert veterinarians, to tell the farmers how to use this serum, when every farmer in the United States who is raising hogs receives mail every day that will tell him how to use this serum. I say it is bunk, and that you are trying to prevent us from reducing the number of useless employees in the department, and you are trying to hide under the coat tails of the farmer, and to everyone of us who are trying to reduce the number of useless employees you are saying, "Oh, you must not do that or we will tell the farmer you are against him." That kind of bluff does not work with the chairman of this committee, and it does not work with me.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TINCHER. I will ask the gentleman to speak in his own time. I have but five minutes. When Dr. Mohler was before our committee on this subject I talked to him about this, and I wish every Member of this House would get part 5 of these hearings and read them. Dr. Mohler admits several things here. Dr. Mohler says that the serum is a success. He says that when you buy a hog in the open market you ought not to take him home for a stock hog without administering the treatment. Here is what he said:

Mr. TINCHER. You spoke there of vaccinating so many hogs at the stockyard markets.

Dr. MOHLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TINCHER. There is no market in the United States where you can afford to take stock hogs out without that?

Dr. MOHLER. None at all.

Mr. TINCHER. Every man who purchases stock hogs in the open market knows he can not afford to remove them without vaccinating them against cholera?

Dr. MOHLER. That is true.

Mr. TINCHER. The vaccine is manufactured in all those market centers, is it not?

Dr. MOHLER. True.

Mr. TINCHER. By private companies?

Dr. MOHLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TINCHER. And those companies are under Government supervision by your inspectors?

Dr. MOHLER. All of them are that do an interstate business.

Mr. TINCHER. And if a man goes to the open market and buys stock hogs he wants to get the serum there to vaccinate them before he takes the hogs away from that market, and they do that at their own expense?

Dr. MOHLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TINCHER. And the function of the Government is to see that the man who manufactures that serum has complied with the regulations and that the man gets a good serum. There is nothing complicated about administering the serum?

Dr. MOHLER. No. They have local men doing that in all these stockyards and our men are present to supervise the work and see that it is done properly. That is all we do. For instance, we do not approve of a man vaccinating a hog which has a temperature above a certain point, 104, because that animal is apt to be coming down with cholera, and if he is vaccinated he will probably die.

Mr. TINCHER. There is no vaccine that is a cure for cholera?

Dr. MOHLER. No, sir.

Mr. TINCHER. It is purely a preventive?

Dr. MOHLER. Purely a preventive; yes, sir.

Dr. Mohler says it does not take an expert to administer the treatment. Then, finally, after a few of my friends over on the other side who know these 143 men who hold these soft berths and are trying to save them had prodded him and begged him to sustain this outrageous waste of money out of the Public Treasury, he tried to make a justification for it. He says that the services of an expert are necessary, because it is not practical to give the serum to a hog with 104 degrees of temperature, because that hog has the cholera, and if that hog is given the serum he will probably die. Of course he will die. He will die anyway if he has got the cholera, and this story about the necessity for these 143 fellows flopping around the stockyards taking the temperature of hogs with fever thermometers does not wash with me any more than the charge that GILBERT N. HAUGEN is an enemy of the farmer will wash with me. [Applause.]

There are $292,000 of this $500,000, that my friend wants to increase to $600,000, that will be spent for these men traveling around the country. Gentlemen, the way of the producer is hard enough without having to guard his barns and fences to keep these Government experts from burning them up with their cigarette stubs. [Laughter.]

I have come from the farm since many of you have. The representatives of several State agricultural societies appeared before us, representing the farmers, and they said they wanted the Government to quit sending these experts around in that way, and they knew what they were talking about, and they were voicing the sentiment of every American farmer who is not a coward and is not afraid to say that he stands for economy.

You can not make me vote for an appropriation bill that is unjust and unfair by simply saying, "Oh, you come from a farming section, and you had better lay off of that or we will say that you are not a friend of the farmer." Why, I have vaccinated more hogs myself than any one of these Government experts ever saw. [Applause.] You fellows can not go out in my district and make the people there think I do not know what I am talking about. Why, let me tell you what these fellows did last year. They ran out of anything else to do, and in direct violation of law they went out last year and quarantined more than 9,000 farms in this country. That is shown in the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I decline to yield. They went out last year and quarantined more than 9,000 farms in this country. I said, "Have you any law for that?" "Oh, no; it is against the law." I asked Dr. Mohler, "You know about hog cholera. Was it advisable to quarantine these farms?" He said, "No; it was not the way to treat hog cholera. It was not the remedy. It was not proper." That shows in these hearings. Still, you are going to spend $292,000 to send these men out who, for the want of something else to do, quarantined 9,000 farms. I wish more of you were farmers and could appreciate what it meant to have some city guy that did not know any more about hog cholera than I know about airships come out and quarantine your farm because he thought a hog had the cholera. He knew as much about it as the man knows who wants to keep experts running around in order to prevent the farmer vaccinating any hog that has a temperature of over 104 degrees. I am against any such preposterous thing as that, and when anybody wants to spend the money of the Government for a useless purpose, and I oppose it, then I say they can not scare me by saying, "Oh, you had better spend this money or we will say you are not a friend of the farmer." I want to be classed with the chairman of this committee as the same kind of a friend of the farmer that he is. [Applause.]

And I want to say to you that whenever I vote money out of the farmers' pockets to pay these fellows for traveling around over the country pretending to be a friend of the farmer, I will quit this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman spoke about quarantine. Is it not a fact that the quarantine was put into force by the States and not by the Government of the United States?

Mr. TINCHER. No; he said that the Government agent got State authority to put them in quarantine.

Mr. CANDLER. Then it was done by State authority and not by Government authority.

Mr. TINCHER. Dr. Mohler admitted that it was a wrong thing to do.

Mr. CANDLER. Is it not a fact that the Government of the United States has no such authority?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes; but we send young men around the country and they order the quarantine that they have no right to do.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is the gentleman speaking for the farmers of his locality or for the farmers of the United States?

Mr. TINCHER. I am speaking for the farmers of New York and every State that sent farmers before us. The National Farm Bureau is an organization in 31 States in this Union, the biggest farm organization in the United States. They came before us and protested against the Government bothering them with these Government agents, and they mentioned this item particularly. Hog cholera is the same in Kansas as anywhere else; serum is administered the same in Kansas as it is anywhere else, and a cigarette stub of a Government expert will burn a barn in Kansas just as quickly as it will burn it anywhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman does not want to be unfair.

Mr. TINCHER. I hope I am not unfair.

Mr. RUBEY. The farm bureau commended the work in hog cholera especially.

Mr. TINCHER. The farm bureau before our committee, every man that talked to us, asked us to keep out unnecessary Government experts, and the only branch they mentioned that they could specify was the hog-cholera department. I heard the farm bureau, and the chairman and every member of the committee that was there will agree that that was what was said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY. I object.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. LAYTON, and several others rose.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MADDEN). The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that this makes the twelfth time that I have risen for recognition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And this is the thirteenth time that I have risen.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, the former occupant of the chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY], a member of the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will be very glad to yield to a member of the committee. I did not know that one rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very sorry that he did not know that fact, but he has already recognized the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JACOWAY. And the Chair will recognize me next?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be delighted to do so.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, coming from a State that has nearly 10,000,000 hogs within its boundaries, from a district that probably has more hogs than any other district in the United States, from a county that has more hogs than any other county in this district, and having had years of practical experience in raising hogs, I believe I can speak with some slight degree of authority upon this subject. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], and believe that this appropriation should stand as the Committee on Agriculture has presented it in this bill. Mr. Chairman, the assault that has been made upon the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in connection with this item is utterly unjustified. My colleague, Mr. HAUGEN, originated this appropriation; he started the Government in this line; and to accuse him now of being unwilling that it be continued, when we have without the addition proposed by the gentleman from Missouri a great appropriation of over $500,000, is entirely unfair. My colleague, Mr. HAUGEN, favors the appropriation carried by the bill. If he did not, it would not be there, and as chairman of the great Committee on Agriculture he has worked day and night in the interest of the farmer.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Can the gentleman tell us when this appropriation was originated?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I can not. It has been in the Agricultural bill for a long time.

For the benefit of my friend from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], who has been asking some very practical questions with reference to hog-cholera treatment, I would say that this serum treatment has not yet been reduced to an exact science. Hog cholera is one of the most baffling and puzzling diseases that have ever been known. The question has arisen time and again as to whether different types of the disease were not in fact different diseases, though all called by that name. Before any serum was used it came and went by cycles of years, destroying great numbers of hogs, by the hundreds and thousands, in my State.

Then it would pass away with only a little recurrence. Under these circumstances it is impossible to say just exactly what benefit this serum has, but at the same time I would say that the principal hog growers of my district and of the State, men who have had the longest and the widest experience, as a rule seem to think that it is efficient and they make use of it. It is impossible to demonstrate this to an absolute certainty, and hence there has arisen this difference of opinion, shown by the remarks of the chairman of the committee.

I believe this appropriation ought to be continued, but the amount that is already carried in the bill, being over $500,000, is sufficient in my judgment for all practical purposes. I do not know a farmer in the great hog-growing district that I have the honor to represent who is clamoring for more, for the reason, as the gentleman from Kansas stated, that the greater portion of it is being spent now, or a large portion of it at least, upon traveling experts, and the only part that would be cut down is the part that relates to sending out these so-called experts, when, as a matter of fact, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] very properly states, no expert is needed to administer this serum. That is settled by the practical experience of the farmers of my State, Kansas, Nebraska, Illinois, and other great hog-growing States. You do not need an expert for this purpose. For that reason I am opposed to any amendment offered increasing this appropriation. It is unnecessary. The serum will still be distributed and will still be used by those who believe in it, and those who do not believe in it will refrain from its use, and that is all there is to it. As a matter of fact, these traveling experts did not vaccinate as many hogs in the whole United States as there are in single townships of my district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I want to say just a word with reference to the position of Members who have frequently voted for this appropriation for the eradication of hog diseases and other similar appropriations, as I have myself. Sometimes when we get a bill up before us such as one for the support of the Bureau of Public Health, in which it is sought to make certain appropriations, some one will say, "Oh, you are willing to give half a million dollars for hogs and not willing to give a similar sum for the eradication of diseases among men." Those people who talk in that way view this appropriation from altogether a different angle from that which I take. My object in voting for these appropriations is not through any particular friendship for the hog. I have no personal desire to see him get well, except my interest in the human family, in order that the people may have some good and wholesome food and that they may get it cheap. Nothing is more conducive to the public health than plenty of wholesome food, and I vote for these appropriations in the interest of mankind. I have no particular friendship for the hog and care nothing about him, except as it may be of benefit to the human family. That is the reason why I vote for these appropriations to eradicate hog cholera. There is no appropriation, in my judgment, that can more properly be made, and in that respect I agree with the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 18, line 1, strike out of the Rubey amendment the figures "$585,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$410,000."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, no one can truthfully accuse me of entertaining the slightest hostility toward the farmer. There are at least three reasons why I entertain the most kindly feelings toward the farmer. In the first place, I was born on a farm, was brought up on a farm, and there earned my living in the sweat of my face by wringing it from a somewhat grudging soil.

The second reason is that a part of my constituency is rural and engaged in farming, not a large part, to be sure, but a very important part, and I should be most unwilling to misrepresent them in any way whatsoever. The third and most important reason of all is that the greater part of the constituency I represent, in fact the whole of it, and the entire country, for that matter, is vitally interested in the welfare of the farmer. In this vote, as in every vote on this bill, I shall vote for what I believe to be the highest and best interests of the farmer and in the interest of greater production, because, in my judgment, increased production of food is more essential to the city dweller than to anyone else. The appropriation carried in this item divides itself into three distinct parts. The first specific purpose mentioned is for the enforcement of the law in regard to serum. I am for that and for every dollar that is needed for the enforcement of that law. The second is for the continuation of investigation and experimentation.

I am for that also. We should go on with this experimental work. The remainder of this somewhat large appropriation is for what may be called "joy riding," so far as I can gather both from the hearings and from the statements of gentlemen on this floor who know much more about the subject than I do. I am convinced that of this appropriation at least $292,000 is not for the benefit of the farmer at all, or anyone else except the much-traveling Government hog-cholera experts, and is, therefore, practically thrown away.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TILSON. Very briefly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think the statement made here that these experts traveled as much as 2,000,000 miles last year for the performance of their duty indicates that they were seeking to put into effect the purposes of the appropriation?

Mr. TILSON. Not at all. It may indicate the contrary. In fact, it appears from the hearings that, although they traveled considerably over 2,000,000 miles, they examined something like 200,000 hogs, which is probably about the average number of hogs in a single small county in the hog-raising States.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I must decline to yield at present. I have something further I wish to say.

So I do not consider the number of miles these men traveled to be an index at all to the degree of their usefulness.

I know the difficulty of shaking people loose from the pay rolls of the executive departments when they once become attached, and this is a case which is quite similar to many others we have here in Congress. I am convinced in this case that these are practically useless employees, so far as being a benefit to the farmer is concerned or helping to increase the production of hogs. My conviction comes not only from the hearings but from the testimony of farmers themselves, who pray to be delivered from the annoyance of having these men come around periodically to bother them.

I believe in the efficacy of the serum for hog cholera. I believe that the use of it ought to be encouraged; but to my mind it has passed to that stage where every enterprising farmer can get it without any difficulty whatever. He does not have to wait for one of these Government experts to come around and tell him. He knows where to go and what to do. It is brought to his attention from time to time by advertisements in the papers, by circular letters, and otherwise. There is therefore no necessity for sending these men around to selected localities simply to preach the virtues of the serum. As a matter of fact, as was brought out here by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], the farmers do not want these men. Therefore I am not in favor of retaining them on the pay roll.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. For a question.

Mr. RUBEY. Does the gentleman know how many hogs are raised in the State of Connecticut, or where it stands in that respect in proportion to other States?

Mr. TILSON. I do not, and it is not a matter of any importance in this connection.

Mr. RUBEY. There are just three other States in the Union that raise less hogs than the State of Connecticut, and that State lost, in 1919, 1,419 hogs by cholera.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. If Connecticut did not raise a single hog, the people of the State are tremendously interested in having hogs raised somewhere in great numbers. Anything that will help give us more hogs and better hogs is of great interest to the State of Connecticut, and I am for it.

I am not opposing the amendment of the gentleman because Connecticut raises few hogs. I am opposing it, and am supporting my own amendment, which cuts down the appropriation carried in the bill by $100,000, because I believe that in spending the money of the taxpayers for salaries and traveling expenses of these agents of the Government we are wasting the money. In voting to strike out $100,000, which would otherwise be wasted in this way, I believe that I am voting in favor of the farmer and in no wise against the greater production of hogs.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman on his economy program, but I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if the people there eat all these hogs from the West? Have they not plenty of hogs there after all?

Mr. TILSON. They eat their share of them, and I hope they may continue to do so.

As I said before, it is important that hogs be produced—the more the better for everybody. If the gentlemen who are in favor of increasing the appropriation could convince me that such increase would in any degree whatsoever increase the production of hogs, I should be for it. I have been convinced to the contrary, however, by the real friends of the farmer. Therefore I am not only opposed to the proposed increase in the appropriation but think we should cut it below the amount carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman's amendment will not prevail. Bacon now is 75 cents a pound. The testimony that came before the committee was that there were four-fifths as many hogs this year as there were the year before. The testimony before the committee also shows that in six years the work of the bureau in connection with hog cholera has reduced the deaths two-thirds. The appropriations by Congress this year will run over $5,000,000,000, and there is a outcry $30,000,000 in this Agricultural bill which these gentlemen from the shipbuilding and munition manufacturing States are attacking. I believe down in Paraguay and over in China they do not appropriate a single cent for agriculture. I doubt very much whether we want to get into that condition. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi, a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, certainly the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] to reduce the appropriation recommended by the committee should not prevail. The amount proposed to be appropriated in the bill is $510,000. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut proposes to reduce that $100,000 and appropriate $410,000. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri proposes to increase the appropriation, as reported in the bill, of $510,000 by $75,000, and make it $585,000. Now, that is the situation as it exists at this time. The department last year had $641,045 for this work. They recommended $658,945 for this year, an increase of $17,900. The committee reported $510,000, which reduced the estimate. The amendment as offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] does not propose to increase it up to the amount recommended by the Department of Agriculture.

Now, then, you criticize the department oftentimes upon this floor because of its want of activity, and gentlemen to-day have criticized the department because of the department's activity. You appropriate money for the department to enable them to do certain work, and they get busy doing that work, and because they spend the money doing the work which Congress authorizes them to spend in order to accomplish the results that are intended to be brought about by the work that is being done, some Members on the floor of the House continually criticize the department, as was done by some gentlemen who preceded me here to-day.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. In a moment. This is an important work, as everybody agrees who has discussed the proposition here to-day. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who offers to reduce this amount, say he does it because he believes it is in the interest of the farmer. We had a representative from Connecticut before our committee at the hearing, and he stated that this was splendid work and ought to be continued. He came from absolute observation, whereas the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] says only he was reared on a farm, and that was a long time ago when the gentleman was on that farm. But the representative from his State who appeared before our committee knew the situation, and he urged that the appropriation be maintained and that the work be continued.

The question is whether or not you will continue the work that was given to the department to do. The department originally did not ask for this work. It was put upon an appropriation bill, as was stated by the gentleman from Texas yesterday, by Congress itself. Congress appropriated so much money for this purpose. The department organized its forces. They are doing their work energetically, going from one end of the country to the other. You propose to reduce the sum given them last year, when the work to be done now is just as extensive and just as important as it was last year. Even if the amount is reduced now you will come in here next year and criticize the department officials because they have more employees than they ought to have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the other Members of this House ought to have a little chance to have something to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can object. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules the committee members always have the prior right to recognition. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], I hope, will not feel that the Chair is attempting to discriminate against any Member of the House.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the Chair and to every member of the committee.

Mr. CANDLER. I want to say to the gentleman from Delaware that I have no disposition to prevent any other Member from talking.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] said he was willing to appropriate money to discover the proper serum, and then he said he was willing to appropriate money to make this serum a cure, but that he was opposed to the other part of the appropriation for these fellows who travel all over the country to show the farmers how to vaccinate hogs. Does not the gentleman think that that part of it is just as important as the other part, that these farmers ought to be shown how to use this remedy properly, otherwise a good remedy might fall into disrepute?

Mr. CANDLER. Of course. There is no use in having a remedy unless you apply it, and there is no way to apply it unless you send men who have expert knowledge and information about it among the farmers to explain it to them and give them the benefit of it.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] said that there were 143 veterinarians employed, whom he said we know. I do not know any of them any more than the gentleman from Kansas knows them. There are 143 veterinarians, it is true, as is shown by the appropriation, and if we had a better acquaintance with them, and if the gentleman from Kansas had a better acquaintance with them, I doubt very much if he would express the views that he has expressed here to-day. He has criticized these 143 veterinarians because they have been industrious and have been hard at work, because they have traveled over 2,000,000 miles and gone to the farms and met the farmers face to face and explained to them the remedies that had been provided through the money appropriated by the Congress of the United States for that purpose.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. JACOWAY. As the gentleman will recall, Dr. Mohler said this work must commence on the farm.

Mr. CANDLER. Of course it must commence on the farm, because the hogs are on the farm, and you have to go to the farm for the subjects upon which to operate.

The work that has been done has been frequently called to the attention of the House, and its effect has been called to the attention of the House. The number of hogs on farms on January 1, 1918, was 71,374,000. The number of hogs on farms on January 1, 1919, was 75,587,000, or an increase in production during the past year of 4,213,000. All over the country there is a demand for an increase of food products, and if ever there was a time when every stimulation ought to be given to the production of the necessary food products for this country as well as other countries it is now, and instead of decreasing appropriations, which is liable to decrease the food products of the country, it is time to increase the appropriations for that purpose in order to increase the supply of food products of the country.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] is not an extravagant amendment to this appropriation bill. It is a very reasonable proposition which he offers. As I stated at the outset, it comes within the estimate and is below the estimate made by the department itself. The department is thoroughly conversant with conditions throughout the country and knows the necessity for the continuation of this work and the necessity for the money asked for. From the time the first appropriation was made in 1912 for this purpose up to the present time, the amount being $75,000 in that first appropriation of 1912, there has been a marvelous amount of saving in the hog products, amounting, it is estimated, to many millions of dollars each year. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] should prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to arrange for closing debate on this paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in one hour. That will take care of all the requests which have been made for time.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman agree to have the time divided?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You had better divide the time.

Mr. RUBEY. Thirty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa and 30 minutes to myself.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is perfectly agreeable to me. Let the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Missouri and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in one hour, the time to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I have made a long and arduous attempt to get the floor, not to make an extended speech, but because I want to say something that I think is pertinent to this section.

First I want to say that I think that on legislation that can not possibly involve partisanship, legislation in which this side of the House is just as much interested, by reason of the magnitude of agriculture, as that side can possibly be, any attempt by implication or insinuation to inject partisanship is in my judgment wholly and entirely out of order. [Applause.]

My only purpose in rising is to ascertain some facts. As I understand it, this provision has been in the Agricultural bill for several years. The Government has spent a large amount of money upon biological and pathological research.

I wish to find out from the members of the committee what have been the results. What have you got in the shape of clinical facts? Have you discovered indubitably and beyond question that the serum manufactured in the various laboratories all over the country is a success? I am very familiar with one of these laboratories, located between Wilmington and Philadelphia—the Mulford factory. Has it been ascertained with reference to this serum that it will do what the medical profession has ascertained that other serums will do in the way of the prevention of other diseases?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes. There is no doubt in the world that a serum has been discovered that is an absolute preventive of hog cholera.

Mr. LAYTON. If this serum has been proven by clinical experiency to be an absolute preventive, either altogether or in a large fractional degree, then what in the name of common sense is the use of sending a horde of travelers around this country to teach people how to inject it, when as a matter of fact every county in the United States has its own veterinary surgeon, sometimes more than one?

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. No; I will not. I have not the time. I wish to say another thing. I am in favor of the use of this hog-cholera serum and expect to vote for this appropriation, but why should there be so much solicitude on the subject of hog cholera and the sending of traveling veterinarians through the country when 110,000,000 people have never had a single traveling physician to teach them how to use antitoxin in diphtheria? The physicians of the country have been entirely sufficient to apply that antitoxin in diphtheria cases. The point I want to make is this, that if the clinical records do not show that the hog-cholera antitoxin is a good thing, then let us shift some of this money, let us stop this peripatetic body of experts from traveling over the country, and let us put more money behind real experts in Washington for purposes of experimentation, and let them work in their clinical laboratories and find an antitoxin that will be effective. But if you have an antitoxin that does the work, that is effective, let us cut out these traveling experts, because I will say frankly that they are no longer needed. You have veterinary surgeons already who can inject this serum if it is a good serum. [Applause.]

I believe in the farmer himself receiving the direct benefit of the appropriations carried in this section. I do not believe in appropriating over $30,000,000, which this bill carries, and have a large portion of it spent on salaries alone. If it has been clearly, scientifically, and clinically determined that an effective antitoxin for hog cholera has been found, I believe in saving the money which these traveling experts will receive, both in salaries and expenses, and take the money and buy the antitoxin and distribute it free of charge to every section of the country engaged in hog raising, so that the price of inoculation might be directly reduced for the benefit of the farmer. It is very plain that immense sums of money are appropriated for multitudinous purposes which are largely consumed by the pay roll, and those for whom it is intended receive the smaller part of the appropriation. No sensible man would vote against a measure necessary to the public welfare; but in view of the fearful financial burdens imposed upon the whole people by the wasteful and indefensible measures pursued by the administration in the conduct of a war lasting less than two years, during which not a foot of our soil was invaded, not a city or hamlet destroyed, it becomes imperative—absolutely and unequivocally imperative—in order to relieve the burden of taxation imposed upon the people, to cut every appropriation to the bone. The Republican Party has been invested with the responsibility of legislation. It is exceedingly foolish for the various appropriation committees, composed of a majority of Republicans, to permit the heads of the departments and of bureaus under a Democratic administration to dictate the amount of appropriations needed. If they exercise their judgment to cut down at all the estimates furnished by the heads of the departments, they are justified in using that same judgment to the fullest degree of their responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with what the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] says, and I certainly oppose the amendment offered by my colleague on the Military Committee [Mr. TILSON]. I approve of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] to increase the amount instead of decreasing it. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] says they do not need it and that it is against the interests of the farmer. How on earth does he figure it would hurt the farmer to have the Government prevent cholera among his hogs? Then the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] says that if they have this serum, which is largely a preventive of hog cholera, we do not need veterinarians for the purpose of having the hogs treated by the injection of the serum.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me to make an observation to make it clear?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. The Mulford factory and the other antitoxin factories established in this country advertise their products. They go into every drug store——

Mr. QUIN. Yes. I understand the gentleman's proposition. I will ask him not to take my time. When a man has a disease in his family he knows the drug stores have medicines, but he wants a physician to show him how to use the medicine. He wants an expert to do it. So the farmer wants an expert to teach him how to inject cholera serum into his hogs.

The farmers of this country are not trained veterinarians and do not understand the injection of the serum. What is proposed here is to have the hog farmer taught how to inject the serum in order to prevent the hog cholera from spreading and perhaps destroying his herd. After he has been shown how, the farmer can always take care of the situation himself. Who objects to this being done free of cost to the farmer? Certainly every man on this floor must appreciate the fact that it is necessary to increase hog production, both for the benefit of the public and the increasing of the profits of the farmer. The raising of hogs is of paramount importance to the people, and it is in their interest that all the hogs possible be raised in this country.

The gentleman from Mississippi, my colleague [Mr. CANDLER], states that there were produced last year 4,000,000 more hogs than the year before. Still there seems to be a scarcity of hog meat in this country. You can not get the best grade of bacon under 57 cents a pound to-day. The man who works for a small salary can not afford to pay 57 cents for hog meat to eat. Yet if we carry out the doctrine advocated by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] we will be paying $1.50 for bacon, and still the people will not have sufficient bacon even if they had the money to buy it at that high price. Certainly we all agree to the doctrine of economy, but what is the use of advocating false economy. A schoolboy would know that you can not raise hogs and cattle without putting up money to have the best experts in the United States in order that the farm demonstrators can carry the doctrine to every farmer, and every farmer, whether he has 3 hogs or 3,000 hogs, should have the serum, and the demonstrator should go over every county and direct and instruct the farmer how to put it into the hogs to protect them against the deadly and destructive disease of cholera.

The same thing applies to cattle. No man can overestimate what has been done in the way of curing the blackleg and tuberculosis in our cattle and tuberculosis and cholera in hogs, and, while we are talking about the high price of meat, Congress would, if the gentleman from Connecticut had his way, raise the price. Here is the Agricultural Department asking for this amount of money, and I am willing to take the judgment of the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Mississippi and grant the $75,000 more. What is a mere $75,000 if you can send out more surgeons and more serum and increase the hog production to give more profit to the farmers and cheaper meat to the consumers?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has noticed any decrease in the price of bacon within the last five months?

Mr. QUIN. Yes; I had to pay 78 cents a pound and now I only pay 57. The decrease is all over the country. Give the farmer all he needs to raise more hog meat and you will do him and the whole people a great service. We must help the farmer in every possible way. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Connecticut called attention to a pertinent fact. He says it is very difficult to jar a fellow loose from his job. A few months ago the Military Committee came in here and asked us to add 6,000 spur jinglers and bench warmers to the Army of the United States in time of peace, without adding a soldier or intending that one of the 6,000 ever go into any fighting contingent. I opposed it. I wish the gentleman from Connecticut had ascertained then how hard it was to jar a spur jingler and bench warmer loose from his job.

It is always interesting to hear the views of gentlemen from Connecticut as to farms and farmers. My grandfather was born on a farm in Connecticut 123 years ago. I went back there a summer ago to look at it. They went 10 miles from a railway and established the Agricultural College of Connecticut, adjoining my mother's grandfather's farm. For over 150 years the Taylors made a living up in that country. They went from there to Bunker Hill and the siege of Louisburg, where Duval volunteered for the forlorn hope against the island battery. I have great respect for the Connecticut farmer. It takes a smart man to make a living on a Connecticut farm. They could well qualify as experts in farming, and I am glad to have their opinions. [Laughter.]

A few months ago we voted in this House for an appropriation of $876,000,000 for an Army in time of peace. Now, when the farmers come in here and want $30,000,000 to invest in the biggest business of the country, men come around with amendments to pare down, pare down, pare down. The committee probably struck a happy medium—they are intelligent men and have been at it a long time—but the idea of cutting it down does not appeal to me and it has no economical reason. There is no industry which is more entitled to protection from this Government than the hog industry. It is subject to attacks under the laws of nature which makes it a difficult problem to handle. If there is a good deal of money spent in taking care of hog cholera, there is not a dollar of it wasted if they keep at it until it is solved.

The serums of the country are valuable, deserve great consideration, and they do a wealth of good in the product of this country from farm and for table. In proportion to the capital invested the serum business does as much for the consumer and for the farmer as any business. It saves enough hogs so that the meat supply is much larger and more sure, and so that families have meat on the table that never would otherwise. You can safely pause on nonproducing investments. You must expend where there comes a return. No reasonable-minded man should ask to cut down the appropriation for a great industry like this in a time like this, when we are spending hundreds of millions for the Army and the Navy in time of peace and with 4,000,000 soldiers ready. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the report of a committee in this House is usually entitled prima facie to acceptance, and anyone who challenges a report of a committee ought to be provided with reasons to support his contention. I believe the majority of the committee made a mistake in reducing the appropriation for the suppression and control of hog cholera. The appropriation for this fiscal year was $641,000. Six hundred and fifty-eight thousand was the recommendation for the next fiscal year. The committee have only reported $510,000. Now, no one questions the economic importance of the hog industry or of the desirability of increasing hog production. I do not understand that anyone has seriously questioned the value of the methods pursued by the Department of Agriculture in its control and suppression of hog cholera. I know something of the work of the department from observation in my own section and in other sections of the country. That observation, coupled with the testimony of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, as disclosed in the hearings, should make it apparent to any unbiased mind that not only is the work important but that the amount recommended for the work ought to have been granted by the committee.

I rose especially to combat what I think is a dangerous tendency disclosed by the opponents of this appropriation. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] is opposed to all extension work among the farmers of the country, apparently.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Not just now, for I first want to quote what the gentleman says. I quote this language from the gentleman from Kansas, as disclosed in the hearings:

> I do not think there is any occasion on earth for the Government to spend a dime now to persuade people to use the hog-cholera treatment. You have the treatment, you have the vaccine that will prevent it, and anyone who is interested to the extent of owning hogs ought to have enough thrift without the parental guidance of the Government how to use it.

So that if the gentleman had had his way, he would have cut out everything in this appropriation except sufficient funds necessary to manufacture the vaccine or the serum. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] talks about the useless work of the agents of the department. The most valuable piece of legislation which we have enacted here in years is the legislation providing for the extension work in the Department of Agriculture. The farmers cooperative demonstration agents, the home agents, these agents of the Bureau of Animal Industry, all proceed upon the theory of carrying knowledge to the man upon the farm. We have always had expert knowledge about agriculture. My learned friend from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] just told me of a recipe from Cato for curing hams, which he says very nearly, if not quite, approaches the method now used in producing the famous Smithfield ham in Virginia. The difficulty has always been in getting information to the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I have been very highly amused at the comparison of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] of hogs raised in Kansas with the hogs raised in Missouri. Whenever a farmer in Kansas has a hog that is a little off color, a hog of the long-nose variety, all that is necessary to bring about the death of that hog is to have some one come along and say to the farmer, "Where did you get that Missouri hog?" The hog is immediately knocked in the head. Everyone knows where the razorback hog comes from, and everyone knows where the hog comes from that drinks out of a jug, and they do not exist in Kansas.

It seems to me the time has come in this House to take the advice of the farmers. I come from an agricultural and a stock-raising district, and the only ambition I have is to correctly represent the interests of my constituents. I prefer to stand with Congressman TINCHER, of Kansas, who has raised thousands of hogs, and I prefer to take the advice of a man like Congressman WHITE, of Kansas, a farmer who farms with his hands, and who every year raises hundreds of hogs; I would rather follow the advice of the farmers of this House who know what the farmers want; and they know that one thing the farmer wants is to keep down the burden of taxation. He does not want a lot of Washington experts to come out and tell him what he should do on the farm. [Applause.] Everyone knows it does not help the farmers to have a lot of fellows from Washington tell them how to raise hogs. They know more about it than do your experts from Washington. What the farmer wants is to cut down the useless appropriations. Let us make appropriations that will help the farmer, not have experts traveling around farming the farmer and taking the money out of his pocket to pay for it. I am in favor of appropriations wherever the farmers will be helped, but I do not want them hindered by experts and burdened with taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, this matter may be passed over lightly by some men in the House, but one of the most important things that you will have to deal with this session is food production in this country. The man worst hurt financially in the country is the man who raised hogs during the war and had to sell at a loss. You can go back into the western States and talk to the farmers who raised hogs at the solicitation of the Food Administration and various agents of the Government, and you will find that he is complaining that the Government officials induced him to go out and buy feed at the highest prices ever known in the country and buy hogs at the highest prices, and feed them for the market, and he now must take his loss. As a result of that, hundreds of farmers who have heretofore devoted their entire attention to raising hogs will raise no more hogs, if they do as they threaten. They do not understand why it was that Congress gave large amounts to make good certain losses on war contracts that had not been completed, and yet they had to pocket their losses when the armistice was signed, and when the armistice came their products were cut half in two, from nearly 20 cents down to 10 cents. Yet upon the market the consumer was paying more than he paid at 20 cents. When the price of beef cattle went down the market in Washington showed an advance of 25 per cent. If you reduce this appropriation, what will be the result? The result will be this: The farmers will not try to raise as many hogs, because conditions are not such as to induce them to do it. You take away the protection that is thrown around the man who ventures, because it is a venture to go into the hog-raising business, and when you withdraw that protection of having the serum and veterinary surgeon where they can be reached, you make the business of growing hogs more hazardous, and therefore you will reduce the output.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman explain to me and to this committee how 143 men can be available for the use of the entire country, for the hogs of the entire country?

Mr. McKEOWN. I would say to the gentleman that I do not know what conditions prevail in his State. His farmers may have acquired sufficient information to know how to handle their own herds, and no doubt in the State of Kansas they have acquired that information, but down in my State the farmers, while they are progressive, have not had the opportunities to learn how to inject this serum. Besides that, the serum must be taken to the farm in order to stop the epidemic where it commences, in order to save secondary work. These men must be carried out to the farm in order that the disease may be properly diagnosed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it might not be out of place at this time to make a few observations relative to the conditions that now confront the American farmer. America and the entire European Continent is calling upon him for more food, and yet the conditions under which he toils do not improve. The farmers are unable to get labor at any reasonable figure and often can not employ sufficient labor at any price. This is due to the fact that during the war the call and demand for labor in the shipbuilding and manufacturing centers took from the farm all the labor that was left after the boys went to the Army. The boys have returned from the Army, but the call of the city with high wages has left but few of them on the farm.

While obtaining increased prices for his products, yet the farmer is having to pay unheard-of prices for the things he must buy. This is especially true of his farm machinery and equipment required for his business.

In 1914 when the World War broke out the cotton farmers of my State suffered a tremendous loss because of the effect of the blockade of cotton to Germany and Austria, but, on the other hand, the things the farmers were required to buy commenced to rise in price and have been going up ever since until we are wondering where it will stop. Many farmers and merchants were ruined financially as a result of the embargo of 1914, and never recovered from the effects of the low price of cotton.

Cotton has recently reached a high price, but it has been slowly following the manufactured products up the scale. The farmers' products, as a rule, never start up at the same time as the manufactured articles, and, in my judgment, the products of the farm will be the first to be hit in the process of curtailing the cost of living, unless the farmers are aided in their methods of marketing.

Legislation that would be fair to the manufacturer in reducing the high cost of living would not be fair to the farmers.

The manufacturer can put on the market whatever quantity of the product of his factory he desires. He can increase the quantity in a given period of time or decrease the same as the exigencies may require; but the farmer can not control the amount of his crops. There is a Higher Power that controls the sunshine and the rains so necessary to a good crop. He may plant large acreage expecting a large yield and may have an entire failure.

It is therefore imperative that in legislating for the welfare of the farmers we keep this fact before our minds.

Some considerable feeling has grown up in the cities against the farmers of the country on account of the enormous increase in the cost of living. This is not justified, because there is too great a difference between the prices received by the farmer and the prices paid by the consumer. The wrong lies between the two. In many places the profiteers have been taking toll. To find the profiteers seems to be a difficult job. One is reminded of that game played in the days of his youth, "Button, button, who has the button?"

One thing is certain, however, and that is, these pirates will not get their just dues until they are brought to justice and have to wear trousers with large stripes running around, instead of narrow stripes running up and down.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of putting into effect every sane method that will reduce the cost of living, but I am not in favor of 5-cent cotton and 50-cent wheat to get it.

There is an abnormal demand for food, clothing, and the necessaries of life throughout the entire world. It could not be otherwise when we contemplate the immense loss and destruction of supplies during the war and the employment of millions of men in destroying lives and property for four long years. The demand grows greater every day upon the United States, and far exceeds the financial ability of many of the countries, and unless the peoples of continental Europe can get started to creating something with which to trade, the shipment of the products of the farmer will be greatly curtailed and a break in prices will result. This must be avoided.

Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of this Congress to give to the farmers of the country all possible assistance in their efforts to meet the demands being made upon them both at home and abroad, and for that reason I think the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] should prevail.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the question involved here is not whether we are for or against the American farmer. It is presumed that we are all for him. The question is, Shall we carry on the pay roll the 143 agents now engaged in looking after this work in some 2,900 counties of the United States? When this work was first started it was necessary for the Government to send Federal agents throughout the country not only to teach the farmer how to use this virus but to teach the veterinary surgeons over the country how to administer it. I say to you now that the veterinary surgeons have learned how to use it, and the farmers have learned how to administer it. They have learned its preventive uses, and we have incorporated in this bill enough money to insure the virus that is administered. We have not affected that. The Government still guarantees to the hog raisers of the country that the virus which is given will be pure, but we are not willing to carry on the pay roll a lot of paid experts who are traveling, as has been shown, over 2,000,000 miles each year to teach a few farmers how to give this serum. There are 2,900 counties in the United States, and it is utterly impossible for 143 paid experts of the Government to cover that territory. If there are counties where this work has not advanced, where the farmers do not know how to administer it, where the local veterinary surgeons are not onto their jobs, there is still left in this bill $292,000 to carry on that work. One hundred and eighty-eight thousand dollars is provided by the bill for Government inspection of serum, and $29,520 guarantees that the research work will be continued. We have left in the bill $292,000, which, in my judgment, is just $292,000 more than ought to be kept in it, which can be used for the purpose of sending these 143 men throughout the length and breadth of this land in order to tell the farmers and veterinary surgeons something they now know or ought to know. The average American farmer—it is true in Indiana—would by far rather have his local veterinary surgeon come to his farm when there is a threatened outbreak of hog cholera and tell him how to administer serum, segregate the hogs, and apply the remedies than any so-called Government expert. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, on this side we are considerably ahead in point of time of the gentleman from Iowa, because he is only yielding three minutes, where we are yielding five minutes to each man.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from Missouri has used 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Iowa 14 minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I greatly regret that the quality of the Missouri hog has been called into question. I want to resent the imputation that the Missouri hog is in the habit of stropping himself against a sassafras sapling; it is a mistake. The Missouri hog is a hog with hams and history. Only the other day in my district we sold a Poland China hog for $10,200. I believe if some of my friends who are opposed to this appropriation were to enjoy a real Missouri country-cured ham, brown as a berry, and with a never-to-be-forgotten flavor and aroma, instead of "the embalmed hind leg of a dead hog," that they would be strongly for this proposition.

May I say, in all seriousness, that I believe I speak for the farmers of my State, a State ranking third in hog production, when I say that we are strongly in favor of a liberal appropriation for this work. I say this because our people have repeatedly, through resolutions, gone on record to this effect. In the Missouri farmers' week meeting helding at Columbia, Mo., the seat of the Missouri College of Agriculture, the swine men of the State in convention assembled have asked that a liberal appropriation be made. Therefore, I believe I speak with authority.

I am sure that all of us want to know the truth as to the value of hog cholera control work. May I cite one instance in my own experience? As a boy, I remember on the home farm where out of a herd of 135 head of hogs we burned 110 head that died of hog cholera. And may I say to you that on this same farm to-day, with the simultaneous treatment constantly in use, we have not lost a hog from cholera in five years. There is absolutely no doubt as to the value of this as a preventive measure.

You people from the city are interested quite as much as those of us from the country. It means that to increase the meat supply——

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. I will.

Mr. TINCHER. Do I understand that for five years on this particular farm the simultaneous treatment has been in use and has kept the hogs free from cholera?

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. You have known about this treatment in Missouri for five years and there is one farm where you have kept it absolutely free from cholera by the use of this treatment for the last five years?

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. TINCHER. Would it be necessary to send a Government expert to that neighborhood?

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. I may say this in reply, that unfortunately it is disease and not health which is contagious. I am interested almost as much in whether my neighbor across the fence keeps his farm clean and keeps cholera off the farm as I am in conditions at home, because when he does not it spreads throughout the entire district. If every man realized the importance of this remedy, it would be a different proposition; but, unfortunately, scattered all over our country, are men who do not appreciate the importance of the treatment and who will not carry out the regulations of burning the hogs that have died of cholera.

So the disease may spread all over the country. Therefore I believe it is absolutely necessary that we continue this appropriation. I am in favor of economy. I will help you strike from this appropriation bill a lot of useless employees, and I know that they are there. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything about this appropriation until a question was asked and answered by a member of the committee on the other side. The question was, "Is there a serum for hog cholera"—or whatever you call it—"the same as for diphtheria in the human animal?" And the reply came, "There is." Now, if that is correct, and I believe it to be correct, it seems to me that there is no use for any traveling inspectors in this department; and I am not speaking disrespectfully of the men in the public service. What you want to police, and police vigilantly, is the people who manufacture this serum, and impose a severe penalty upon any man who manufactures a spurious article. When that is done we have done all that we have done for the human animal.

In almost every county in the United States, especially in the agricultural portions, there is a farm agent who advises on all manner of things. In my county of Vermilion, with 90,000 to 100,000 people, I think we have at least 15, and I am not sure but more, veterinarians, and more than that if you count those who doctor the dogs and those who doctor the chickens. But I am referring to veterinarians, who are accomplished gentlemen all around and can treat most anything except the human animal. My county and my district are about two-thirds agricultural, and the other third is engaged in other callings, like manufacturing, and so forth. I think there is more good agricultural land in the district that I represent than any other district in the United States. I want to vote everything that is necessary to vote to aid the farmer in his industry, but I do not want to burden him with an unnecessary appropriation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this discussion and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] illustrate how difficult it is to separate a patriot from the public pay roll. Gentlemen talk about legislation and appropriations for the farmer when what they mean and what they have in mind is the farming of the farmer through the employment of "deserving Democrats." No farmer's interest, no public interest anywhere, will be affected injuriously by the separation from the public crib of a large number of the gentlemen who are now going about nursing the farmers' hogs and showing the farmers how to shoot serum into a hog's hind leg. I have so high a regard for the American farmer that I sympathize with him when a dapper gentleman, fresh from the country precincts of Chicago or New York, or some other metropolitan city, comes out to tell him how to vaccinate his hogs. We have been vaccinating calves for the black leg for many, many years, but we never thought it necessary to send out divers and sundry gentlemen throughout the country to tell the American stockmen how to apply the serum to a calf's leg.

I live among farmers. I represent farmers; I represent a State that is quite as distinctly farming in the way of stock raising as any State in the Union, and I have had continual complaints from my constituents of the seeming overanxiety of the agents of the Agricultural Department relative to their affairs. And they ask to be relieved from the pestiferous annoyances of superfluous agents of the Agricultural Department, who pretend to know more about their business than they do themselves.

We believe in the county agent. We have him in every county in our State. We believe in the activities of the Agricultural Department when and so far as they are directed actually in the interest of the farmer. But the idea that we must spend $300,000 of the people's money, largely contributed by the farmer, for the purpose of sending men hither and yon to vaccinate the farmers' hogs, is a proposition that is too ridiculous for serious discussion. You can not vaccinate all the hogs of all the people in the country for $290,000. And if you are not to vaccinate them all, why vaccinate them in a few favorite sections here and there? It has been well and proper to make appropriations to convey to the farmer information as to the proper way to use these serums and these vaccines, but the idea that we are to wet-nurse the farmers' hogs, and that for all time to come we are to furnish veterinarians to care for the farmers' stock, strikes me as a very extraordinary doctrine to come from the rock-ribbed Democratic State of Texas.

What has become of your democracy, gentlemen? What has become of your idea that people should be left to carry on their business in their own way, uninterfered with by the Federal Government, with only such aid and assistance as we all admit they should have? Do you gentlemen on the Democratic side now want the Federal Government to furnish you veterinarians to vaccinate all the hogs of the Southland? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of amusement to the speech just made by my friend, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and I am wondering what he is going to have to say when we reach that part of this bill where we are spending money to destroy wolves and coyotes, getting after the rabies in the West, and seeking to eradicate the predatory animals that destroy his live stock out there in Wyoming. Now, of course, if he does not want that done, we will be very glad to take it out of the bill. I am afraid, however, that he will object when we go to cutting down appropriations for the destruction of predatory animals.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. I can not yield now.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman——

Mr. RUBEY. I can not yield and I am not going to yield.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard a good deal about traveling. I want to take up some of these things and talk about them for just a little while. We have heard about the traveling expenses. I am wondering if my friends on the other side think that we can conduct experiments out here in the Agricultural Department and do any work of any kind that is worth anything by having to bring the hogs to Washington in order to have them treated and examined? They talk about traveling expenses. Let me give you one little illustration of that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It might be cheaper to bring them to Washington.

Mr. RUBEY. It would not be cheaper, and you would have a hard time doing it.

Just a day or two ago—and I want to say this is the first time I have taken up the question of hog cholera in my State recently—there was an outbreak of hog cholera in my district and I called on the department here and asked them to have a man from my State sent there.

They sent a telegram to Jefferson City, in my State, where the headquarters are, where they are cooperating with the State of Missouri, the Government inspectors with the State of Missouri officials, and they will probably send a man to Shannon County, in my State. Now, the way the railroads run it will be necessary for that man to travel at least 500 miles to go down into that territory and go into that district and set them right on the question of hog cholera. If by traveling 500 miles and spending a few days down there he can assist those farmers in stamping out the hog cholera in that one county and keeping it from spreading to all the counties around, he will be doing excellent work.

Mr. LAYTON. Have you no veterinarians there?

Mr. RUBEY. There may be veterinarians in some of the near-by towns, but—and in this I am sure the gentleman from Delaware, who is a physician, will agree—when I want a physician I want the very best I can get. When hogs in my district have cholera, I want a Government man who knows his business; I want the best veterinarian I can get.

Mr. LAYTON. You do not do that in a case of diphtheria?

Mr. RUBEY. Why, of course, I would; but I can not yield further. The difficulty is this: For a great many years in this country we had proposed all kinds of remedies for hog cholera all over the country. People did not believe in them. They were fake remedies, and the people of the country got so used to these fake remedies that it has been a very difficult matter to get them interested in the real sure-enough, efficient remedy offered by the Government. We have had to send out a great deal of propaganda. The Government has had to demonstrate beyond the peradventure of a doubt the fact that there is a remedy that will most certainly prevent hog cholera.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] spoke a moment ago about the work in his State. Now, there happen to be just three other States in the Union that raise less hogs than Connecticut, and yet a few days ago in conversation with one of the farm demonstrators from Connecticut I asked him particularly about the hog-cholera work, and he said it was fine work and satisfactory in every particular. We can all of us remember what the situation was 10 or 15 years ago.

I remember going out onto a farm and visiting with one of the patrons of my bank, who had a big, fine farm. It was in the fall. He had gathered his corn, and he had turned his hogs into the cornfield. As we walked down through that cornfield there was an old dead tree standing there, and by the side of that tree there were two dead hogs—great big, 200-pound, fine hogs. My friend's face was full of anguish as he looked at those hogs, and then he glanced up at the tree, and he saw there where the lightning had struck the tree. It showed beyond question that those hogs had been killed by that stroke of lightning in the storm that occurred the night before. I never saw a man look happier than did my friend when he found that out. He said, "My God! I thought my hogs had the cholera."

What did it mean to him? It meant the loss of practically every hog on his farm, because in those days they had no way of treating it, and when the cholera got on a farm it simply took every hog on the farm before it quit. Then, as a rule, after the farmer got cleaned up he would not go into the business again for two or three years, because he was afraid of the hog cholera. And here, when we are trying to do something to reduce the high cost of living, when we are trying to increase production, our friends say it is time to stop this work on the hog cholera.

We began this work in 1912. There was an appropriation made in that year of $75,000. Previous to that time there had been a great deal of investigation and experiments by the Government. Away back yonder in 1878 the first appropriation was made for work of this kind, $10,000. Along about 1885 the department discovered what was then thought to be the cause of hog cholera. In 1897 a serum was discovered which was thought to be effective, but further demonstration caused it to be abandoned. It was not until in 1903 and 1904 that the true nature of hog cholera was discovered, and it was not until in 1905 and in 1906 that an effective remedy was finally discovered. In 1912, six years later, Congress took up the work and appropriated the money that has enabled the department to demonstrate beyond doubt the efficiency of the remedy.

Let me tell you something further. So effective was that work, and so strongly did it impress the farmers and the hog raisers of the country, that they came before us in 1913, backed up by the Secretary of Agriculture, asking us to make a great, large appropriation. We made an appropriation, a lump-sum appropriation of $500,000, for the purpose of helping to stamp out the hog cholera, and that enabled the department to go into some of the hog-producing States of the Union, select certain counties, and make a thorough test of the effectiveness of the remedy. The work is now being done largely in cooperation with States. We have got an organization in Missouri and in a great many other States; they go into the communities where there is hog cholera——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RUBEY. A brief question.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What proportion of the 2,900 counties in the country have had the benefit of the service and advice of these experts?

Mr. RUBEY. I expect over 2,000.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If they rendered good service in those counties where they have been operating, as I understand gentlemen favoring a reduction of this appropriation admit, why is it not sensible to have these experts go into the other counties where they have not operated, instead of reducing the force?

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman is correct. If it is a good thing for the counties and States where it has been tried, it is a good thing for all the counties and States where hogs are raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] will be voted down and that my amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] will not be agreed to.

The Committee on Agriculture gave a great deal of consideration to this item, and the amount recommended—$510,000—is, in the opinion of a large majority of the committee, sufficient, even liberal, for the work the department should carry on.

I wish to give the committee an idea of how appropriations for this particular work have grown during recent years. If you will pay attention you will see how they were increased during the war, when there was a strenuous effort to increase production and prevent waste of food. The demand now for retention of war-time appropriations, and, in some cases, for large increases, is principally for the purpose of retaining the immense force which the department brought in and attached to the pay rolls during the war.

In 1916 the appropriation was $235,000.

In 1917 the appropriation was $360,000.

In 1918, $413,000.

In 1919, $446,000.

In 1920, the year that is now running, the appropriation was $641,000, an increase over the preceding year of nearly $200,000. This year they wish a further increase, and ask for $658,000.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. And out of that $658,000 the sum of $621,000 is for salaries and traveling expenses.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have not made the exact calculation. Now, I believe the work the department has been doing is in the main a very good work, indeed. It is directed and carried on by capable men, devoted to their work. One good thing they have done is to arouse interest in the work throughout the country.

That has been done promptly and well. As one of the gentlemen here has said, 33 States have already enacted legislation and signified their willingness to engage in the work under the lead of the bureau. That much has been done, and I am one of those who believe that the work should now and always be done largely by the States. The people have been aroused to their duty and to the protection of their own interest; now let them go on in the way they have started. The bureau is and will be able to advise and assist, but it should not be asked, or if asked should not, in my opinion, be permitted, to do all the work. Something has been said about outbreaks of hog cholera, and gentlemen have pointed to the decreased percentage of loss since this work was undertaken by the bureau. An outbreak comes one year and then another. No one can tell the cause nor when an outbreak will come, and the percentage of loss depends largely on the extent and severity of the outbreak. I do not deny that the work of the department will enable those who are raising hogs to guard against serious loss; certainly the loss will not be as great as it would be if the treatment were not administered. There is no known cure for hog cholera. The serum is used simply and entirely as a preventive. If the outbreak is serious and of wide extent, there will be a larger percentage of loss than in a year when the outbreak is slight or confined to a limited area. The mere statement or the mere record of the fact that the number of hogs lost or the percentage of loss is less in one year than in another year does not prove much.

One serious trouble encountered only a few years ago, which called for new work and the outlay of a large amount of money, was that it was difficult and almost impossible for anyone to secure a pure and effective serum. There were a large number of manufacturing concerns in the country engaged in making it, but to speak plainly it was not made on the square, and much of it, far from doing good, actually did harm when used. So a law was enacted in March, 1913, providing for inspection of these factories, and the work of inspection has been carried on diligently and with good effect.

This year, out of the $510,000 we propose that $188,000 shall be used for the inspection of serum factories. That work is necessary and must be done. The committee were not disposed to cut down that amount; in fact, I believe it was increased some $30,000, including transfers to the statutory roll of $5,280. We do not begrudge money for any necessary work.

Now, you have noticed by the figures I have given you that this work was largely increased during the war. We heard the appeal and yielded to the pressure, very properly, I believe, for large increases of appropriations to bring about increased production and the conservation of foodstuffs. In almost every bureau and branch of the Department of Agriculture there was a large increase of money to provide for these larger activities. The result was that good work was accomplished. It has my hearty approval, but the war is over and thousands of those who were taken into the Department in one line and another on account of war activities remain. Many of them should go. The Government does not need them. We must get back to normal times and carry on the work of the department in a normal way, supplying needed money, refusing to take on new work, and extending old lines of work only where absolutely necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TILSON: Strike out of the Rubey amendment the figures "$585,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$410,000."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TILSON) there were—ayes 62, noes 68.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the vote is close. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. TILSON and Mr. RUBEY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 77.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. RUBEY) there were—ayes 83, noes 52.

Accordingly the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for general expenses, $3,778,266.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of calling attention to a communication I have received from my friend Hon. Sam K. Hughes, a farmer and a very keen observer of events in Butler County, Ohio, regarding the sale of what is said to be the largest hog ever sold, I believe, in any market. It was sold by George J. Seeman, of Butler County, Ohio, its owner and breeder, and when sold at the age of 3 years weighed 1,280 pounds. This hog was of the big Poland China breed, originated by David Magie, of Butler County, Ohio. This animal has been thought to be of such importance by those interested in the breeding and raising of hogs that it has been photographed and reproduced in moving pictures and described in many newspapers. It is said to stand to-day as the record achievement of hog raisers, and hundreds of people from far and near have called at the Seeman farm to see this monarch of its kind.

Mr. LAYTON. How old was that hog?

Mr. GARD. Three years old.

Mr. BLANTON. How much did the hog bring?

Mr. GARD. I have not the price, but prices are very large for breeding animals, some, I am informed, selling for as much as $3,500 for one hog.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes, gladly.

Mr. CANDLER. I congratulate the gentleman upon this magnificent hog raised in Ohio. In Lowndes County, Miss., many years ago there was a hog raised by a gentleman by the name of Sim Orr, which, according to my recollection, surpassed in weight the hog raised in Ohio, but just the exact weight I am not able to say. Therefore I will not attempt to state the exact weight for the RECORD. Mr. Orr not only raised the largest hog known of up to that date but also raised the largest steer. He was some stock raiser in his day.

Mr. GARD. Possibly the Mississippi hog was saturated with Tombigbee water. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. He was raised near the Tombigbee, it is true, in the great county of Lowndes, and that is the reason he grew so large. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Plant Industry: One physiologist and pathologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 assistant to the chief, $3,000; 1 executive assistant in seed distribution, $2,500; 1 officer in charge of publications, $2,250; 1 landscape gardener, $1,800; 1 officer in charge of records, $2,250; 1 executive clerk, $2,000; 4 executive clerks, at $1,980 each; 1 seed inspector, $1,000; 1 seed warehouseman, $1,400; 1 seed warehouseman, $1,000; 12 clerks, class 4; 17 clerks, class 3; 5 clerks, at $1,500 each; 28 clerks, class 2; 3 clerks, at $1,320 each; 86 clerks, class 1; 2 clerks or draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 2 clerks, at $1,100 each; 5 clerks, at $1,080 each; 7 clerks, at $1,020 each; 30 clerks, at $1,000 each; 43 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk or draftsman, $900; 11 clerks, at $840 each; 1 laborer, $780; 44 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 8 messengers or laborers, at $660 each; 17 messengers or laborers, at $600 each; 1 artist, $1,620; 1 clerk or artist, $1,400; 2 clerks or artists, at $1,200 each; 2 laboratory aids, at $1,440 each; 1 laboratory aid, $1,380; 4 laboratory aids or clerks, at $1,200 each; 1 laboratory aid, clerk, or skilled laborer, $1,080; 3 laboratory aids, clerks, or skilled laborers, at $1,020 each; 2 laboratory aids, at $960 each; 2 laboratory aids, at $900 each; 6 laboratory aids, at $840 each; 7 laboratory aids, at $720 each; 1 map tracer or laboratory aid, $900; 2 gardeners, at $1,440 each; 4 gardeners, at $1,200 each; 8 gardeners, at $1,100 each; 15 gardeners, at $900 each; 19 gardeners, at $780 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,100; 1 skilled laborer, $960; 2 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 3 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 1 assistant in technology, $1,400; 1 assistant in technology, $1,380; 1 general mechanic, $1,400; 1 mechanician, $1,080; 1 mechanical assistant, $1,400; 1 mechanical assistant, $1,200; 1 carpenter, $900; 1 painter, $900; 1 teamster, $840; 21 messengers or laborers, at $540 each; 29 messengers or laborers, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $660 each; 14 messenger boys, at $600 each; 10 messenger boys, at $480 each; 5 messenger boys, at $420 each; 16 messenger boys, at $360 each; 4 charwomen, at $480 each; 21 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $526,960.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 20, after the sum "$780," strike out "forty-four" and insert "four"; in line 21 strike out "eight" and insert "one," and also strike out "seventeen" and insert "two."

And, on page 20, line 15, after the sum "$840," strike out "twenty-one" and insert "five"; in line 16 strike out "twenty-nine" and insert "five"; in line 17 strike out "three" and insert "one"; in line 18 strike out "fourteen" and insert "one," and also strike out "ten" and insert "one"; in line 19 strike out "five" and insert "one"; and in line 20 strike out "sixteen" and insert "one," so that the number of messengers allowed the Plant Industry Office be reduced from 167 to 22, the department having 576 other messengers provided for in this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order as to the form of the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, to whom we must always go for definite, final information, I ask leave to modify my amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The explanatory part is no part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. That was for the benefit of those men who come in and are going to vote and do not know what they are voting on. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 19, line 20, after the sum "$780," strike out "forty-four" and insert "four"; in line 21, strike out "eight" and insert "one," and also strike out "seventeen" and insert "two"; and on page 20, line 15, after the sum "$840," strike out "twenty-one" and insert "five"; in line 16, strike out "twenty-nine" and insert "five"; in line 17, strike out "three" and insert "one"; in line 18, strike out "fourteen" and insert "one," and also strike out "ten" and insert "one"; in line 19, strike out "five" and insert "one"; and in line 20, strike out "sixteen" and insert "one."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield? I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield. This is more important than any parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Chairman, for 24 hours I have been worrying about this wasteful messenger service provided in this bill for this department. Here the committee has provided for this Department of Agriculture 743 messengers. Oh, the gentleman says that they are called messengers but they do something else, that they may do some clerical service. If these 743 messengers do any clerical service, then we ought to cut down the clerical force elsewhere in the bill, because we provide much more than a plenty of clerical force outside of the messenger service. In this paragraph alone we provide 167 messengers for the Plant Industry office, it being merely one of the numerous bureaus in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield; I might hear some more about your "infamous league of nations" that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] was talking about the other day, concerning which I do not believe there is another man in the United States who will agree with him that the League of Nations is "damnable," as he said it was the other day. So much for that.

Mr. BAER. I will say that I agree with him.

Mr. KING. And I agree to it.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not think there were two other men of that kind in the House. But, getting back to my subject—743 messengers for the Department of Agriculture and 167 for the Plant Industry Bureau alone. Now, gentlemen, if you want to go to the country with that kind of a record for economy, why, let it stay in the bill, because we are going to meet you on the hustings before the people on this question of economy. And when we do meet you we will do a plenty to you.

My friends, I am asking you to cut down this useless, unnecessary number of 167 to 22. Is not 22 a plenty? Did you notice in this bill, on page 4, that for the Secretary's office alone this great committee on economy has allowed 1 lieutenant of the watch, 2 second lieutenants of the watch, and 73 extra watchmen for one office—the Secretary's office alone—76 watchmen for one little building. My God, what do they watch? [Laughter.] The Secretary's office is nothing in the world but that one red building. Why should you fill and surround it with 76 watchmen? Where do you put all of those 76 watchmen? They are all on big salaries, and in addition to their salary each one gets a bonus of $240, and each year their salary is increased under civil service. Are you going to let that stay? Then you talk about economy. This Republican lip economy of which we are hearing so much. You fellows ought to get in line with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. GOOD.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield. The gentleman from North Dakota has a way of getting before the people through cartoons. I can not draw cartoons.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is not the amendment divisible? It relates to different branches and sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the amendment referred to messengers provided in the paragraph which is devoted to salaries in the Bureau of Plant Industry. The Chair thinks that if the gentleman desires these specific items of the amendment to be voted on separately, he can secure that by a demand for a separate vote.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, when a Democratic Secretary of Agriculture——

Mr. BLANTON. From Iowa.

Mr. MONDELL. Recently from Texas, now from Iowa, and all of his bureau chiefs come before a committee of Congress and swear by all the gods and the great hornspoon that in their department and the bureaus over which they have supervision and with which they are familiar, whose operations are constantly under their observation, they must have a given number of clerks and assistants, messengers and watchmen, what is the committee going to do? It is no doubt true there are too many. Those of us who visit these departments believe there is an unnecessary number of clerks and probably an unnecessary number of messengers in many of them, but just how are you going to determine where to draw the line? How are we to determine to just what extent these Democratic Secretaries and heads of bureaus, I will not say prevaricating, but to what extent are they exaggerating, to what extent are they drawing the long bow, just how far are they trying to put it over Congress?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I regret I can not yield now. I can not tell, and as legislators, desirous of doing nothing to injure the public service, we must, in a great measure, take the word of these Democratic officials. To do otherwise would be to render ourselves subject to the charge of slashing estimates without regard to the interests and the needs of the public service. I suppose there is not anyone here who would feel particularly disturbed if our friends on the Democratic side want to reduce the number of these clerks and messengers. I imagine they can be reduced some without any very great harm to the public service. The committee has felt compelled, however, to place at least some credence in the statements of these officials, reiterated, emphasized, and insisted upon. They will swear that they can not spare a man and keep the Government service going, and what are you going to do about it? I do not think it would be a bad thing to do a little cutting all along the line, but the committee has felt that in the main it must sometimes yield its judgment to the reiterated demands of the responsible officials of the administration and at least give them the benefit of the doubt, when they declare that your Uncle Sam could not possibly attend to the affairs of the people if they had one less clerk or one less messenger.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of replying to one statement by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. During the consideration of this bill he comes upon this floor and talks about Democratic Secretaries and Democratic heads of departments, Democratic this and Democratic that. He is the one gentleman so far as I know who has tried to bring politics into this bill. Let me say that the gentlemen in the Department of Agriculture—I have the statistics here in my hand—practically all of the heads of the departments, have been there for years and years. They were there under Secretary Wilson when I came here, and they have been there ever since. Take one of them, for instance, Dr. Mohler. He is a most estimable gentleman, has been in the department many years, and is now head of the Bureau of Animal Industry. Dr. Mohler is a most efficient bureau chief. What his politics are I do not know and I do not care. We do not want politics in the Department of Agriculture. I resent the statement made by the majority leader in coming here and trying to inject politics into the Department of Agriculture. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Secretary of Agriculture is a Democrat and possibly his immediate assistants are, but the men who are charged with the details of the work are the chiefs of the respective bureaus. Dr. Mohler, and I use him only as an illustration, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, has charge of that bureau under the direction of the Secretary, and, of course, he is the man who is responsible for the work, and we all know it.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman think we would be justified in passing the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]?

Mr. RUBEY. No; most assuredly we would not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is properly subject to the lecture just delivered to him by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. What was the situation? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] on a number of occasions during the consideration of this bill has said, in effect, "We propose to go before the country and hold you Republicans responsible for making these provisions authorizing a lot of messengers in the Agricultural Department." The gentleman from Wyoming very properly replies that the request for these officials comes from a Democratic Cabinet officer. I do not see how anyone can make an issue before the country on the ground that the Republicans have not sufficiently reduced the employees under a Democratic official and give the credit to the Democratic official.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I not only want to be fair but I am fair.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman from Illinois did not quite accurately quote the majority leader.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not quote the majority leader at all.

Mr. RUBEY. He did not stop with the heads of the various departments, but he spoke of the bureau chiefs.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I never quote anyone on the floor of the House. I stated the substance of the contention here and stated it correctly. I do not blame the gentleman from Missouri for criticizing the majority leader, but at the same time he had no criticism whatever to make of his Democratic colleague for seeking to reduce the number of messengers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. According to the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and of the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], if a Democratic Cabinet officer should ask this Republican Congress for $1,997,000,000 with which to shoot skyrockets of communication to the planets in the skies, they, the Republican Congress, would have to supinely bow and give that much of the people's money to them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman is quite up to his usual standard in dissecting an argument. If a Democratic official made that request, however, and a Republican Congress granted the money, I fail to see where there would be any partisan issue before the people on the subject.

Mr. BLANTON. It would be a darn-fool issue.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If both parties agreed to it, what is the partisan issue? Now, I am inclined to agree very largely with some of the suggestions made by the gentleman from Texas. I have no doubt there are too many messengers in the Agricultural Department and in every other department of the Government. The Committee on Agriculture, however, can not, in the very nature of things, take up for consideration and carefully examine the need for each messenger in the department. The Committee on Agriculture has more important duties to perform than finding out what each one of the 700 messengers in the department is doing. Necessarily, they always have been and they always will be guided in the main by the estimates for the number of messengers. I do not criticize the committee for bringing in recommendations which of themselves do reduce to some extent the number of messengers in the department. I am inclined to think it would not hurt anybody in the end if we very materially reduced the number of messengers, who are now so thick that they fall over each other in every department. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out something else.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion will not be in order, the Chair will state; there is an amendment pending.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Were all the pro forma amendments withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment has not been withdrawn.

Mr. RUBEY. I will withdraw mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his pro forma amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will renew that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] is right in saying there is little if any politics in the Department of Agriculture. I remember some 10 years ago, when the distinguished gentleman, James Wilson, was Secretary, he paid the Committee on Agriculture the honor of a visit. We talked with him of the manner in which officials and employees of his department were selected. There had been a suggestion that politics or partisanship had some influence in such matters. I remember very well when he said, "There are 9,000 employees in the Department of Agriculture and I do not know the politics of nine of them." I believe he spoke with entire truthfulness. A few years ago, after the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Houston, became Secretary, he, too, came to see us one day, when a matter of the same import was brought before the committee. He remarked about it. Secretary Wilson's remark was quoted to him, and he said, "I can go him several better; there are 20,000 employees in this department"—now, mark the increase, and see how the number has grown and judge whether or not the committee has been unfair or niggardly in recommending appropriations—he said, "I have 20,000 employees, and of all of them I know the politics of only myself and my private secretary." I believe he, too, spoke with entire truth and candor. So I think the gentleman from Missouri is right in saying that there is little politics; but there are too many employees. [Applause.] Why does the bill still provide for too many? Because the Committee on Agriculture was unable to get assistance or suggestions from the heads of bureaus as to where cuts could properly be made in the bill, cuts that the majority of the committee said were necessary. The majority of the committee told department bureau heads that there was no disposition on the part of the committee to embarrass or hinder any necessary feature or portion of the work.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There was one exception; the Chief of the Forest Service, at our urgent request, named items and appropriations which might, if necessary, be changed or reduced without injury or embarrassment to the service. As to appropriations and estimates of other bureaus, the committee found it necessary to take testimony and otherwise to get all available information and in the end use its best judgment. We made many cuts, necessarily, Mr. Chairman, mostly in the lump sums. Cuts or changes of lump sums do not affect the men and women employees on the statutory rolls, the rolls which the gentleman from Texas is criticizing so severely. On the statutory rolls provision is made, we all believe, for the employment of larger numbers than are necessary for properly carrying on the work. We could not eliminate the excess; we could not tell which clerk, which watchman, which messenger should be refused, and we received no suggestion from any one connected with the department as to which of them could be eliminated.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman mean to say that the chiefs of bureaus refused the request of the committee that they should suggest as to where savings could be made?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think I am entirely right in saying that except as to the Chief of the Forest Service, the gentlemen who came before us were unwilling, did not wish to listen to our suggestions that their estimates could not be approved. We talked to them about economy. They were deaf to our suggestions as to where savings could be made.

And another thing that makes the number of employees in that department larger than it ought to be is that every one of them is under civil service, and time after time the heads of the bureaus, in answer to inquiries, have told us that there are clerks and other employees on the rolls who are incompetent. We asked why incompetents are not dismissed, and the answer was that they are under the civil service; that if one is to be gotten rid of there must be charges and a trial, so the bureau hesitates; and that is one of the reasons they do not proceed against anyone. Read it in the testimony; you will see it. We have heard it year after year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe anyone here wants to embarrass the Department of Agriculture, but I do not believe any person here can excuse the failure of the bureau chiefs in the Agricultural Department or any other department in their refusal to assist a congressional committee in the performance of its work. We are presumably here to represent the American people in every activity of the Government, and we ought to be impartial in whatever we have to do. We are the arbiters between the bureau chiefs and the people who pay the taxes, and I think that it will be admitted by every man here that if there ever was a time when we should pare to the bone that time is now. It is conceded by every impartial observer that in all the branches of the Government service in the District of Columbia we have more than 40,000 people who are not needed, but you can not get the cooperation of any man in the Government service to eliminate them from the pay roll. It is not very long since we appropriated money with which to pay the fare of a lot of people who were not needed in the service back to their homes, and even then we could not get rid of them, because we could not get the cooperation of the departmental branches of the Government, and it may be that to eliminate many employees who are no longer needed as a war necessity we must blindly cut without respect as to whether we know what we are doing or not. [Applause.] The time has come when we must even do that and take a chance. [Applause.] For it must be understood that these people are not to be permitted to remain here in times of peace at the expense of the American people, who are already overburdened with taxation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I see that it struck the gentleman, as it struck me, that it is a most astounding condition that is revealed by what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] said, that the bureau chiefs utterly refused to assist the committees in deciding where cuts should be made. Does not the gentleman think that under such circumstances the committee would have been well justified in failing to appropriate a portion of these gentlemen's salaries until they would assist the committee?

Mr. MADDEN. I certainly do. And I am perfectly willing to enter upon a campaign now to assist in the elimination of every unnecessary employee.

Mr. BLANTON. Then vote for my amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I will. I intend to vote for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to yield now.

I believe we have an obligation imposed upon us that the American people expect us to live up to, and that obligation is to bring back these departments to the period of peace. [Applause.] We must realize that the war is over, and I think we do, but we must do more than realize it. We must force these people in the administrative branch of the Government to realize it. We had about 30,000 people on the pay roll in Washington when the war came on, and to-day we have 110,000. Does anyone believe that 110,000 clerks are needed here in these days of peace? Not at all.

And every day, in every mail I receive, letters come telling me of the burdens that the people are carrying and wishing to know what we are doing to give them relief. Are we to be hamstrung here by the bureau chiefs? Are they to be permitted to say to the American people that "Only through us can you reduce the expenses of the Government"? We all realize that we have already $3,000,000,000 of a deficit and $6,000,000,000 of estimated expenses for 1921, with $5,300,000,000 of receipts estimated, when you take out what will not be collected. There is $5,300,000,000 of revenue to pay $9,000,000,000 of estimated expenses for 1921. Do you want to issue bonds? Do you think the people will buy them? Do you think anyone will justify action looking to that end? Are we to economize in fact or are we not? That is the issue. Now is the time to begin the work of economy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the vote should have been on the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stands corrected. The vote is on the pro forma amendment striking out the last three words.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

I believe there is some misconception of the statement that all the chiefs of the bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, except the Chief of the Forest Service, refused to give information or to cooperate with the committee. What was done, and I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] will bear me out, was this: We suggested to the Chief of the Forest Service that he suggest what cuts could be made in the bill without injuring his service. He assisted us by making certain suggestions.

It was suggested to a representative of the department that he might indicate what cuts could best be made in the bill. He indicated that he would like to accommodate the committee, but I inferred that it would be embarrassing to him to suggest a cut in one bureau and not in another, or to suggest a cut in an item the needs of which he had been contending for. I can appreciate this, and I do not believe that the gentlemen who have spoken will contend that there should be any adverse criticism against the department for that.

I believe I voice the sentiment of every member of the committee when I say that every bureau chief is a man of integrity, of character, and of standing, endeavoring to perform his duty with fidelity, and is dominated with the noblest and loftiest ideals. Gentlemen, they are enthusiastic over their work, and if they were not they would not be worth even a part of the salary paid to them. They feel it their duty to go before the committee and ask for large appropriations. If they did not do that, they feel that they would not be doing their work justice. The committee must pass on their statements. The committee has been working night and day in the committee room, so we can not do as suggested—go to the departments to find out how many messengers they must employ and how many they need. We must take their word for it. They are men of integrity.

The result of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas would be to do this: It would strike off the employees at low salaries. The department would put others on the pay roll at an increase, possibly at three or four hundred dollars more a month, for they must have the help. That is what it would do. It would increase their salaries. As has been said here, many of the employees termed "messengers" do clerical work, receiving $700 or $800 in salary. Are we going to supplant them with clerks drawing salaries of $1,200 or $1,800? Or are we going to compel the scientists receiving $3,000 or $4,000 a year to perform the duties of messengers and clerks? Is it not necessary to have messengers in the departments? Why do we employ messengers here in the House? Why do not you gentlemen, drawing $7,500 a year, do the messenger work? If it is necessary for us to have messengers here in the House, is it not equally necessary to have them in the departments? There is as much need for them in the departments as in this House. We may have more messengers here than we ought to have, and I think they have more in the departments than they ought to have. We have cut the number—possibly in some instances we have cut more than we should have done. As has been stated, we worked in the dark and may have made mistakes. Because the bureau chiefs did not want to come before the committee and recommend cuts, I do not believe they should be so severely criticized for it.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a few words.

I desire to reenforce what the chairman of this committee has said with reference to the preparation of this bill as to these employees. So far as I am personally concerned, and so far as every member of that committee is concerned, we do not want a single man on that pay roll that is not doing service that is worth the money being paid to him.

Now, some of you are going wild. This is a great department of this Government, that presides over the destiny of the whole agricultural section of our Nation. And what does the bill carry? It carries $30,000,000.

Now, you are speaking about cuts. For the whole field of agriculture the total appropriation is $30,000,000. Compare it with the other departments, if you please.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman would not want to appropriate $100,000,000 if $25,000,000 would do, I am sure?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I say they are not doing that. We have cut it to the bone now, and have crippled the service. Take the great stockyard section that the gentleman represents. The meat inspection of the packing houses constitutes one of the great items on the pay rolls. The committee did recommend the increase of the salaries there over the estimates. That is not agriculture. That is meat inspection. When the House increased the list of the salaries you did not hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] kicking about that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman from Illinois does not represent the stockyards.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. He represents that section; he represents that State—a part of that State. He represents a part of that city and he is a citizen of that city.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. No; I can not yield. I am not raising any controversy about it. Probably the gentleman who has risen is right about it. My friend JOHN RAINEY probably put it over. I am not raising any controversy about it. But that is not agriculture; yet it is charged up to agriculture. You talk about the Forest Service expending millions of dollars. That is not agriculture; yet it is charged up to this bill. Take from the field of agriculture the things that do not belong to it and you will see that we are spending less than $20,000,000 for agriculture.

Now, you are talking about cuts. You are talking about cutting out these employees. Where is there a man on the floor of this House—and I am talking to intelligent men—who would seriously favor that proposition? I know how my colleague [Mr. BLANTON] expects to use this in Texas. He is going to use the word "messengers." [Laughter.] He does not know a thing about it. [Laughter.] I will tell you the truth; but he does not know a thing about it. He is just going to play on that word "messenger." That is what he is going to do. It is just as well to be honest and frank about it. I believe in economy.

Let me tell you another thing. Let any man belonging to the committee say whether or not these men in the various bureaus, when they came before the committee, were not fair to us.

You will not find a single man that sidestepped. I will tell you what we did do. When we asked them, "Considering the state of the Treasury, can you not cut this, that, or the other?" each one of those heads said, "We know the state of the Treasury. Here is a great work before you. It is our duty to lay it before you. We can not tell you where to cut out items without injury to the service." If you have men there presiding over those bureaus representing this great department, who do not deal with you squarely as a committee, and come before you and tell you what work is needed for the service of your constituents and mine, you would recommend that they be gotten rid of. I do not want a man there who is not earning something. I want him to render some adequate service for the salary he is getting. There may be too many of them. But count the pages here. Have you too many? Who is to say? Count the elevator men. Have you too many? Who is to say? Count the clerks in your offices. Have you too many? Who is to say? These men, the heads of these different bureaus in the department, are just as honorable as you and I are as representatives of the American people, and when they come before me, representing my people, as my people's agents, and tell me that they need this service, I give it to them. That is what the committee did. We should not attempt to fool anybody. [Applause.] The amendment should be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILSON: Pages 19 and 20: Page 19, line 19, strike out "four" and insert "three"; line 13, strike out "twelve" and insert "nine"; line 13, strike out "seventeen" and insert "fourteen"; line 13, strike out "five" and insert "four"; line 14, strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "twenty-five"; line 15, strike out "eighty-six" and insert "seventy-three"; line 16, strike out "five" and insert "four"; line 20, strike out "forty-four" and insert "forty-two"; line 21, strike out "seventeen" and insert "sixteen." Page 20, line 3, strike out "two" and insert "one"; line 4, strike out "six" and insert "four."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say at the outset that if this amendment is adopted it will restore the number of employees in the bureau to exactly the same number as were appropriated for in last year's bill and now carried in the current law. This committee heretofore has tried to reduce and has succeeded to some extent in reducing the amount carried in the bill last year and the number of employees wherever possible. Contrary to what has been done in most other cases, this particular item has been increased and the number of employees as well in a considerable number of instances.

This item in 1918 carried $418,000 plus; in 1919 it carried $440,000 plus; in 1920, the current law, it carries $491,000 plus, a jump of $50,000; and now in this bill there is another jump of over $35,000 in this one item.

If we ever intend to get back to normal, to anything like where we were before the war, it is necessary not only to not increase but to cut wherever possible.

Here is a case where, instead of cutting, we have enlarged the number considerably, amounting in the entire item to $35,000. I can not believe that it is necessary at this time to provide additional employees whose salaries amount to $35,000 a year over and above what were considered necessary to carry on the work of this department successfully during the current fiscal year. Therefore I have offered this amendment, which, if agreed to, will not cut off a single employee, but will restore the number to what the current law carries.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has stated, as I understand him, that he is willing to allow what were carried for the current year.

Mr. TILSON. I think that ought to be the limit.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well. If we agree upon that there will be no dispute. What has been done in this instance is simply to transfer certain employees from the lump-sum to the statutory roll and the lump sums reduced correspondingly; that is, reduced $36,880. In addition, one blacksmith at $1,200 has been dropped, so there is an actual decrease of $1,200, although an apparent increase of $35,680, due to the transfer of that amount from the lump sum. The employees so provided or transferred are the ones that your amendment proposes to strike out. There is no actual increase. If the amendment is adopted, as suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, there will be a decrease of $35,680.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I notice that the appropriations for the general expenses of this bureau this year are $2,529,000, and this bill reduces them to $2,272,000, a reduction of about $250,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. I can give the gentleman the figures.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have the exact figures before me. What I wanted to ask was whether this reduction in the general expenses, which is a reduction in the lump-sum appropriation, is made partly by transferring clerks now employed under the lump-sum appropriation to the statutory roll? Does that help to account for the increase in the statutory roll?

Mr. HAUGEN. Wherever a transfer is made to the statutory roll the lump-sum appropriation is reduced correspondingly, so one is an offset to the other. In this instance one roll, the lump-sum roll, is reduced $36,880 and another roll, the statutory roll, is increased $35,680. There is actually a decrease of $1,200.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then, you reduce the total of the lump-sum appropriation by about $250,000?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly. It is reduced by the amount added to the other roll.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And, of course, if a part of that reduction is by reducing it in the lump-sum item and then transferring the employees to the statutory roll, there is, in fact, no increase in the appropriations by this bill at all but, in fact, on the total a considerable reduction.

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly. Take, for instance, this bureau. The estimate for the bureau was $3,606,000. The committee cut the estimate $568,000. It has been stated that there are many decreases. As stated before, for the whole bill the bureau estimates were $41,953,483, which were cut more than $11,000,000. The department estimates were $37,528,102. The bill reported by the committee carries $30,540,034—a cut of $7,132,823 below the department estimate. The committee cut the appropriations for the current year $3,359,727. However, in various places in the bill there are transfers from the lump-sum appropriation to the statutoy roll, which appear to be an increase but actually are not. The transfers are submitted in accordance with provisions of law. In the instance to which the gentleman from Connecticut has referred we have simply transferred the employees from one roll to another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. One of the most disagreeable things in any business is what is known as laying off men. Evidently it is some one's duty here to know exactly what should be done in this regard, and it seems to me the thing to do is to establish another bureau to be known as the bureau of hiring and firing. Then we can find out all about it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Not hiring, but firing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 23, noes 57.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits, $80,935: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I speak in favor of this paragraph and regarding the conditions as I understand them in my district and what the investigation of plant diseases has accomplished.

Only those who live in the country, surrounded by trees, plant life, and flowers, can understand the meaning of this section. Perhaps no orchard in my district planted 30 years ago yields fruit to-day, but trees that have grown within 10 years and sprayed in accordance with the methods prescribed by the Department of Agriculture now produce fruit. So if we go into the gardens we find that each vegetable is attacked by some insect. The strawberry, the raspberry, and the asparagus have their enemies, and unless we used insecticides it would be impossible to have the vegetables and fruits that we now enjoy.

Take, for instance, the potato. Sixty years ago there was not a potato bug in the country, but to-day we could not raise a potato if it were not for the spraying process that is now used. The Bureau of Chemistry, through many experiments, has discovered a spray that will kill the insect but not destroy the vine.

It seems strange that the wild flowers are not attacked by insects. The wild rose is not troubled by any disease, but as soon as we cultivate it to please our imagination, then it is subject to disease and is ravished by insects; thus the bud never blooms. Unless we appropriate these large sums to protect the fruits and flowers that appeal to our taste and imagination, they will return to their wild and primitive state. The amount that has been expended for the perfection of insecticides and fungicides has helped very much to retain the fruits and flowers that have been artificially developed during the process of time. It seems to me it is not economy to fail to spend money when by disbursing it we increase our natural resources and provide for a more perfect state of civilization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in regard to the meaning of the words—

For the investigation of diseases of orchard and other small fruits, $80,935: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan.

I should like to know the meaning of the words "orchard and other small fruits."

Mr. HAUGEN. It means practically all fruits.

Mr. HERSMAN. You go on here and say:

Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; we set aside $8,000 for the pecan. It should not be necessary to put this in, but it is a new item and we carry it a second time.

Mr. HERSMAN. I think to clarify that we ought to add the word "nuts."

Mr. HAUGEN. We carry a number of items in the bill that take care of the nuts. We have made liberal appropriations for that.

Mr. HERSMAN. I wondered if it included in the words "other fruit" the nuts.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For soil-fertility investigations into organic causes of infertility and remedial measures, maintenance of productivity, properties and composition of soil humus, and the transformation and formation of soil humus by soil organisms, $45,060.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What was the cause of this increase?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is an increase of $10,000 which is to be used in meeting the increased demand for information on new fertilizer materials. The gentleman knows that the question of fertilizer is an important proposition at this time. An effort is being made to procure fertilizer material at a lower cost. There has been much complaint concerning the quality of the fertilizer sold. Some fertilizers have been put on the market which have tended to destroy the crops rather than aid them.

Mr. TILSON. How is the money used—for the employment of experts?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; of course, it takes experts to pass upon it. I presume they have messengers, too, which has been so much objected to.

Mr. TILSON. I am not so much interested about the messengers as I am in the men who are making the investigation. I want to find out what they are doing and whether they are accomplishing anything.

Mr. HAUGEN. In this instance a great deal has been accomplished in the two bureaus—in the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Bureau of Soils. They have done good work. In my opinion there is little work in the department that is as generally appreciated by the farmers as this work on fertilizers by the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Bureau of Soils. The two bureaus cooperate, because it is as necessary to study the plants as it is the soil.

The Clerk read as follows:

For acclimatization and adaptation investigations of cotton, corn, and other crops introduced from tropical regions, and for the improvement of cotton and other fiber plants by cultural methods, breeding, and selection, and for determining the feasibility of increasing the production of hard fibers outside of the continental United States, $86,410: Provided, That not less than $7,500 of this sum shall be set aside for experiments in cottonseed interbreeding.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The committee in the language on page 24, line 7, in the proviso, says "not less than $7,500 of this sum shall be set aside," and so forth. I think that is not a properly worded provision. "Not less than $7,500" would permit the entire amount of $86,410 to be used for the one purpose indicated. The bill was faulty in the same respect last year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bill last year said not less than $7,500 of this sum may be used.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The fault was in using the words "not less than $7,500." The intention was to limit the amount to be used to $7,500; the bureau was given the appropriation of just the amount of money it wished to use. But there being no limit it actually used $22,000 instead of $7,500. So the wording should be so changed as properly to express the wish of Congress. I move to amend on page 24, line 7, by striking out the words "not less than" and further along in the line strike out the word "shall" and put in the word "may."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 7, strike out the words "not less than," and in same line strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to accept any amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, but his amendment will not accomplish anything. The department having construed the language "not less than $7,500 may be used" will construe it again the same way. They have said that that did not limit it; that the appropriation was not limited to $7,500.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I happen to know something about this particular item. This station is in the county adjoining my home, a county in the district of my friend Mr. RAYBURN. I have been on the work. It is very important work, and the department will only use this sum and no more.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then let us say "not more than $7,500."

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The words "not less than" do not mean anything, because without any provision at all they can use the whole amount.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. All I am interested in is to have the work continued, because it is important.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection to the work being continued.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas is right, and this work has the hearty approval of the committee. Seven thousand five hundred dollars is the amount that the bureau wishes. I ask, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw my amendment and will support the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. JACOWAY. Under his amendment only the amount of $7,500 can be used.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "less," in line 7, and inserting the word "more," so that it will read that "not more than $7,500 of this sum shall be set aside." And I would then, if I had my way, strike out the words "shall be set aside" and insert the words "may be used."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment he has offered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend by striking out the word "less" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "more"; and by striking out the words "shall be set aside" and inserting the words "may be used."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 7, strike out the word "less" and insert in lieu thereof the word "more"; and in the same line strike out the words "shall be set aside" and insert in lieu thereof the words "may be used," so that as amended the line will read: "Provided, That not more than $7,500 of this sum may be used for experiments in cottonseed interbreeding."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production, and the study of cereal diseases, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $359,705: Provided, That $50,000 shall be set aside for the investigation and control of the diseases of wheat, oats, and barley known as black rust, leaf rust, and stripe rust: Provided also, That $147,200 shall be set aside for the location of and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which such rust spores originate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some inquiry of the chairman of the committee in respect to this. I am at a loss to understand why so much money is expended for the purpose of discovering barberry bushes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What is the necessity for this large appropriation of $147,000 to discover barberry bushes? I understand quite well the necessity for protecting wheat, if possible, against the black rust, and everyone else who has made any investigation into the matter understands that it has been demonstrated that the spores which start the rust collect on the leaves of the barberry bushes, and that they are the chief source of the black rust. That fact having been settled, however, so that there is no longer any question about it, and the barberry bush being a bush that is well known, that anyone can pick out after having once seen it, why should we now spend $147,000 to send experts out to find a bush that anybody could find?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And when every State is engaged in the destruction of the common barberry bush.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. As the gentleman from Illinois has stated, each State is engaged in the destruction of these bushes. I do not know how they could be destroyed anyway, except by direction of the State authorities. Why the States can not take care of the matter is a mystery to me.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have been appropriating large sums for demonstration and study here in Washington.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. Originally I think that was proper.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have now cut out the appropriations for that work, but provide here for the officials to go out into the country and destroy the barberry bush, so as to educate the people and encourage the destruction of it. As to the merits of the proposition there seems to be no question but that if we can destroy the barberry bush in this country we will eradicate the black rust, which would increase the yield of this country about one-half.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. HAUGEN. In Denmark, Sweden, and in every country that has tried it, that has proven to be true—that the yield increases. In the State of Iowa if it were not for the black rust our yield would have been, in a number of instances, twice what it has been.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is not a scientist of any note whatever who would claim that the destruction of the barberry bush would eliminate the black rust.

Mr. HAUGEN. I refer the gentleman to the scientists in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They will not agree to that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, they will. If the gentleman will refer to the hearings he will find that the officials acknowledge that. Whenever you eliminate the barberry bush you eliminate the black rust. Here we have a large country, which is altogether different from the European countries; it is generally understood that the spores are carried in the air sometimes as far as 200 miles or more.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, nobody knows that.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is generally believed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Nobody could establish such a proposition as that.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman does not believe it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether it can be done or not.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the experts say it can be done. It will carry as far as the wind will take it. It is the same as the spores of the dandelion.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand that in my own State, in one of the counties, first one man came there and then another and then another to look at some barberry bushes. The first one could not tell, and I suppose the second one could not, and the third could not, and so on until they had actually had seven men sent out there from somewhere, I do not know whether from Washington or not, to look at a few barberry bushes. Whether they finally destroyed them I do not know. But at all events it took seven men to find out whether they were barberry bushes. It is this kind of work by so-called experts that disgusts the farmer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to save time I am going to make the point of order, if the gentleman from Illinois does not. I make the point of order on the second proviso on page 25, lines 13, 14, and 15, beginning with "provided also." It is new legislation and is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the second proviso in the paragraph. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do. The act provides that there shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information—that is exactly what is proposed here—on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word, and to secure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds, and so forth. In my opinion there is authority for it.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Chair has any doubt about it, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the gentleman's contention you could appropriate any amount of money to expend it on any subject that has anything to do with agriculture, such as orchards, nuts, and various other things that grow. The general authorization provided for in the act is the general authorization that puts into life the various departments of the Government.

We had this very question up at the time the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] first offered an amendment to appropriate ten million three hundred and odd thousand dollars for the Department of Labor to carry on what is known as the United States Employment Service. I made the point of order against it, and it was stricken out. The Chair will remember that; and the gentleman contended at that time at length that under the general provisions of the statute creating the Department of Labor we had authority to appropriate this sum. Why, the matter was discussed at length, and the Chair held that the general authorization did not authorize this particular appropriation of $10,300,000 for the specific purposes named and sustained my point of order against it. Now, Congress has never provided any law for the location and destruction of barberry bushes. If there is a bush known as the barberry bush and it is proper to destroy that bush in order to keep the black rust from damaging wheat out in Iowa, what more has the Department of Agriculture to do than merely to tell the farmers over the country who raise wheat—in Iowa and elsewhere—to destroy their barberry bushes? The Department of Agriculture is not going to destroy them for them. Why, the bull nettle in my State interferes with the growing of lots of crops. The Department of Agriculture is not going down and destroy the bull nettle. It can tell the farmers how to destroy it on the farms and then they will do it. Our Government is not that paternalistic. I insist, Mr. Chairman, it is not a proper item to come under the general law creating this department, and that my point of order should be sustained and the people of this country saved this $137,000 thus sought to be wrongfully expended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment on the point of order. I reserved the point of order on this paragraph in the first instance. I do not think I should have made it, but I did want to get a little information in reference to it. The black-rust disease, or whatever it is, whatever you call it, attacks wheat in one State and moves from wheat to some other host. The common barberry is one of the main hosts that is known of the black-rust spores as they move from one plant to another. There are other plants, however, besides the barberry that are a host for black rust. But, on the point of order, there is, of course, no specific authority of law authorizing the Government either to pay for or locate or destroy the barberry bushes in private ownership. This goes to other vegetation. There is no limit under this. How far it may be necessary I do not know, but certainly the general act in reference to the Department of Agriculture to acquire and diffuse useful information can not be extended to the point of locating a particular plant and destroying it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to one thing in reference to this question. The Chair will note, in line 9, that the total appropriation under this paragraph is $359,705. He will note that no point of order, as I understand, was leveled at this item. Now, the $147,200 in the proviso is a portion of that total. Would not the proviso be merely a limitation of the total appropriation against which there is no point of order leveled, be merely a limitation of that $359,000, of which amount $147,000 would be set aside for the location of and destruction of barberry bushes? So, even if the point of order were sustained, it would not result in a saving of any of the appropriation. It would simply make the general appropriation remain as it is, which could be applied for some other purpose than the destruction of barberry bushes. This is simply a limitation upon a lump sum already appropriated in the first part of the paragraph, and being a limitation of the appropriation would not be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order against the proviso beginning with the word "Provided," in line 12, page 25, and ending with the word "originate," in line 15. This is a proviso that apportions a certain sum out of the total appropriation made for investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production and the study of cereal diseases, and so forth, for the purpose of locating and destroying barberry bushes and other vegetation. In the view of the Chair the organic law establishing the Department of Agriculture, to acquire and diffuse among the people useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants, and the further provision authorizing the employment of scientists, chemists, botanists, entomologists, and so forth, and fixing the annual salaries thereof, would not authorize the setting aside of a specific sum out of any appropriation for the purpose of locating and destroying bushes or other vegetation and paying for the same. It seems to the Chair that in order that that might properly be included in the general Agricultural bill, and in order that public funds might be utilized for that purpose, it would require a specific authority of law or some definite authorization in the general authority under which the department is established, that act being referred to as the organic act. The Chair is unable to find in the organic act or in the reference of the gentleman from Iowa any such authorization, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama rises to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we pass this item for the present and return to it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this item be passed temporarily, to be returned to later.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, not to carry with it the part stricken out on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the appropriation to which the point of order has been made goes out with the sustaining of the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] now desires unanimous consent to return to that part of the paragraph which still remains, later in the proceedings, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object to the request, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he is doing that for the purpose of undertaking to determine what amount should properly be deducted from the $359,000?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the purpose. It occurs to me, inasmuch as that proviso is out of order, the amount should be cut. But I am not prepared to state now whether that should be done or not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman that I was going to offer an amendment to eliminate $147,000, in view of the ruling of the Chair, but I am glad that you acquiesce in the purpose.

Mr. HAUGEN. It may be that the department has some money for this work of investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to temporarily passing this paragraph, to be returned to later? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the method of fruit growing, harvesting, and, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets, studies of the behavior of fruits during the processes of marketing and while in commercial storage, $110,200: Provided, That of this amount the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend $27,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of lands occupied by the department's experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., now maintained under contracts with the owners: And provided further, That the land purchased for the Fresno vineyard shall not exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $12,000 and for the Oakville vineyard not to exceed 20 acres at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the part of this paragraph embracing the first proviso, beginning on line 13 and ending on line 18; and I also make a point of order against the last proviso, beginning "And provided further," on line 18, and ending on line 22, the two embracing an appropriation of $27,000, my point of order being that same are not authorized by law and constitute new legislation.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman withhold the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from California wants to speak, I will do so.

Mr. BARBOUR. I want to speak on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are going to have an extended California argument——

Mr. BARBOUR. I think if the gentleman from Texas understood——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order for five minutes and let the California gentlemen use that time as they want.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HERSMAN. I would like to discuss it, but I will let my colleague discuss it first.

Mr. BARBOUR. I would like to state, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, and particularly to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who, I believe, is actuated by a desire to be fair, that this appropriation for the purchase of experimental vineyards in the State of California is absolutely necessary at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman believe that the United States Government ought to buy land out there and go into that kind of business?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to see the Government help the good people out there all it can, but to buy land and go into the vineyard business is something the Government ought not to do.

Mr. BARBOUR. I believe the Government should buy the land in this particular instance, and I think the gentleman from Texas will agree with me when I explain the situation that exists there. These experimental vineyards were started by the Federal Government in the year 1903. At that time the Anaheim disease and Phylloxera were destroying the vineyards of California. In four years' time practically 75 per cent of the vineyards in the Santa Clara Valley were absolutely wiped out of existence. At that time the vineyards throughout that section looked as though they had been swept by fire. This experimental work was started by certain large producers of wine grapes, who asked the Federal Government to come to their assistance in fighting these diseases. The Department of Agriculture then made arrangements with the owners of these vineyards to conduct these experimental stations on land that was furnished by them without expense to the Government.

The department entered into certain agreements by which the landowners furnished the land free of charge to the Government and did all of the necessary work under the direction of the department experts. At the end of each year the landowners submitted statements of account to the Department of Agriculture showing the actual expense for labor, stock, and implements, and for that expense alone they were reimbursed.

Those experimental stations have grown during the period of 17 years that they have been in operation, and to-day they contain the finest collection of viticultural plants known to exist in the world. That is true with respect to the station at Fresno, and I understand that it is true of the station at Oakville. These stations now contain 700 varieties of viticultural plants. And now, when prohibition has swept over the country and wiped out of existence the wine industry in the State of California, an industry that has been encouraged and fostered for years by the Federal Government, thousands of people in that State find their means of livelihood gone; so we are asking the Federal Government to make this small appropriation of $27,000 for the purchase of these lands.

As to the necessity of the purchase——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman speaks as if the work would be entirely discontinued if this appropriation were not made. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BARBOUR. I was going to address myself to that in a moment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We still allow $83,200 appropriation to carry on this work.

Mr. BARBOUR. Not for this purpose. The necessity for buying these vineyards is this: The wine industry has ceased to exist in the State of California. The owners of the wine-grape vineyards upon which this experimental work was being carried on under the direction of the Department of Agriculture are selling their lands. They have no further use for those lands. As long as they were engaged in the wine industry, and in the business of producing wine grapes and making wine, this arrangement with the department went on. Now that the industry is wiped out of existence these men are selling their lands. They are subdividing them into small tracts, selling them off, and going out of the wine business.

Such being the case, there is nobody with whom the department can now carry on these arrangements. The owners of the land, compelled to go out of business, are no longer interested. The Department of Agriculture has an option to purchase the Fresno experiment vineyard for $600 an acre. In this connection I will state that I have received telegrams and letters from the president of the California Associated Raisin Co., than whom there is no better judge of the value of vineyard lands in the State of California, stating to me that $600 per acre for this land is a most reasonable price.

Furthermore, I want to say that if the Government buys this land it is not putting its money in a hole. This is land that is worth every dollar of $600 per acre, and, if anything, more. It is land that can almost any day be sold for that price. There is necessity for this legislation at this time because it is essential that we do something for the growers of wine grapes. For instance, it is necessary that the growers either graft their vines with new varieties or find some other product into which they may manufacture their wine grapes. That is the urgent necessity for continuing these experiment stations at this time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I gather that this is simply an experimental farm operated by the Government in one particular industry?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; but it is a very important industry.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We have a Government experimental farm across the river that the Government has bought and is running.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Virginia think it is rather far away from Washington for the Secretary to carry on an experimental farm in California, nearly 3,000 miles away?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The Government is operating an experimental farm at Arlington for the benefit of the whole country. It could not operate the experimental farm at Arlington for the grape industry of California.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to the fact that we have an investment out there in California on this land already. It represents an experiment of a great many years, and if we lose this land or the use of this land we lose the plant along with it, and we lose not only the investment itself but the experience derived as the result of a long series of experiments. It is entirely false economy to make a point of order against this item, because thereby we shall lose an investment that we have already gotten, and we will have to make it over again, and it will take years to duplicate it.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government will not lose its plants. Those people will be so glad to have the Government continue to operate these experimental leases that they will not take away either the land or the plants, but will let the business be carried on as it has been during the past few years.

Mr. ANDERSON. The people who own this particular piece of land have gone out of business entirely and they have no further interest in the maintenance of this plant. The gentleman is entirely in error if he assumes that there is any economy in making a point of order against this item.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, coming from the State of Texas, I want to reenforce what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has said. The Committee on Agriculture gave extended hearings to this item. The last word in the grape industry has been learned at these two experimental plants.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the fact.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. If you destroy them you destroy the last word, as far as these experiments are concerned. Now, we have a condition in which these lands are being sold. The Government has them under lease. These years have been spent in demonstrating and experimenting, with the greatest and most useful development in the industry that has been accomplished anywhere in the known world, and it has all been done on these two plots of ground. It would be penny-wise and pound-foolish for any man to throw away these 15 or 18 years' experience to save a few dollars and bring about a great loss. I hope that the grape industry of the country will be taken care of. I know that we acted wisely when we provided as a committee to keep these two items in the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman has stated the case in a nutshell.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. After my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr YOUNG] has given us his views I ought to consider the matter settled and withdraw the point of order right now, because a few minutes ago he said that he knew all about the matter of the Department of Agriculture needing 743 high-salaried messengers and that I did not know a single thing on earth about it. Of course, under the circumstances, I ought to bow to such profound knowledge and withdraw the point of order, but I can go down into my friend's district in Texas and convince 99 per cent of his constituents that the gentleman does not know what he is talking about when he asserts that this department needs 743 messengers and that 76 highly paid watchmen are needed for the Secretary's office alone. The trouble with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] is that he has been mixed up with these department heads so long that he gives them just what they ask for, and can not say "no" and can not turn them down. He knows too darned much about things around here. That is what is the matter. Too many of the older Members of Congress are like him, and maybe that is partly why we are now facing a $3,000,000,000 deficit.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. If my colleague will withdraw his point of order, I will withdraw my statement that I made about his not knowing anything about messengers, and then we will be even.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am going to let my point of order stand, but I will withhold it to let my friends from California get rid of what they have in their systems.

Mr. BARBOUR. I voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] eliminating the messengers, and I hope he will be with me on this proposition.

Mr. RICKETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. RICKETTS. I should like to know what kind of a lease the Government had on these lands which this appropriation seeks to purchase.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Government had an arrangement with the owners of the land by which the Government had the use of the land free of expense.

Mr. RICKETTS. For what length of time?

Mr. BARBOUR. There was no particular length of time. It just went on under a sort of gentleman's agreement.

Mr. RICKETTS. A verbal lease?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand a verbal lease.

Mr. RICKETTS. There never was any writing?

Mr. BARBOUR. There never was a written lease. But the condition that exists in the country to-day could not be foreseen. Nobody knew we were going to have prohibition or that the producers of wine grapes would be put out of business.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me in order that I may make a suggestion?

Mr. BARBOUR. Gladly.

Mr. GARNER. The various gentlemen from California will have more time to work on the gentleman from Texas if we let this bill go over until Monday. I suggest that we take out and give them time to work on him from now until Monday.

Mr. BLANTON. They will accomplish a whole lot.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know. I will give them time, anyway.

Mr. BLANTON. I come from the same sort of a country that my friend the gentleman does, where, in west Texas, we do not change with every shift in the wind.

Mr. BARBOUR. I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] always endeavors to act with fairness, and I believe he will do so in this case.

Mr. GARNER. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] that it is 5 o'clock and we had better quit and have this matter thrashed out on Monday.

Mr. HAUGEN. May we not finish with this one bureau?

Mr. GARNER. I imagine these gentlemen from California want to be heard.

Mr. BLANTON. In order to bring the matter to a focus, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. MONDELL having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12272, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 9, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Reclamation Service for the fiscal year 1921, payable from the reclamation fund (H. Doc. No. 645), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ELSTON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 406) amending an act entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., certain public lands in California, and granting rights in, over, and through the Sierra Forest Reserve, the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, and the San Gabriel Timberland Reserve, California, to the city of Los Angeles, Calif.," approved June 30, 1906, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 602), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 157) authorizing the Indian tribes and individual Indians, or any of them, residing in the State of Washington and west of the summit of the Cascade Mountains to submit to the Court of Claims certain claims growing out of treaties and otherwise, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 609), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRAGO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3750) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, as amended by the act of July 9, 1918, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 611), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 194) amending joint resolution extending the time for payment of purchase money on homestead entries in the former Colville Indian Reservation, Washington, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 610), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. NOLAN, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11984) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 612), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. ROSE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11410) for the relief of James E. Connors, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 603), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3564) for the relief of George W. Woodall, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 604), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1004) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 605), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1005) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 606), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1006) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 607), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1222) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 608), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 12394) for the allotment of lands on the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon, among the members of the allied tribes occupying the said reservation and composed of the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and the Yahooskin Band of Piute Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HERNANDEZ: A bill (H. R. 12395) authorizing the State of New Mexico to apply the proceeds of the grant to said State of 1,000,000 acres of land made by section 7 of the enabling act, June 20, 1910, for the reimbursement of Grant County, Luna County, Santa Fe County, and the town of Silver City; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SCOTT: A bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. NOLAN: A bill (H. R. 12397) to provide for the raising of public revenue by a tax upon the privileges of the use and enjoyment of lands of large value; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12398) granting an increase of pension to James L. Passell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12399) granting a pension to John M. Wible; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12400) granting a pension to Claude Bain; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H. R. 12401) to reimburse Commander Walter H. Allen, C. E. C., United States Navy, for losses sustained while carrying out his duties; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COLE: A bill (H. R. 12402) granting an increase of pension to Delia Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 12403) granting a pension to Edwin E. Chick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARRELD: A bill (H. R. 12404) granting a pension to Seth A. Welch; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12405) granting a pension to Matilda Hoffman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYS: A bill (H. R. 12406) granting a pension to Frances M. Chronister; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12407) granting a pension to Archibald Collins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 12408) granting an increase of pension to Peter Mariann; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 12409) granting an increase of pension to Lewis W. Ferguson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LUFKIN: A bill (H. R. 12410) granting an increase of pension to Lucy C. Strout; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 12411) granting a pension to John Huff; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 12412) granting an increase of pension to W. H. Riffey; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12413) granting a pension to Harrison R. Large; to the Committee on Pensions.

1416. By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Petition of the Commercial Club of Jamestown, N. Dak., opposing any change in the present zone postal system; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1417. Also, petition of citizens of Goldwin and vicinity, N. Dak., protesting against the passage of the Esch or Cummins railroad bills now pending; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 9, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the author of peace and lover of concord. Thou dost look upon Thy children, pitying them in their ignorance, strengthening them in their weakness, guiding them when they put their trust in Thee. In this sacred moment of life we lift our hearts to Thee asking Thee to direct our steps. In all our ways may we recognize the leadership of God and walk in the path that Thou dost direct us, that the largest measure of good may come to us and through us to this land and to the world. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask that an article by Frank H. Simonds, entitled "Shall we give Europe a receipted bill for ten billions," published in the New York Tribune of yesterday, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Tribune, Feb. 8, 1920.]

SHALL WE GIVE EUROPE A RECEIPTED BILL FOR TEN BILLIONS?—FRANCE, ENGLAND, AND ITALY FIRMLY BELIEVE THAT SUCH A COURSE IS ONLY RIGHT—SENTIMENT IN AMERICA IS NOT UNDERSTOOD BY OUR ASSOCIATES IN THE WAR.

(By Frank H. Simonds.)

"WASHINGTON, D. C.

"In all the discussions of the rehabilitation of Europe which are coming from the other side of the ocean now there is an unmistakable concentration of attention upon the financial aspect and an equally patent suggestion that the easiest, perhaps the only, solution of the European difficulty, so far as it has a solution outside of time and work, will be found in the forgiveness by the United States of the $10,000,000,000 loaned by us to our European associates in the war and remaining a debt to be paid in the future. Already, moreover, we have agreed to postpone the payment of the interest on this debt for a period of time and under certain conditions.

"From the moment of the meeting of the peace conference onward Paris was filled with suggestions, all having the same general character. Thus M. Ribot, several times president of the French Council and as such prime minister and one of the most eminent of French finance ministers, early in the conference proposed that there should be a general pooling of all the debts of the allied and associated powers, and then that the total should be reapportioned on the basis of the existing wealth of the several countries and the comparative sacrifice in men and in money made by these nations in the war.

WOULD HAVE RELIEVED FRANCE.

"The result of such a reapportionment obviously would have been to reduce the French debt very greatly, since France had made the largest sacrifice during the war, and was, both by reason of her size and her wounds incident to German invasion, much weaker than Great Britain or the United States. The larger part of the French indebtedness would in this fashion have been shifted to the shoulders of the United States. This was one of several French proposals which found little support in American quarters and was accordingly dropped, despite French disappointment.

"But there is a British proposal which amounts to the same thing and is now being put forward by many Englishmen and newspapers, notably by Maynard Keynes, one of the British financial representatives at Paris, who left the conference because of his disapproval of the economic terms, and who has embodied his views in a book which has excited much comment on both sides of the Atlantic.

"Mr. Keynes's thesis, that of M. Ribot in a slightly new form, and the general European thesis is that the United States should consent to cancel the $10,000,000,000 which it loaned to the nations associated with it in the recent struggle. This is the British proposal, which is put forward in many other forms, and Mr. Keynes's statement is only interesting as it provides a concise statement of the general notion.

"In this book Mr. Keynes points out that Europe owes the United States $10,000,000,000; that this sum represents our loans to our associates; but that Great Britain has also loaned $8,700,000,000 and France a little short of $2,000,000,000. Great Britain owes us outright $4,200,000,000. The effect of our canceling our loans would be to enable Britain to cancel hers. To be sure, what she owes us is only half of what Europe owes her; but Mr. Keynes correctly points out that since the larger share of the British loans is to Russia, Italy, and the smaller States, whose finances are difficult, no wise financier would estimate the present or even the future value of the British loans at more than 50 per cent.

"Accordingly, Britain would by our forgiveness and hers acquiesce in a mere bookkeeping transaction. She would actually stand where she did before the two operations, neither richer nor poorer. France, by contrast, would gain $3,500,000,000, in round figures, as a result of the cancellation by the United States and by Britain of the loans made to her and by her of Italian indebtedness. Italy would gain $4,000,000,000, Belgium rather less than $1,000,000,000; the figures for the other countries would be trifling.

"Two things would be accomplished by this transaction—the financial problems of the French and the Italians would be enormously lightened and the possibility of quarrels between the European nations which fought Germany growing out of the hopeless intermixture of debts would be abolished. Otherwise resentment by the French at their obligations to Britain, of Italy over her debt to France and Britain, of all Europe over their debts to the United States seems to Mr. Keynes inevitable.

"Now, what is the European idea of the reasons why the United States should thus consent to tax itself for $10,000,000,000 of principal and a very large number of other billions representing the cost of the interest on this vast capital? It is essential that this phase of the question should be understood in the United States if there is to be any real grasp of the European point of view.

"The reasons are twofold: First of all, the World War to the European mind was always our war. In it France and Great Britain, in particular, made sacrifices out of all proportion to those made by the United States, whether the measure be in money, in lives, or in anything else. If the United States had an equal interest, an equal responsibility, in the defeat of Germany, then there is logically no reason why the United States should not pay its proportionate share. Not to do this would amount to letting Europe bear our burdens and discharge our responsibilities.

"And now, when Europe has borne the greater share of the burden and finds itself at once victorious and approximately bankrupt, it sees the United States, by contrast, both prosperous and in a position to demand the payment of interest and principal on a vast debt, which represents the expenditure of our European associates in fighting that war, which was American quite as much as European. No equalization of the blood cost of victory is possible, but it cost France 1,400,000 lives to hold the Germans, the British Empire 900,000 lives to perform its mission, while the United States expended considerably less than 100,000. But if no equalization of the blood cost is possible, at least, so Europe argues, there was all the more reason for an equalization of the money tax.

WE GAVE EUROPE CAUSE.

"Now, alongside of this reasoning stands another set of circumstances which should go a long way toward explaining the European point of view. If many British and French public men and private citizens alike believe that the United States should undertake this burden, if Europe thinks that the United States has a moral obligation, it is able to find not a little support for this view in the statements made by Americans in Europe last year. We talked in Europe in a manner which permitted Europe to believe we were capable of making such a contribution. It is not merely that Europe would now put upon us a very great burden because we are comparatively more fortunate, but that Europe would now invoke the deeds our words seemed to promise.

"I am very anxious to make this point clear to my readers because, if it is not appreciated, the present and all similar European propositions must appear to Americans as sheer and preposterous presumption, as efforts to take advantage of American generosity, as merely designing and selfish ideas. If Europe has been led to make such propositions as those of Mr. Keynes and M. Ribot, the reason is to be found in the way Americans representing the United States in official capacity talked in Europe during the peace conference.

"Europe assumed from this talk that America was prepared to become a full partner in the new world organization—in the League of Nations firm—and that it was ready to put its capital and its credit into the business without stint. Now, if this were the case, then there would be a colorable warrant at the present time for asking us for a contribution which would not be out of proportion to the contributions already made by Great Britain and France during the war, which was in a real sense the first step in setting up the League of Nations itself.

TWO POINTS OF VIEW.

"Of course, if the United States only entered the war as a limited action, as a temporary partner willing to do its part without stint from the moment it did enter until the enemy was defeated, the whole situation takes on a different aspect. On such a basis we did perform our part, rather more than less; this will hardly be challenged in Europe. And on such a basis we were and are justified in retiring, once the purely limited purpose for which we entered—namely, the defeat of Germany, because a menace to us by her submarine course—had been accomplished. Our partnership was not in the concern seeking to organize the world, but in an association striving to abolish the German peril.

"The more I compare the European view of American relation to the war with the view I find held generally in this country, the more I am led to believe that the real misunderstanding grows out of the fact that the mass of the American people understood that they had gone into the war to defeat Germany, and the mass of the European people, like their leaders, have been persuaded by American public men, by the President before all others, that our entrance into the war was the ultimate evidence of a purpose to share henceforth in the regulation of world affairs; that the war was not a protective investment, a necessary expenditure to preserve our own safety, but an actual and deliberate mission 'to make the world safe for democracy,' if one please.

ROOT OF CRITICISM.

"At the root of most of the criticism which one now hears of the United States in Europe lies the idea that we have gone back upon moral and material obligations which were expressed in the language of Mr. Wilson at Paris, in the attitude we adopted throughout the Paris conference. If France and Great Britain to-day believe that we have a duty, expressed in such terms as the proposal regarding the $10,000,000,000 loan, the explanation must be found not in European presumption, primarily, but in American profession.

"You have an odd and far from happy situation. France and Great Britain believe that the war, in which they made such vast sacrifices, in which they received wounds from which recovery, if no longer doubtful must still be long and painful, was in the fullest sense our war as much as theirs, and that in it they did their own share and much of our share. And they can support this view alike with the figures of their own losses and with the words of American representatives in Paris. When they propose that we shall forgive them $10,000,000,000 of debts the proposal is not, to their minds, based upon charity; it is not a request for further benefactions; it is rather a demand that we fulfill our share of obligations which we have acknowledged.

"Now, everyone knows that the American view is quite the opposite. Here in Washington and largely throughout the country I find the general opinion to be that in the World War the United States saved France and Great Britain by military interposition and then and thereafter saved Europe by the enormous contributions of food and money. That there is any further positive obligation, that we owe Europe the $10,000,000,000 because of what Europe did for us, that we have been the beneficiaries of the sufferings and sacrifices of others, this notion does not to any extent prevail in the United States.

"As it is Europe sees the United States endeavoring to escape from moral obligations voluntarily acknowledged when these obligations involve material burdens, while the United States sees Europe attempting to take advantage of what it regards as its previous generosity by saddling upon it enormous financial burdens not properly to be charged to our account. The whole thing comes down to the simple statement of the terms of our association with our European companions in the war and after the war.

"Keynes, in his book, gives an admirable example of certain other European lines of reasoning. What, he inquires, will America get in return for the $10,000,000,000? Why, a remaking of the peace treaty in accordance with ideas which were advocated by the President at Paris. He would have France consent to an immediate and sweeping reduction of her claims against Germany, to a renunciation of her Sarre Valley contract, so far as the question of ultimate possession is concerned. Italy would give up financial claims against Austria. Great Britain would give up certain financial claims against Germany. There would be a general reduction of economic burdens which the treaty of Versailles placed upon the German.

THE ENGLISH PLAN.

"The result would come vastly nearer to an approximation of the idea Mr. Wilson had of European peace than does the treaty of Versailles. American ideas as advocated by him unsuccessfully would be reestablished. Now, this means merely that Mr. Keynes reasons that the United States would be perfectly willing to contribute $10,000,000,000 if as a result of the contribution the world peace were more firmly established, if what he holds to be a juster as well as a more tolerable settlement were thus to be achieved.

"It is a simple and sufficient example of the so-called 'liberal' European view. America is to-day holding back from the signing of the peace settlement; the Senate is refusing its sanction because of the character of the treaty, not as it affects the United States but as it affects Europe. We are refusing to accept the treaty because it is inequitable, so far as it concerns Germany. But if Europe consents to modify the harsher clauses affecting Germany, then the United States will not hesitate to chip in $10,000,000,000 as its contribution to the general fund necessary to achieve this better settlement.

"I recognize that this will seem fantastic to most Americans. I recall the comment of one of my New Hampshire neighbors, which seems to me admirably to sum up a very large fraction of American opinion.

NO MORAL OBLIGATION.

"He said:

"'We feel round here that we have got those European nations out of their troubles and now it is up to them to keep out of trouble in the future.'

"Neither he nor any of his neighbors with whom I talked during the summer had the smallest sense of any moral obligation to Europe for Europe's sacrifices in all the struggles of the first three years of the war.

"Exactly this sentiment prevails here in Washington. It is the conviction that the United States did its full share and more than its full share, given its own responsibilities, and that there is no moral or financial claim upon it for further contributions to Europe. Even so necessary and inconsiderable a course as permitting a postponement of the payment on European loans provoked sharp and general protest in Congress, a certain manifest impatience at the thought of further European contributions.

"Of course, it is fairly obvious that there is no burden of right or wrong on either side of what amounts to a total difference of opinion between Europe and America. The difficulty is the difficulty of comprehension of one nation by another. The Germans, for example, feel that the United States, through President Wilson, totally betrayed them in the matter of the armistice, persuading them to lay down their arms on certain conditions, and then consenting to the enforcement against them, when they had been disarmed, of totally different conditions. And our associates feel, not so differently from our enemies, that we proclaimed our willingness to make any sacrifice, material or otherwise, to further the cause of certain ideas in the world, and now, when the moment for sacrifice comes, we are deliberately and consciously repudiating those obligations.

"The fact of the matter seems to be that, so far as the mass of Americans were concerned, we entered the war only when the Germans forced us into it by their submarine campaign; that, having entered, we were prepared to consent to all sacrifices to attain the defeat of the German, but that when he had been defeated, and his defeat was so complete that even our associates in the war recognized it as such, our responsibilities were at an end.

"Keynes's book is a straightforward exposition of the thesis that the present treaties of peace are bad and will end in the ruin of Europe if they are not modified, modified mainly by changing not only the terms affecting Germany, but also those affecting Austria, Poland, etc. But he sees, as the only possible means of achieving these modifications, American intervention, American contribution by cancellation of a debt of $10,000,000,000 contracted by our European associates in fighting Germany. He reasons that such a contribution by the United States would suffice to persuade France and Italy to give up impossible claims for much more modest realities.

A WORLD DICTATORSHIP.

"But this merely means that the United States shall undertake, using its financial power as a club, to drive all the European nations to accept a different set of peace terms. It means that we shall undertake anew that dictatorship of world affairs which Mr. Wilson essayed to exercise at Paris, but did not wholly succeed in preserving to the end.

"The French, who have made greater sacrifices than the British and on the whole seem likely to receive far less in the way of material benefits, look at the thing rather differently, but the points of similarity are greater than those of divergence. They believe that we owe them a great debt by reason of their losses during three years of a war which was always ours, but in which we did not participate until 1918; that is, did not participate effectively. Thus they feel that we should both make payment of our share of the total financial costs and give them a guaranty for their future safety against a new German attack, which would again be an attack upon us as well as upon France.

"The Italian feels that the least we can do is to mind our own business and let him have the fruits of the victory, which cost him infinitely more than it cost us in lives, in treasure, in ravaged cities and fields. If the British and French in some measure feel that we are deserting them, the Italian feels that we are changing sides and actually attacking him by bolstering up his recent enemies, the Croats and the Slovenians, along the Adriatic.

"But all over Europe—in Germany, in France, in Austria, in Italy, and even in Great Britain—there is a very clear misunderstanding of the situation as the people of the United States see it. With a totally different evidence before them, peoples on either side of the ocean are arriving at utterly different conclusions. Europe is judging our present actions by the words of President Wilson and his associates spoken at Paris. When Europe, when the French and the British suggest that we resign our claims to $10,000,000,000 owed us, in the main by those two nations, neither regards it as a pure gift; rather, to the Frenchman it is the payment of a debt our own public spokesmen have acknowledged in their utterances; to the Englishman it is a payment, made necessary now, to bring about the establishment of that system of world peace and order for which we, through the same voices, pledged all our resources.

WANTS NEW LOANS.

"In the present article I am not endeavoring to suggest that the European view is correct; that it is just; that it should be accepted in the United States. But it does seem to me essential, if there is not to be dangerous resentment and unjust criticism, that there should be a recognition in the United States of the reasons which underlie the European view. If Europe is not warranted in its present opinion, there is no less unmistakable basis for that opinion discoverable in American utterances in Paris.

"The British and the French demand for the American contribution of $10,000,000,000 is only a first and part payment; even Mr. Keynes suggests new loans, once the old are canceled, a payment on account and for the establishment of that scheme of world ordering which Mr. Wilson advocated at Paris, declared to be the desire of his fellow countrymen and, so far as was possible, endeavored to persuade his countrymen to accept. It is our contribution to the capital stock of the League of Nations, a wholly reasonable assessment, provided only that the United States acknowledges the obligation, joins in the articles of incorporation. The weakness in the European argument lies in the belief that what American representatives did in Paris actually committed us to the partnership and that what is now going on is no less than an attempt to escape from just obligations, to repudiate our commitment. The fact that the United States was not bound by the word or the signature of the President until both had been ratified by the Senate is what has so far escaped European attention.

LORD GREY'S LETTER.

"To facilitate European understanding of American circumstance, nothing has contributed more than the recent letter of Lord Grey, printed in the London Times; it makes clear the legal aspects of the American situation perfectly. But even this document will not at once demolish the previous notion that America is repudiating an obligation which was actually binding; still less will it remove the belief that America recognizes a moral obligation, which, at the moment at least, seems to be exactly what America does not recognize.

"Lord Grey is the first Englishman who has seriously attempted to explain to his fellow countrymen the facts in the American situation. Lloyd-George has been at pains to befuddle British minds by his constant assertion that politics alone, partisan considerations, exclusively explained the American delay in accepting the treaty. But it is equally necessary that the European, the British, situation should be explained in America and that Americans should understand the reasons why Europe asks and expects things from America which Americans do not feel that they are called upon to give and can not understand why Europe should feel justified in demanding.

"The very worst vice of the whole peace imbroglio is the extent to which it has estranged nations and peoples which, before the Paris conference met, were on a reasonably satisfactory basis of mutual understanding and sympathy."

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, the letter from the President of the United States addressed to me and published in the papers yesterday, and also a copy of the reservations to which he gives approval.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF PRESIDENT WILSON'S LETTER TO SENATOR HITCHCOCK WHEREIN HE ACCEPTED THE SENATOR'S RESERVATIONS.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
January 26, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR HITCHCOCK: I have greatly appreciated your thoughtful kindness in keeping me informed concerning the conferences you and some of your colleagues have had with spokesman of the Republican Party concerning the possibility of ratification of the treaty of peace, and send this line in special appreciative acknowledgment of your letter of the 22d. I return the clipping you were kind enough to inclose.

To the substance of it I, of course, adhere. I am bound to. Like yourself I am solemnly sworn to obey and maintain the Constitution of the United States. But I think the form of it very unfortunate. Any reservation or resolution stating that "the United States assumes no obligation under such and such an article unless or except" would, I am sure, chill our relationship with the nations with which we expect to be associated in the great enterprise of maintaining the world's peace.

That association must in any case, my dear Senator, involve very serious and far-reaching implications of honor and duty which I am sure we shall never in fact be desirous of ignoring. It is the more important not to create the impression that we are trying to escape obligations.

But I realize that negative criticism is not all that is called for in so serious a matter. I am happy to be able to add, therefore, that I have once more gone over the reservations proposed by yourself, the copy of which I return herewith, and am glad to say that I can accept them as they stand.

I have never seen the slightest reason to doubt the good faith of our associates in the war, nor ever had the slightest reason to fear that any nation would seek to enlarge our obligations under the covenant of the League of Nations, or seek to commit us to lines of action which, under our Constitution, only the Congress of the United States can in the last analysis decide.

May I suggest that with regard to the possible withdrawal of the United States it would be wise to give to the President the right to act upon a resolution of Congress in the matter of withdrawal? In other words, it would seem to be permissible and advisable that any resolution giving notice of withdrawal should be a joint rather than a concurrent resolution.

I doubt whether the President can be deprived of his veto power under the Constitution, even with his own consent. The use of a joint resolution would permit the President, who is, of course, charged by the Constitution with the conduct of foreign policy, to merely exercise a voice in saying whether so important a step as withdrawal from the League of Nations should be accomplished by a majority or by a two-thirds vote.

The Constitution itself providing that the legislative body was to be consulted in treaty making and having prescribed a two-thirds vote in such cases, it seems to me that there should be no unnecessary departure from the method there indicated.

I see no objection to a frank statement that the United States can accept a mandate with regard to any territory under article 13, part 1, or any other provision of the treaty of peace, only by the direct authority and action of the Congress of the United States.

I hope, my dear Senator, that you will never hesitate to call upon me for any assistance that I can render in this or any other public matter.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Inclosure referred to:

"2. The United States assumes no obligation to employ its military or naval forces or the economic boycott to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any other article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war, shall, by act or joint resolution so provide. Nothing herein shall be deemed to impair the obligation in article 16 concerning the economic boycott."

Proposed substitute reservations by Mr. HITCHCOCK to take the place of those proposed by Senator LODGE:

"That any member nation proposing to withdraw from the league on two years' notice is the sole judge as to whether its obligations referred to in Article I of the League of Nations have been performed as required in said article.

"That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or its assembly, for decision, report, or recommendation, any matter which it considers to be in international law a domestic question such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matter relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

"That the national policy of the United States known as the Monroe doctrine, as announced and interpreted by the United States, is not in any way impaired or affected by the covenant of the League of Nations and is not subject to any decision, report, or inquiry by the council or assembly.

"That the advice mentioned in Article X of the covenant of the league which the council may give to the member nations as to the employment of their naval and military forces is merely advice which each member nation is free to accept or reject according to the conscience and judgment of its then existing Government, and in the United States this advice can only be accepted by action of the Congress at the time in being, Congress alone under the Constitution of the United States having the power to declare war.

"That in case of a dispute between members of the league if one of them have self-governing colonies, dominions, or parts which have representation in the assembly, each and all are to be considered parties to the dispute, and the same shall be the rule if one of the parties to the dispute is a self-governing colony, dominion, or part, in which case all other self-governing colonies, dominions, or parts, as well as the nation as a whole, shall be considered parties to the dispute, and each and all shall be disqualified from having their votes counted in case of any inquiry on said dispute made by the assembly."

REMOVAL OF SOLDIER DEAD FROM FRANCE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter relating to the subject of the removal of the dead bodies of soldiers from France to America which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POST-OFFICE BOX 1404,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1920.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS.

SIR: Your talk with the "National League to Bring Home the Soldier Dead" and a few remarks linger in my mind. And I would state that in October, 1919, I was in Paris for the purpose of personally identifying a body said to be that of my husband, Lieut. Col. R. H. Griffiths, a Spanish War veteran and officer of Philippine Constabulary, who had (as temporary commissioned officer) three years' experience with the British Army before America declared war, but reported killed in action in Picardy on two dates, at the time the American First Division arrived in Picardy, and before action on that sector. History relates that the First Division arrived at Picardy on April 25, 1918, and Lieut. Col. R. H. Griffiths was reported killed on the 23d of April officially, and on the 28th of April, 1918; so, as they had only arrived there, they plainly were not in action.

Further, I am informed from The Adjutant General's Department that a number of important communications and telegrams in this case are missing from War Department files.

Therefore I was permitted to visit Paris for the purpose of personally identifying the body buried as his. Col. Leon Kromer flatly refused to exhume the body; could not get labor, etc.

But a Red Cross man—that is, a man with a Red Cross on his shoulder (such as are sold in every trinket shop in Paris)—happened in, wanted to exhume a body, bring it to Paris for cremation, and rebury it in the same cemetery or any place else arranged.

Col. Kromer bluffed that it could not be done. The man showed him a bunch of papers, and then said: "The people of soldiers in America are very rich and are willing to pay any price to have this done. Money and expense are no object."

At this Col. Kromer became very affable and called a chauffeur, ordered that this gentleman be taken to some other official for another permit. Then Col. Kromer turned to me with: "Madam, it is positively against the regulations to exhume bodies." But, being classed as the widow of an officer, with $82 a month to live on, I did not make a statement of unlimited payment, and had to go to London and cable to Washington for further instructions. Now, sir, Col. Kromer's name is spelled like "kultur," with a "K." His manner to me was similar. Anybody wearing a Red Cross could exhume and remove bodies. How many cremated bodies have been removed from American cemeteries in France? Col. Kromer was chief of the Graves Registration Service in October, 1919, and wore military intelligence insignia. Col. Kromer's attitude was supported by Gen. Connor.

Respectfully,

ANNA M. GRIFFITHS.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES BY COLLISION (S. DOC. NO. 214).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $956.63 to settle claims for damages by collision, river and harbor work, which have been adjusted and settled by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 154) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily in emergency hospitals to be established in that State, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KAHN, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. CRAGO, Mr. DENT, and Mr. FIELDS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution authorizing the Clerk in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 11368, the Indian appropriation bill, to dispose of Senate amendments Nos. 114 and 115 in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement to said amendments and had agreed to the same, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3327) granting certain rights of way and exchanges of the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, in the State of Utah, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send to the desk several telegrams. I ask that the first one be read and that the others be printed in the RECORD, and that all be ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

DURHAM, N. C., February 7, 1920.

Senator LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Speaking for the millers of North Carolina, I protest against the evidence of bad faith in the proposed Gronna bill terminating wheat control. Millers of this State own large amounts of wheat bought from Grain Corporation; they also have made heavy sales of flour against these purchases. I believe the condition which caused wheat to decline in Kansas City 20 cents per bushel during the past three days may cause still further decline to materially lower basis than that guaranteed by the Federal Government. The repudiation of this pledge may cause financial losses to millers and merchants of such proportions as to become a national disaster.

A. M. SPEED.

The remaining telegrams were also ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATESVILLE, N. C., February 7, 1920.

United States Senator LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We protest against the bad faith evidenced in proposed Gronna bill terminating wheat control. We own a large amount of wheat, purchased from Grain Corporation, against which we have sold flour for future delivery. The mere introduction of this bill has caused cash wheat to decline 20 cents a bushel in last few days, and its passage would undoubtedly cause wheat to fall below present Government guaranteed price, thereby causing untold loss to millers, grain dealers, flour handlers, and farmers, who have been depending upon the guaranteed price per agreements made in good faith with Grain Corporation.

STEERLING MILLS.

STATESVILLE, N. C., February 7, 1920.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We heartily indorse William Speed's telegram protesting against the abrupt termination of wheat control; if possible, would make it stronger. It might be a calamity to millers and merchants as well as to farmers still owning wheat.

STARR MILLING CO.

STATESVILLE, N. C., February 7, 1920.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We heartily indorse William Speed's telegram protesting against the abrupt termination of wheat control; if possible, would make it stronger. It might be a calamity to millers and merchants as well as to farmers still owning wheat.

STATESVILLE FLOUR MILL CO.

STATESVILLE, N. C., February 7, 1920.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We heartily indorse William Speed's telegram protesting against the abrupt termination of wheat control; if possible, would make it stronger. It might be a calamity to millers and merchants as well as to farmers still owning wheat.

CITY FLOUR MILLS CO.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a telegram similar to the one just read from the Merchants' Exchange of Seattle, Wash., and the Northwest Pacific Grain Dealers' Association, protesting against the repeal of the wheat price guaranty legislation. I ask that it may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting of Friends, of Seattle, Wash., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Joint Postal Association, of Spokane, Wash., praying for the passage of the so-called Lehlbach-Sterling retirement bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial signed by citizens of Medford, Oreg., concerning the League of Nations, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEDFORD, OREG., February 2, 1920.

To Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE and Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY, United States Senators:

The undersigned citizens of Medford, Oreg., respectfully represent that they are in entire accord with the statement of Hon. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, made to Mr. Bullitt in Paris to the effect "that if the American people understood what was in the treaty of peace they would protest against its ratification"; and we further urge that the Senate insist upon a ratification, if at all, with the reservations known as the Lodge reservations, and that unless ample reservations are made thoroughly Americanizing the treaty that the Senate vote against its ratification. We believe that if it be ratified with the Lodge reservations the interests of America will be protected, but not without the said reservations.

Wm. M. Coling, attorney (opposed to any League of Nations); Gus. Cury, lawyer; K. G. Riddell, dentist (opposed to any League of Nations); Bert R. Elliott, dentist; G. M. Roberts, district attorney, Jackson City, Oreg.; E. G. Brown, merchant; Will G. Steel, commissioner Crater Lake National Park; S. S. Smith, manager Mail-Tribune; D. Elroy Getchell, banker (opposed to any League of Nations); W. J. Warner.

Mr. COLT. I present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, recommending legislation providing for an immigration station at the port of Providence, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January session, A. D. 1920.

Resolution recommending to Congress the passage of legislation providing for an immigration station in the port of Providence.

Whereas the development of the port of Providence is seriously handicapped and the proper examination of immigrants prevented by the absence of a suitable immigration station; and

Whereas the erection of such an immigration station with the proper facilities for the care and custody of immigrants is essential: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the passage of suitable legislation which will provide such an immigration station, and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, February 2, 1920.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution passed by the general assembly and approved by the governor on the 15th day of January, A. D. 1920.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid this 2d day of February, in the year 1920.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. COLT. I also present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January session, A. D. 1920.

(Approved Feb. 4, 1920.)

Resolution favoring Senate joint resolution 102, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, "To equalize the pay and allowances of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard with those of the Navy."

Whereas the maintenance of the highest standard of efficiency in the conservation of life and property from the perils of the sea is of great importance to the commercial and shipping interests of the State of Rhode Island; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States, Senate joint resolution 102, which has for its purpose the equalization of the pay and allowances of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard with those of the Navy, said Senate joint resolution having been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate of the United States; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance that the provisions of said joint resolution be enacted into law at as early a date as practicable in order that the Coast Guard may be able to retain its trained personnel, and to secure by enlistment, suitable recruits to man its vessels and stations which has become difficult on account of the greater rates of pay prevailing in practically all business and commercial pursuits, which conditions threaten the efficiency of the service; and

Whereas it would be detrimental to the commercial and shipping interests of the State of Rhode Island if for any reason the efficiency of the Coast Guard should become impaired: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, That the Members of Congress from the State of Rhode Island be, and hereby are, earnestly requested to give their support to Senate joint resolution 102 and to use their efforts to secure its early passage by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Rhode Island, and to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, February 7, 1920.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution passed by the general assembly and approved by the governor on the 4th day of February, A. D. 1920.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid this 7th day of February, in the year 1920.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. KNOX presented petitions of the Rotary Club of York; of Anthony Wayne Post, No. 418, American Legion, of Wayne; of Milton Lafayette Bishop Post, No. 301, American Legion, of Connellsville; of Philip J. He also presented a memorial of the Bucks County Historical Society, of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the proposed acquisition by condemnation by the Government of certain lands in Pennsylvania as a site for a Government arsenal, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Washington, Meadville, Johnstown, Conemaugh, Bethlehem, and Williamsport, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Federal urban mortgage bank bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of the Pittsburgh Section of the American Chemical Society of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the encouragement and protection of the American dye industry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of the Council of the Diocese of Texas of the Protestant Episcopal Church, praying for the adoption of the League of Nations covenant, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ELKINS presented a memorial of the executive board of District No. 17, United Mine Workers of America, of Charleston, W. Va., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Sterling-Graham sedition bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of Post No. 132, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Junction City; of Lewis Post, No. 294, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Dodge City; and of Blue Post, No. 250, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Topeka, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of Clarence Lieurance Post, No. 2, American Legion, of Neosha Falls, and of sundry citizens of Marion County, Cherokee County, and Harper County, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5213) for the relief of occupants and claimants of unsurveyed public land in township 8 north of range 2 west of Salt Lake meridian, Utah, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2371) for the relief of Katheryn Walker (Rept. No. 419); and

A bill (S. 2528) to grant certain lands to the city of Pocatello, State of Idaho, for conserving and protecting the source of its water supply and as a municipal park site (Rept. No. 420).

THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 300, submitted by Mr. McCUMBER on the 6th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3884) to amend the Federal reserve act and to enlarge the powers of Federal reserve banks and member banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3885) authorizing the adjustment of the boundaries of the Ochoco National Forest in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3886) for the relief of the heirs of Henry Sturm, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 3887) for the relief of Stephen Olop (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 3888) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Shoemaker (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3889) granting a pension to Watson D. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOLCOTT:

A bill (S. 3890) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the United States Department of State; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate not exceeding $30,000 for the transportation of foreign mails by airplanes and seaplanes, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

LOANS MADE UPON GRAIN.

Mr. GRONNA. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I ask that the resolution may be read. It is very short.

The resolution (S. Res. 301) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate instruct the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate and report to the Senate the amount of loans made upon grain by the Federal Reserve and other banks, and to investigate the alleged causes of withdrawal of funds to provide for loans, extension, or renewal of loans upon wheat and other cereals.

CAR SHORTAGE.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I submit another resolution, which I ask may be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 302) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate instruct the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to investigate the alleged lack of supply and failure to supply an adequate number of stock cars and cars for transporting grain and other farm products during the period of Government operation of railroads, and the charges of willful interference by certain officials of the Railroad Administration with the successful operation of the railroads by the Government, and to report the findings to the Senate as soon as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object. It seems to me if the subject of the resolution is a matter for investigation it ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which is charged with the duty of considering all interstate-commerce questions.

Mr. GRONNA. I considered that question quite fully. The resolution, however, deals with agricultural products. As the Senator knows, I think nearly every Senator has received telegrams asking that something be done to relieve the congestion in the agricultural sections of the country and to furnish them cars for the shipment of wheat. The resolution simply asks for information, and I trust the Senator from Utah will not object to it. I do not see how it can possibly do any harm or interfere with any of the work done by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of the resolution if the Senator insists that the investigation shall be made by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is the proper function of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, if an investigation of this character is required, to conduct such investigation. I think it would lead to confusion and complications if we should repudiate the rules of the Senate and ignore committees whose duties and powers are well defined and understood. We should respect committees and not seek to deprive them of authority conferred by rules, and thus bring confusion and demoralization in legislative procedure. Suppose that complaints were made of the inadequate supply of cars for mining purposes and for the transportation of ores and coal. Could it be contended that under the rules of the Senate such complaints should be sent to the Committee on Mines and Mining? We have a Committee on Interstate Commerce, charged with the duty of making investigation, when investigation is required, of all interstate-commerce problems and questions. If the Senator will amend his resolution so as to refer it to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I shall be glad to vote for it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Utah has the right to object. I fully realize that the resolution can not be passed this morning if objection is made.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. GRONNA. Just a moment. I can assure the Senator, however, that there is an absolute necessity for more cars, and an investigation of this sort can do no harm. I could show the Senator, if I wanted to take up the time of the Senate, I think probably 50 telegrams which I have received this morning calling attention to the absolute necessity of having cars furnished for the shipment of grain.

I have no objection to permitting the Committee on Interstate Commerce to make an investigation if it sees fit, but why should the Senator from Utah object to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry making the investigation, which deals with agricultural products and which has the responsibility of dealing with the marketing of agricultural products? I ask, Why does the Senator object to a resolution of this kind?

Mr. KING. I suggested that I would be willing to have the resolution considered if the Senator would amend it and refer it to the proper committee. If the Senator will take that course, I shall vote to have that committee make the investigation.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator objects, I give notice that I shall move to take it up to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not hear the reading of the resolution. I assume, however, from the discussion that it relates to the car supply as affecting the grain market.

Mr. GRONNA. It does.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion, I this morning had a letter from the Toledo Produce Exchange advising that on a survey which was made I think on either Friday or Saturday they were short nearly 500 cars. I think that situation exists throughout the country largely.

Also, if the Senator will permit me to make the suggestion, a few days ago I had a large number of telegrams from Cleveland, and among them a telegram from the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce. The chamber of commerce advised that there was a very general shortage of cars in all branches of industry, and spoke of one company that had at that time nearly 600 cars of freight in the warehouse, and the number of cars was negligible. Throughout Ohio, and particularly in the coal region, there is a shortage of car supply running from 50 to 75 per cent at the mines.

I call attention to this fact as indicating that it is not the grain interests that alone are suffering. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has had under investigation the question of coal supply to a very large extent, and the thought has occurred to me that in view of the general situation it might perhaps be better to have the resolution go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I assure the Senator from North Dakota that I am in entire sympathy with the purpose of his resolution.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I have information from two large lumber concerns in the State of Arkansas whose requirements demand that they shall have at least 200 cars a month to take care of their output, and they state that they have not had more than 25 cars a month recently. They employ from 500 to 1,500 men. One of the concerns had to close down one of its mills, and the other concern writes me that it will be necessary to shut down its mills unless the car supply is improved. That shows the condition there. There is a shortage of cars, and I do not see why the Committee on Interstate Commerce would not be the best vehicle or agency for the investigation of the condition, because it seems to be general throughout the country.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to state the reason why I believe the resolution ought to have immediate consideration. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, and also in reply to the Senator from Ohio, that there is not the urgent demand for cars for either of the products which they have mentioned that there is for wheat, and for this reason: As we all know, the law which was enacted March 4, 1919, guaranteeing a certain price for wheat expires by limitation on the 1st day of June. It is alleged—and it seems that there has been an understanding to make conditions such—that as much grain as possible should be moved to the grain centers all at once before that time.

The Senate has just adopted a resolution which I introduced calling for information as to why the Federal reserve and other banks are refusing to extend loans upon grain to farmers and to grain men. I have information—and I have the original letters before me—alleging that there must have been a misunderstanding with reference to the question of supplying cars for shipment of the grain which remains in the farmers' bins. I do not believe there are 50,000,000 bushels on the farms throughout the United States besides what is needed for seed and feed. There is a lot of grain in the smaller elevators of the country. These men have paid a high price—a much higher price than the price guaranteed by the Government—and if they want it all to flow into the terminal markets at one time, naturally it will depress the price.

If it were not during the morning hour, I would take sufficient time to read letters and telegrams from grain men showing that there will be no market for the grain outside of the Grain Corporation, thereby forcing down prices and involving a loss to those men from 50 cents to 75 cents a bushel. I do not say that I concur in this, however, but I call attention to the statements made.

I think that is an answer to the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], as it demonstrates there is a reason why we should take immediate action in this matter, and that cars should be now furnished in order that the men who have sold grain to arrive at a high price may be protected.

Mr. KIRBY. I have no objection to immediate action, but I thought the other committee was the better agency to investigate this subject. If the mills of which I spoke have to be shut down, 3,000 men will be out of employment.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; but let me say to the Senator, if he will permit me to finish my statement, that he has not heard of any reduction having been made in the price of the commodity which he mentioned. Instead of that commodity declining in price, it has advanced. I am sure the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has heard no complaint from the men who have written to him that the price of their commodity has declined; on the contrary, prices have been soaring.

The position with reference to grain is somewhat different. I have a letter before me here from a grain-elevator man in North Dakota stating that the price of grain in the city of Devils Lake declined from 50 to 70 cents a bushel last week. That was before my bill terminating the Grain Corporation was introduced. So I say, Mr. President, there is a good reason why this resolution should be given immediate attention and should be at once passed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not now desire to discuss the resolution. I simply wish to say that there were many telegrams received last week asking for cars, and Senators from Northwestern States, including myself, urged the Federal Railway Administration to send cars to the Northwest. We received assurances that that would be done, and a man was sent out to take charge of the matter. Of course, I have not had a report as to how many cars have been sent. I have no doubt there is a shortage of cars, but I think we have taken steps to remedy the situation so far as the shortage of cars will permit. I do not know definitely as to the details.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that the lumber industry in the State of Washington is threatened with stagnation and ruin by the lack of cars. If there is to be an investigation as to the shortage of cars, I desire to have it include the lumber industry as well as other industries. I do not propose now to take any further time, but I simply wish to make this statement.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] that, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to his resolution in regard to cars for grain shipment. I think it is very important that grain shipments should be made; but I also wish to say that I have received telegrams from representatives of the coal interests in my State to the effect that at some of the mines they have no cars whatever, the result of which is that the coal miners are not employed one-half of the time and that they are leaving that section of the country and are seeking other sections where they can get employment. That has produced absolute stagnation. I merely mention this fact to show that the car shortage is universal; that it does not apply to any one industry or to any one product. The people of my section are saying that they can get no cars. I have made it my business to apply to the Director General of Railroads for help. I repeat, the fact is that in the coal-mining region referred to they have been obliged to stop work because of the lack of cars. I do not object to the Senator's section of the country having cars for the shipment of grain; I think it is important they should have them; but the shortage of cars applies to all industries and all products, including those of my State.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, in support of what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has said in this particular instance, I desire to say that the coal industry is the important industry at this time. When Lloyd-George was speaking of a threatened strike in the Cardiff region of Wales he said: "Coal is life." If the supply of coal is threatened, elevators will cease operations, the transportation system itself will halt, mills and factories everywhere will be forced to suspend, the lumber industry, the sawmills, will stop with the logs on the way. There can be no activity in any industry or enterprise in this country without a supply of fuel.

More than that, we have but recently, partially and temporarily, adjusted the differences between the operators and the operatives in the coal industry. A majority of the miners are foreign born and do not understand the causes of the industrial unrest or the reason for unemployment, and if the mines stop now because of a lack of transportation that stoppage may be followed by disastrous results, which can not be remedied even by an adequate supply of cars. For that reason I regard it as more important that the mines should be kept running at this time than that any other industry should receive immediate attention.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the resolution offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] gone over under the rule?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went over 15 minutes ago.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. GRONNA. I merely want to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order has been called for and that is the end of it. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate——

Mr. STANLEY. I think I was in the regular order, but I take pleasure in advising the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that I have concluded my remarks.

DEPARTMENTAL PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order to conserve paper, and also to conserve the Treasury of the United States, Congress on March 1, 1919, passed an act conferring upon the Joint Committee on Printing certain powers. Under that act there was an investigation made of the publications of the different departments of the Government. The committee instructed the different departments to discontinue certain publications that were being printed in different parts of the country.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that I have before me now samples of publications printed at the different posts in the United States——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Michigan call for the regular order?

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to say nothing more.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Michigan to call for the regular order. The Senator from Utah is not proceeding in regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

STATEMENT BY MR. HERBERT HOOVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further resolutions?

Mr. BORAH. I do not wish now to take up the time of the Senate in comment, but, as I desire to comment later, I ask to have read the statement of Mr. Hoover which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

HOOVER NOT TO TIE HIMSELF TO UNDEFINED PARTISANSHIP, SAYS HE IS NOT A CANDIDATE—HE WILL "VOTE FOR PARTY THAT STANDS FOR THE LEAGUE" AND COULD NOT VOTE WITH ORGANIZATION "IF IT WERE DOMINATED BY GROUPS WHO HOPE FOR ANY FORM OF SOCIALISM"—THANKS FRIENDS FOR ACTIVITIES.

Herbert Hoover last night issued the following statement defining his attitude toward the Presidency:

"In order to answer a large number of questions all at once, let me emphasize that I have taken a day off from the industrial conference in Washington to come to New York solely to attend to pressing matters in connection with the children's relief. I want to say again, I have not sought and am not seeking the Presidency. I am not a candidate. I have no 'organization.' No one is authorized to speak for me politically.

"As an American citizen by birth and of long ancestry, I am naturally deeply interested in the present critical situation. My sincere and only political desire is that one or both of the great political parties will approach the vital issues which have grown out of the war and are now with a clear purpose looking to the welfare of our people, and that candidates capable of carrying out this work should be nominated.

WILL VOTE WITH PARTY FOR LEAGUE.

"If the treaty goes over to the presidential election (with any reservations necessary to clarify the world's mind that there can be no infringement of the safeguards provided by our Constitution and our nation-old traditions), then I must vote for the party that stands for the league. With it there is hope not only of the prevention of war but also that we can safely economize in military policies. There is hope of earlier return of confidence and the economic reconstruction of the world.

"I could not vote with a party if it were dominated by groups who seek to set aside our constitutional guaranties for free speech or free representation, who hope to reestablish control of the Government for profit and privilege. I could not vote with a party if it were dominated by groups who hope for any form of Socialism, whether it be nationalization of industry or other destruction of individual initiative. Both of these extremes, camouflaged or open, are active enough in the country to-day. Neither of these dominations would enable those constructive economic policies that will get us down from the unsound economic practices which of necessity grew out of the war, nor would they secure the good will to production in our farmers and workers or maintain the initiative of our business men. The issues look forward; not back.

WANTS TWO GREAT PARTIES ONLY.

"I do not believe in more than two great parties; otherwise combinations of groups could, as in Europe, create a danger of minority rule. I do believe in party organization to support great ideals and to carry great issues and consistent policies. Nor can any one man dictate the issues of great parties. It appears to me that the hope of a great majority of our citizens in confronting this new period in American life is that the great parties will take positive stands on the many issues that confront us, and will select men whose character and associations will guarantee their pledges.

"I am being urged by people in both parties to declare my allegiance to either one or the other. Those who know me know that I am able to make up my mind when a subject is clearly defined. Consequently, until it more definitely appears what party managers stand for, I must exercise a prerogative of American citizenship and decline to pledge my vote blindfold.

"I am not unappreciative of the many kind things that my friends have advanced on my behalf. Yet I hope they will realize my sincerity in not tying myself to undefined partisanship."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it is in order, I move to refer the communication of Mr. Hoover to Chairman Hays's committee of 1S1 on platform. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Idaho has read into the RECORD the statement of Mr. Hoover. I regard it as an attack upon the American Federation of Labor. I note as a hopeful sign that he is opposed to class or group domination.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 7th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading and unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to suspend paragraph 1 of Rule XIII and reconsider the vote by which the Senate tabled the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany with the reservations adopted by the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that I desire to object to the request for unanimous consent, but I should like to make an inquiry before we proceed. Are we proceeding at this time with reference to the treaty, including any proceedings with reference to bringing it back, under cloture?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has had some experience with the Senate on treaty questions. Nevertheless, the Chair has courage enough to say, as the question is propounded, that, after the vote shall be reconsidered, unless the treaty shall be rereferred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, or unless by unanimous consent the cloture rule shall be modified, the Chair will hold that it comes back under the cloture adopted by the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Then, Mr. President, as I understand the ruling of the Chair, it is to the effect that cloture will obtain unless the treaty is rereferred to the Committee on Foreign Relations or unless by unanimous consent the cloture rule is modified?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is the program to rerefer the treaty to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. LODGE. If my request for unanimous consent is granted or a motion to suspend the rules is carried, by intention is to follow it by a motion to recommit the treaty to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BORAH. If I may be permitted to ask another question, is it the purpose of the leader of the minority to support the motion to refer the treaty to the committee?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The disposition on this side of the aisle is to cooperate in any course that will bring the treaty promptly back into the Senate for consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Bring it back from the committee?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Then the program is understood to be to refer the treaty to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, do I understand that this action not merely implies but assures the future consideration of the treaty without cloture?

Mr. LODGE. If the motion to recommit is adopted there will be no cloture rule appended to it, unless the Senate chooses to apply the cloture rule, which is always within its power.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am addressing my inquiry to what I dare say may be the brief interval between the consideration of the treaty and its recommitment to the committee. I wonder if during that interval it is contemplated that objection will be raised, and effective objection, to the recommitment of the treaty?

Mr. LODGE. The motion to recommit is in order, whether the treaty comes back under the cloture rule or whether it does not. Of course, if the Senate votes down the motion to recommit, then a new situation is presented.

Mr. McCORMICK. Then, Mr. President, what do I understand that situation to be?

Mr. LODGE. It will be before us under the ruling of the Chair, as I understand, with the exhausted cloture appended to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that cloture will apply until recommitment?

Mr. LODGE. That is my understanding. That motion can be made at any time, of course.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Chair has ruled that cloture will apply until the treaty is recommitted, but what will apply between the time this unanimous consent is given and the time the treaty is recommitted?

Mr. McCORMICK. That is the precise inquiry which I addressed to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair be correct, it comes back under the cloture rule. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BORAH. Then there could be no debate except such debate as Senators may have left?

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, a motion to recommit will be made by the Senator from Massachusetts, and the Chair believes that motion is not debatable unless we should run along until 2 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I object to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Then, Mr. President, under the notice which I gave, which I will ask to have read, I move to suspend paragraph 1 of Rule XIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be read.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 2, 1920.

Notice by Mr. LODGE: "I hereby give notice, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, that on Monday, February 9, 1920, I will move to suspend paragraph 1 of Rule XIII, in order that the Senate may be given an opportunity to reconsider its final vote upon the resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, including the covenant of a League of Nations, and the subsequent action taken to prevent a reconsideration of such vote."

Mr. LODGE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This requires a two-thirds vote. The roll will be called.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. BANKHEAD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is detained from the Chamber on account of sickness. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is absent on account of the sickness of his mother. They have arranged a pair between them on matters relating to the treaty, and I desire to announce the fact.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. DILLINGHAM'S name was called). The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is absent, I think on account of illness. He told me he was paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. On this question, I know, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. GAY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GAY] is absent on a congressional commission investigating conditions in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. BORAH (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of California was called). The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I have agreed to take care of him with a pair during his absence. I am assured, however, that if present he would vote as I shall vote on this matter. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], whose absence has already been announced. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. NEWBERRY'S name was called). I announce the absence of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], and state that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on all matters except those affecting the League of Nations. I am authorized to state that if the junior Senator from Michigan were present he would vote "yea" on this motion.

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. SHIELDS'S name was called). The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent on the business of the Senate; that is to say, he is investigating the murders of a large number of American citizens that have been committed by Mexican bandits and outlaws. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. However, with his consent I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea." He is also paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I understand that, if present, he would vote "yea." I will therefore allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] on account of illness.

Mr. GRONNA. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent from the Chamber because of illness.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask if I heard the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] transfer his pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]?

Mr. HARRISON. I transferred my pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

Mr. LODGE. The junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. Then I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family.

Mr. GERRY. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on public business.

The roll call resulted—yeas 63, nays 9, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. More than two-thirds of the Senators present having voted to suspend the rule for the purposes stated in the notice of the Senator from Massachusetts, the rule is suspended.

Mr. LODGE. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate tabled the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany with the reservations adopted by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the motion, first, because the Senator from Massachusetts is not entitled to make it, not having voted with the prevailing side; second, because the matter sought to be reconsidered has already been once reconsidered; and, third, because it was finally disposed of on the 19th day of November, 1919, at a preceding session of Congress; that on that day that session of Congress adjourned without day, and hence it is now too late under general parliamentary law to make the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. And from that decision I appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. An appeal from the ruling of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. These motions and questions are not debatable before 2 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. On the appeal I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that was made awhile ago with reference to my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and with the same understanding, that he would vote as I shall vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Repeating the statement that I made a moment ago, I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I again announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], and understanding that, if present, he would vote as I shall vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement heretofore made regarding my pair, in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement heretofore made as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. REED's name was called). I desire to announce a pair between the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. SHIELDS's name was called). I make the same announcement with regard to my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and ask that it may stand for the day.

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent on the business of the Senate; that is to say, he is investigating the murders of a large number of American citizens that have been committed by Mexican bandits and outlaws. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Making the same statement as on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement, as on the previous roll call, as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family.

Mr. GERRY. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on public business.

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 10, as follows:

So the ruling of the Chair was sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to reconsider the vote by which the Senate tables the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the resolution of ratification with the reservations adopted by the Senate.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move to recommit to the Committee on Foreign Relations the treaty of peace with Germany, together with the reservations adopted by the Senate and the resolution of ratification, with instructions to report the treaty back immediately, together with said reservations and the ratifying resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he would be willing to omit in the third line "reservations adopted by the Senate," and in next to the bottom line "together with such reservations," so it would read in this way:

I move to recommit to the Committee on Foreign Relations the treaty of peace with Germany, together with the resolution of ratification, with instructions to report the treaty back immediately without recommendation.

That will leave the whole matter in the Senate, where it can be considered, and will leave it practically where it was.

Mr. LODGE. My purpose, and my sole purpose, in what I am endeavoring to do this morning is to bring back the treaty before the Senate in the quickest possible way. Whatever work we are going to do in the Senate will be done, if done at all, by modifications of the reservations which the Senate adopted. All those reservations could be offered again. No right is cut off. Any reservation can be offered when the treaty is reported by the committee. I am certain that it will save the time of the Senate to bring the reservations back, because they are going to be the subject of discussion, and it is to them that modifications, if any, will be offered. To leave them out, it seems to me, we run the risk of delay and revising the whole treaty from beginning to end.

I think it is in the interest of prompt action to bring the treaty back to-morrow with the resolution of ratification and with the reservations. The resolution of ratification, of course, can not be presented until we get into the Senate and the treaty will come back in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will tolerate another interruption——

Mr. LODGE. Gladly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The expression "reservations adopted by the Senate" strikes me as hardly correct, for the reason that the reservations were adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. They were subsequently adopted in the Senate, every one of them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the Senate the Senate rejected the resolution incorporating the reservations, and it puts the matter in an awkward position to go on record here as favoring reservations adopted in the Senate, when as a matter of fact the resolution containing the reservations was defeated, and we have now reconsidered the motion by which that defeat occurred.

Mr. LODGE. The reservations were certainly adopted in the Senate. What was defeated was the resolution of ratification with the reservations appended. There is no doubt that the reservations were adopted. I think the description is an accurate one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, Mr. President, I move, in line 3 of the motion offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, to strike out the words "reservations adopted by the Senate," so that it will simply refer the treaty to the committee with the resolution of ratification.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would be a great mistake to adopt that course, and I hope it will not be taken. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understand the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to recommit the treaty in this form and report it back to the Senate is for the purpose of voiding the cloture rule. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that if the Senator from Massachusetts insists on his motion and we should order a reporting back of certain reservations which came before the Senate when the treaty was last reported, it puts Members of the Senate on this side of the Chamber in rather an embarrassing attitude in ordering the report of reservations that they did not favor. There is no question that this side of the Chamber desire to take up the treaty. They desire to cooperate with the Senator from Massachusetts in his effort to take it up; but they do not desire to be placed in the position of voting for proposals that they negatived by their vote when the matter was in the Senate before. It seems to me that the question of lifting the cloture rule can be done by unanimous consent, and I think an effort ought to be made to void it by unanimous consent before the vote is taken. I rise for the purpose of asking the Chair if the cloture rule heretofore adopted can not be set aside by the unanimous consent of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I ask the Senator in charge of the treaty, before he insists on this motion, at least to give the Senate a chance to void the rule by unanimous consent. If that is done, then the position of the treaty before the Senate now will be exactly where it would be if he sends it back to the Committee on Foreign Relations and then brings it back.

Mr. WATSON. With the reservations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The motion has been reconsidered.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And it will be exactly where it will be if the Senator from Massachusetts brings it back from the committtee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts. If the sole purpose of the Senator in reconsidering the action of the Senate in rejecting the resolution of ratification which contained the reservations agreed to by the Senate is to get rid of the cloture and bring the matter before the Senate, in view of the fact that the Chair has ruled that unanimous consent can be given to set aside the cloture rule, would it not suit the Senator's purpose just as well to ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate in rejecting the resolution of ratification be reconsidered, and then the resolution stands before the Senate just as it was when it was rejected with the reservations adopted by the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. That is what we have done. We have already reconsidered the vote by which the Senate rejected it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In view of the fact that the Senator from Alabama and the Chair agree that cloture can be dissolved by unanimous consent, and inasmuch as a dissolution of the cloture rule was the sole object of referring the resolution and the treaty to the committee, why does not the Senator from Massachusetts ask unanimous consent that cloture be dissolved?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like, before giving the unanimous consent, to know the precise parliamentary situation in which we are then left.

As I understand it, we have reconsidered the vote by which the motion to reconsider was tabled. Therefore there is now before the Senate the motion to reconsider the vote by which the treaty was rejected. I desire the Chair to correct me if I am misstating the situation as I understand it. That being the case we can go on and reconsider the vote by which the resolution of ratification with reservations was rejected, and then we can proceed to reconsider the vote on each of the reservations, bringing them all severally before the Senate. That is the parliamentary situation, as I understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has the recollection, subject to revision by the RECORD, that what was done was that separate votes were taken in Committee of the Whole on each of the reservations. They were decided and carried by the Senate by a majority vote, and the rule adopted by the Senate under a rule which the Chair believes to be in direct contravention of the Constitution of the United States, a rule that has led to all this trouble. If each reservation had been adopted by a two-thirds vote there would be no doubt about the final ratification by a two-thirds vote.

Then it passed into the Senate, and some reservations were voted on en bloc and on others there were separate votes.

Mr. LODGE. They all received a vote in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They all received a vote. Then they were included in the resolution of ratification, and that was lost, not receiving the constitutional two-thirds vote of the Senators present. Then the motion was made to reconsider. The Senator from Massachusetts moved to lay the motion on the table, and that prevailed. Now, we have reconsidered the vote whereby the motion to reconsider was laid on the table. That leaves before the Senate the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution of ratification containing the reservations was defeated. If you want it back in Committee of the Whole you must go back step by step and reconsider every vote that was taken until you get back into Committee of the Whole, or it must go to the committee on motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Or we can keep it in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I say if you want to go back to Committee of the Whole you must reconsider each one of these votes.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I attempt to correct the Chair's history in one particular? The resolution of ratification with reservations failed, was reconsidered, and again failed. The resolution for unconditional ratification failed, and the motion to reconsider that resolution was laid on the table. Therefore the resolution that will be before the Senate if this motion prevails is not the resolution with reservations but the resolution for unconditional ratification. It seems to me that the only way that this can be untangled is to have it go to the Committee on Foreign Relations and come back to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think unquestionably the Senate can do by unanimous consent anything that it can do by a series of votes. It seems to me clear that if the Senator from Massachusetts will ask that the cloture rule be set aside and that all votes that intervened be set aside and the treaty be taken up in Committee of the Whole in the initial stages in which it was originally presented to the Senate, that that can be done by unanimous consent, and by unanimous consent we reach the same conclusion.

Mr. LODGE. That would bring back the treaty as it was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with the series of reservations before us as rejected by the Senate and with the whole series of amendments to the treaty. That does not seem to me to be the proper method to dispose of the treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. May I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts why the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama would not meet the situation? If the Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all of the votes be reconsidered and that the treaty be taken up and considered as in Committee of the Whole the same as it was when originally reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, would not that meet the situation?

Mr. LODGE. I was just stating the condition it would be in. It would be with all the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, some 50 in number, and carrying the reservations—15 I think—that were reported from the Committee of the Whole. It would open up the whole debate which arose when it was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. That is the situation which would arise.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I may have misunderstood the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, but I understood him to say that unanimous consent would do away with all the amendments and that we could consider the treaty as in Committee of the Whole, and in the same condition it was in when it was reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. No unanimous consent to take it back into Committee of the Whole can strip off the action of the committee because that has been done. By unanimous consent you can only undo these parliamentary motions that have been made and either adopt or defeat them; and when you get it back in Committee of the Whole it has the committee amendments and reservations on it. You can by unanimous consent put it back in the Committee on Foreign Relations, of course, if you want to get them off in that way, but where the unanimous consent proposed by the Senator from Alabama would leave it would be where it was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. If the Senate wants to do that, very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not understand it quite that way.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Massachusetts give me his attention while I suggest a substitute for his motion, which I think will put the matter in Committee of the Whole, where it can be handled in accordance with his desire?

I move to recommit to the Committee on Foreign Relations the treaty of peace with Germany, with instructions to report the treaty back immediately without amendment and without reservations.

It will then be in Committee of the Whole, where the Senate can do with it as it pleases.

Mr. LODGE. I think voting it out of Committee of the Whole, of course, commits nobody. Every one of those reservations, of course, must come before the Senate, and the quickest way is to bring them out on the treaty from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I was taking the quickest way. It does not commit anybody on either side to the reservations which were voted on. The ratification resolution must come before the Senate and will come before the Senate. All I want to do is to shorten the road, and I shall adhere to my motion in that respect. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he agrees with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that the resolution of ratification, which was reconsidered and laid on the table, and which we now have taken off the table, was not the resolution of unqualified ratification without any reservations?

Mr. LODGE. I have not looked into that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is my recollection; and if that is correct, the motion which I suggest would be the proper course to put it in the committee, where we can agree upon the reservations that we desire to attach to it.

Mr. LODGE. The point of difference is a very simple one. I want to bring the treaty back here with the reservations. If the Senator wants to take it to the committee, the committee can bring it out with the reservations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin is correct, the motion offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] can not be accurate, because it refers to reservations when there were no reservations at all.

Mr. LENROOT. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts relates to the treaty and not to the reservations; and, of course, it is in order to attach any instructions that we may see fit. It is not the resolution of ratification to which the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts refers but it is to the treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but the resolution of ratification having reservations in it was not reconsidered.

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have only voted to reconsider the resolution of ratification that contained no reservations.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; I beg the Senator's pardon. The motion to reconsider the resolution to ratify with the reservations was rejected; it was tabled.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I suggest that the Senator make his motion merely a general motion to recommit, without any instructions whatever.

Mr. LODGE. I have been trying to explain the situation; but if the Senator thinks it is desirable to send the treaty back to the Committee on Foreign Relations and let them consider it as they did in the original case, I can not object. It will, however, cause delay.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I assume that the committee will report the treaty back with such reservations as the chairman of the committee favors. If the chairman of the committee is in favor of reporting it back with reservations which have heretofore been reported, I assume that it will come back in that form or in such form as will be satisfactory to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. If it is left open to the committee, the committee will bring back such reservations as they determine on. My object, as I have repeated again and again, is to get the subject which we are going to discuss and going to act upon, which is the reservations, as everybody knows, before the Senate as quickly as possible, and I think I have taken the shortest way to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely want to say that, in my opinion, considering the parliamentary situation as it exists, there is nothing inconsistent in the acts of those of us on this side of the Chamber in supporting the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. It is well understood that the object is to bring the entire subject matter back to the Senate for consideration, and that it is expected that amendments will be offered by the Senator from Massachusetts himself to the reservations that it is contemplated will be reported with the resolution of ratification. In that view of the matter, I think we may very well end this debate and proceed to adopt the motion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have a suggestion to make which I think might meet the approval of the Senator from Massachusetts. Everyone on this side and all of the friends of the treaty on the other side desire that the treaty go back to the Committee on Foreign Relations. They also favor that portion of the resolution which suggests that the treaty be reported back immediately. Some of us upon this side, however, do not feel as if we want to commit ourselves in favor of instructing the committee to report back the reservations. The question is capable of division. Let us vote first upon that part of the resolution that directs that the matter be referred to the committee with instructions to report immediately. Everyone will vote for that. Then let us simply take a viva voce vote upon the other question; that is to say, to return it with the reservations theretofore reported. Why would not that be the shortest way?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can reach his purpose by moving to strike out the words to which he objects.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have already made such a motion; but, in view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I am willing to withdraw the motion to amend, and simply ask that the question proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts be divided, so that we may have a straight vote on each clause.

Mr. LODGE. How will the Senator divide it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask, then, that we first vote upon this language:

I move to recommit to the Committee on Foreign Relations the treaty of peace with Germany—

Then second—together with the reservations adopted by the Senate and the resolution of ratification—

And then finally—together with the said reservations and the ratifying resolution.

Mr. LODGE. That is not dividing it; that is amending it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I am simply dividing it.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would be a great deal better to take a vote on an amendment. The Senator can reach his purpose by an amendment; that is the simplest way. What difference does it make, so long as the Senator gets a separate vote?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it is rather immaterial. I was seeking to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and I thought perhaps it would facilitate matters.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was not quite in accord with my idea. My idea was to have a vote upon the entire resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, except that portion which directs the Foreign Relations Committee to return the reservations; a vote on the entire resolution to refer the whole subject matter, just as the Senator has it, with instructions to report immediately; and then the Senate vote——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I point out that the danger in that proceeding would be that the controversy will be relegated to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where it may continue for many months, whereas it is the purpose of those who are promoting this motion, on both sides of the Chamber, to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate and to settle it as speedily as possible.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am sure that Senators will understand that if the Committee on Foreign Relations is instructed to report immediately, they can only report the reservations which the Senate acted upon. If the committee is expected to enter into a series of roll calls to modify the reservations that the Senate agreed upon and which were incorporated in the resolution of ratification, it will be an interminable task in the committee. There is no use instructing the committee to report forthwith or immediately, which means right now, or, at the latest, to-morrow morning, unless the Senators expect the committee to report back the reservations, which everybody agrees are going to be the basis of negotiations, with a view of modification. If those reservations, which are known as the Lodge reservations, are reported back here, the proceeding has succeeded in its purpose. We shall have gotten rid of the cloture rule, and both sides, and those who have practically exhausted their time under the cloture rule, will have an opportunity to discuss the modifications proposed. That is what is coming, anyway. So I do not see any objection to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts as it stands, to report forthwith, with the reservations that were agreed to by the Senate. If it is the wish of the Senate to change those reservations, we can do it when the treaty gets here. It will go to the Committee of the Whole, as I understand, will it not, Mr. President; and in Committee of the Whole amendments as well as reservations will be in order, will they not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So the whole thing comes up de novo before the Senate when it once gets out of the committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it seems to me that when we all agree as to the exact thing we ought to do, we ought to be able to agree as to how to do it. There is not much use to shy at shadows. As I understand, the Senator from Massachusetts desires to restore the parliamentary status which prevailed when the resolution was perfected in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate; and I believe that unanimous consent should be granted to restore that parliamentary status. That, as I understand, is what will be accomplished when the treaty goes to the committee and comes back. I see the point the Senator is trying to arrive at. Senators on this side do not object; they merely object to the method of arriving at it. It seems to me if the Senator would prefer a request to restore that parliamentary situation it might be granted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the plain and sensible way to reach the object we are all trying to attain is through the motion I have made, which was carefully considered, and I should like a vote on the motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We withdraw all amendments, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the motion be stated.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Mr. LODGE moves to recommit to the Committee on Foreign Relations the treaty of peace with Germany, together with the reservations adopted by the Senate and the resolution of ratification, with instructions to report the treaty back immediately, together with the said reservations and the ratifying resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate begin the consideration of the calendar at No. 341.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

Mr. NORRIS. I could not hear the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent to begin the consideration of the calendar with Order of Business No. 341.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that where the Senate left off when the calendar was last under consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection.

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota objects. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. Res. 76) defining a peace treaty which shall assure to the people of the United States the attainment of the ends for which they entered the war and declaring the policy of our Government to meet fully obligations to ourselves and to the world was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1448) for the relief of Jacob Nice was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 172) for the selection of a special committee to investigate the administration of the office of the Alien Property Custodian was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that that resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2978) to establish additional fish-cultural subsidiary stations in the State of Michigan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2773) for the relief of Ethel Proctor was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2785) to provide aid from the United States for the several States in prevention and control of drug addiction and the care and treatment of drug addicts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3224) relating to the creation in the Army of the United States of the grade of lieutenant general was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 215) providing that whenever the United States becomes a member of the League of Nations this Government should present to the council or the assembly of the league the state of affairs in Ireland and the right of its people to self-government was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

The bill (S. 2692) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. May we have the bill read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has heretofore been read in full and amended.

Mr. GRONNA. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to explain the bill to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. That is all I ask, to have the bill explained or to have it read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under the present law if a man in the State of the Senator from North Dakota or any other State wishes to bring suit against the Government on a claim, if the claim involves more than $10,000, he must come to Washington, employ a lawyer, and try the case here. This bill allows him to try it in his own State if the amount involved is less than $100,000; that is all the bill does.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator what the amount is now under the present law?

Mr. OVERMAN. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. GRONNA. And this makes the limit $100,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. If the claim involves an amount over $10,000 the claimant must now come to Washington to try it. This bill increases the amount to $100,000. Under the law now, I repeat, if a man has a claim for over $10,000 he has got to come to Washington to bring his suit. This bill provides that if he has a claim as much as $100,000 he may sue in his own State.

Mr. GRONNA. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN A. WINCHELL.

The bill (S. 1374) for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws Stephen A. Winchell, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and of Second Company, Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Second Company, Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, on the 5th day of September, 1865; but that no pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL SUBSIDIARY STATIONS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to return to Calendar No. 172, to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected. He has just informed me that he has no objection to that bill and is willing to withdraw his objection to its consideration; and unless some other Senator objects, I should like to have the bill considered now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $50,000 for the establishment of two or more additional fish-cultural subsidiary stations in the State of Michigan, including the purchase of sites, construction of buildings and equipment at some suitable points to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce, and for the improvement and equipment of existing subsidiary stations in the State of Michigan; but provides that before any final steps shall be taken for the construction of such stations the State of Michigan, through appropriate legislative action, shall concede to the United States the right to conduct fish hatching and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that the Commissioner of Fisheries of the United States may consider necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ETHEL PROCTOR.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] also objected to Calendar No. 196, being the bill (S. 2773) for the relief of Ethel Proctor, when it was reached in regular order. The Senator from Utah has informed me that he will withdraw his objection to that bill, and I ask that the Senate return to it and consider it now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been considered, and the amendment reported by the committee has been agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 6750) to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1233) to repeal an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," and the act amendatory thereof, was announced as next in order. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary adversely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. FRANCE. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3090) to repeal the espionage act was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FRANCIS M. ATHERTON.

The bill (S. 2614) for the relief of Francis M. Atherton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws Francis M. Atherton shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States as a member of the First Battery Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery on the 15th day of March, 1862, and to have been honorably discharged from the same on the 1st day of February, 1863, and to have been mustered into the service of the United States as an unassigned recruit on the 19th day of December, 1863, and to have been honorably discharged from the same on the 9th day of March, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGES IN NAMES OF VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 3620) to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to change the names of vessels was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN M. WILLEY.

The bill (S. 2707) for the relief of Ellen M. Willey, widow of Owen S. Willey, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws the late Owen S. Willey, who served in the United States Navy from July 11, 1860, to April 16, 1863, as an acting master's mate, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the naval service of the United States as an acting master's mate on April 16, 1863, provided that no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know whether there is anyone here who can explain the bill or not. I notice that the report says:

Under date of August 4, 1908, this department certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that the naval service of Mr. Willey was not creditable.

That is all that is stated in the report, and that could mean almost anything. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ISAIAH STEPHENS.

The bill (S. 848) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will refrain from objecting to the consideration of this bill. Does the Senator insist upon his objection?

Mr. SMOOT. From the report I do not see why the Government of the United States should pay this amount of money.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the report of the committee, which went into this matter very carefully and very fully, was unanimous to the effect that this man was entitled to this reimbursement. It is a debt that seems to be justly due him. I hope the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection and let the Senate pass upon the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the report made by Mr. J. C. Koons, Acting Postmaster General, I can not see why the Government of the United States should pay this money. The Government was not lax in any way. The loss was entirely due to the carelessness of the postmaster.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I disagree with the Senator entirely about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will read the report, if the Senator wishes, and let the Senate decide about it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand, then, the Senator is willing to let the matter come before the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I shall object to the consideration of the bill to-day under the report that has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator is going to object, the bill might as well go over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then there is no use in discussing it further to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3066) to provide for the incorporation of cooperative associations in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. KING] asked me to request that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ELLIS B. MILLER.

The bill (S. 1661) for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller was announced as next in order.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the report states that—

This measure was considered in the Sixty-fourth Congress—Senate bill S. 7106—and received the favorable recommendation of the major general commandant of the Marine Corps at that time, and the accompanying letter of Brig. Gen. Charles T. Long, United States Marine Corps, dated September 5, 1919, sets forth the facts, and is submitted as a part of this report.

That letter is not in this report; and, unless some Senator can explain it in detail, I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3109) to amend section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1455) for the relief of John L. O'Mara was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2954) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Albert F. Smith, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3152) for the relief of George W. Mellinger was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Adolph F. Hitchler was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1713) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to investigate and report upon the available sources of water supply for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over. We have passed a bill with an amendment or rider to take care of that item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM E. JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 683) for the relief of William E. Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, to reimburse William E. Johnson, former chief special officer and special disbursing agent, for the expenditure made by him under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the defense of Juan Cruz, a noncommissioned officer engaged in the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians, for the payment of which no appropriation was available, there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,839.95.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARLOW AVELLINA.

The bill (H. R. 5665) for the relief of Carlow Avellina was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE B. GATES.

The resolution (S. Res. 262) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 2675) to compensate George B. Gates for the infringement of his letters patent by the United States was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2675) entitled "A bill to compensate George B. Gates for the infringement of his letters patent by the United States," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2822) making available additional moneys for the reclamation fund, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, of course I should like very much to see that bill passed, but I know we can not pass it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I therefore ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

J. B. WATERMAN.

The bill (S. 2554) for the relief of J. B. Waterman was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not had time to read this report, and I should like the Senator introducing the bill to explain the details of it—whether the Government was at fault or whether the postmaster was at fault.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, this is a very simple case, where a village postmaster in Ohio was robbed of $483 in stamps belonging to the Government. The only question raised against the bill, and one which the committee thought to be invalid, was a report by one of the post-office inspectors that the safe in which the stamps were deposited was not kept in perfect order; but the testimony adduced in the hearing by affidavits shows that the safe was more difficult to unlock because of its imperfect order than when it might have been in perfect order. Moreover, it is easy to understand that the possessor of a safe in a village finds it very difficult to keep it in such order as would be becoming in the case of a bank in a city, with facilities at hand; and, quite apart from these things, I know from personal knowledge that there are experts who can open any safe that was ever invented. I know that we have an attorney in my home city who can step into any county treasury in the State of Ohio, whenever they find themselves in trouble, and unlock the safe, no matter whether the trouble is because of a lost combination or some mishap to the mechanism of the safe.

So I really think that the Government ought to be considerate of this postmaster. I am not saying that this belongs to the legal qualifications of the attorney to whom I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought the Senator was.

Mr. HARDING. I am only citing a very well-known fact, that there is no safe that is wholly secure against the operations of burglars. That is well established. There is no question but that the postmaster had been duly diligent in safeguarding the property of the Government, and he ought to be reimbursed for the loss sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is not a word from the Post Office Department in this report. It does not give any details whatever, and I can not understand why such a communication is not incorporated in the report.

Mr. HARDING. If the Senator from Utah will read the report, he will see that there are numerous affidavits on file.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, of course we can get affidavits on almost any question we desire from people who are not interested in the matter; but the Government will have to pay this money if the bill is passed, and we ought to know at least why the Government should pay it.

Mr. HARDING. I am sorry that the Senator from Utah places such a low valuation on the affidavits of my fellow-citizens in Ohio.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not only in Ohio; it is in every State in the Union, as far as affidavits are concerned.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I respect the Senator from Utah very much for his watchfulness, and I hope it will ever continue; but I should think it was attention unnecessarily given to interfere with the Government reimbursing one of its employees who has been robbed under these circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator whether the Government of the United States thinks there was no negligence on the part of this postmaster?

Mr. HARDING. I explained when I first took the floor that the inspector made the report that the safe was not in perfect order, and the Post Office Department for that reason has advised against the payment of the claim; but the affidavits show that the safe in imperfect order was more difficult to open than it was in perfect order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over to-day, Mr. President.

Mr. HARDING. Do I understand the Senator to object?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DAVIS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The bill (S. 2861) for the relief of the Davis Construction Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not ask that that bill go over. This is a very just claim. The fact is that this is a claim to itself, as it were. All of the claims of this character for buildings that were erected under the Secretary of the Treasury have been provided for and relief has been given them. This is a case where a small contractor contracted to build a Post Office Department equipment shops buildings, and, owing to the emergencies of the war, he could not get freight by car and had to haul a great deal of the gravel and sand by team. On account of the increased cost of material commandeered by the Government, the cost of this building was such that the principal in this company will have to sell his house if the bill is not passed.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator to state the amount involved?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The amount involved is $26,000.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will let it go over for this time, I should like to look into it a little further. I am a member of the committee, but I was not present when this bill was reported out.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The bill was unanimously reported; and I think the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], who was one of the Senators present, recognizes that that is the case. It has been put back once; and the home of the president of this company—a small contractor, an honorable man—will have to be sold in order to make up this deficiency unless the bill is passed. I hope the Senator will let it go through. It is perfectly just.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I want to substantiate what the Senator has just said. I went over this matter very carefully, and I consider it a very just claim, and one that ought to be paid.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well; I will withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to receive fully itemized and verified claims and reimburse the Davis Construction Co., contractor for the Post Office Department equipment shops building, erected at Fifth and W Streets NE., Washington, D. C., under the supervision of the Postmaster General, for losses due directly to increased costs due either, first, to increased cost of labor and materials, or, second, to delay on account of the action of the United States Priority Board or other governmental activities, or, third, to commandeering by the United States Government of plants or materials shown to the Secretary of the Treasury to have been sustained by it in the fulfillment of such contract by reason of war conditions alone. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to submit from time to time estimates for appropriations to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That no claim for such reimbursement shall be paid unless filed with the Treasury Department within three months after the passage of this act: And provided further, That in no case shall the contractor be reimbursed to an extent greater than is sufficient to cover its actual increased cost in fulfilling its contract, exclusive of any and all profits to such contractor: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at the beginning of each session thereof the amount of each expenditure and the facts on which the same is based.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3391) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma," approved February 8, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 433), was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee is not in the Chamber at this time. I ask that the bill may go over until he returns.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROSEBUD INDIAN RESERVATION, S. DAK.

The bill (H. R. 396) to authorize the payment of certain amounts for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3477) to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 547) authorizing the enlistment of non-English-speaking citizens and aliens was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States," approved August 1, 1894, as provides that "in time of peace no person (except an Indian) who can not speak, read, and write the English language" be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

The resolution (S. Res. 56) seeking a convention between the United States and certain Central American countries for the protection of migratory birds was considered by the Senate and agreed to.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3746) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not do anything with that bill before 2 o'clock. I therefore ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3747) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not dispose of these pension bills before 2 o'clock. That is the reason why I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6639) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For the same reason, I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7775) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that that bill go over for the same reason.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3395) to discontinue the improvement to provide a channel extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3396) to discontinue the construction of a dry dock at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 285) authorizing the subcommittee on Naval Affairs under resolution No. 62 agreed to June 6, 1919, to employ such counsel and clerical assistants as it may deem necessary was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1699.

RECONSIDERATION OF THE TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, earlier in the day, when the treaty was before the Senate, I made a point of order against the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. While the point of order was made and decided by the Chair and on an appeal the Chair was sustained, I was not permitted to make any remarks on the subject. I desire to take this occasion to put some matter into the RECORD, for any student who may in the future want to know what the parliamentary situation was, and so that he may realize what kind of a rape the Senate of the United States committed on general parliamentary law, if he wants to find it. I know, of course, that it will have no effect upon the Senate, but there may be a time when some one will want to write a history that is truthful upon just what occurred.

The Senator from Massachusetts moved to suspend a certain rule, the first paragraph of Rule XIII, which relates to the reconsideration of motions. That motion prevailed, and hence the rule was suspended. That means that as far as the first paragraph of Rule XIII is concerned it was just the same as though the Senate had never adopted such a rule, and hence we were considering the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to reconsider the treaty the same as though we had no rule on the subject.

In that case, Mr. President, no one will deny that the general parliamentary law applies, and I want to insert in the RECORD now, and I defy anyone with any authority to contradict it, that under general parliamentary law, without any rule whatever by the body, it is not in order to reconsider any proposition the second time. Neither is it in order to make a motion to reconsider, under the general parliamentary law, after the time has elapsed that has elapsed since the treaty was disposed of last November.

First, I wish to call attention to the RECORD. The treaty was voted on upon the 19th day of November, 1919. On that same day a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of ratification was rejected. That motion prevailed. It was reconsidered and then acted on again, and on the same day, and defeated again. So that one motion to reconsider had been made and under general parliamentary law, as I shall show by the highest authority in the world, that absolutely disposed of it for all time. It was dead, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] publicly said, after we had disposed of it; and there was not any way to get it here again unless the President of the United States resubmitted it, which I concede he had a right to do at any time.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad the Senator from Nebraska has placed these facts in the RECORD. My recollection with reference to what transpired in the Senate is exactly as the Senator has outlined it. If the Senator will permit me, I want to say that although I might have been in favor of voting for the general proposition, which I was not, I would not violate the rules of the Senate and vote in support of the motion which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made this morning, knowing as I did that it was not in order.

Mr. NORRIS. On the 19th day of November, the day we disposed of the motion to reconsider and disposed of the treaty, the session of Congress adjourned without day. That was not this session; it was a preceding session. We adjourned without day. From the 19th day of November, 1919, when that session had passed out of existence—not only the Senate but the entire Congress—nothing, of course, was done until to-day.

Let me say that the proposition in parliamentary law to reconsider a motion is an American proposition. It does not exist in England. It never existed before America developed it. It was born in America. It has grown up in parliamentary bodies in the United States until the law particularly on this point is well recognized and well known, but we can get no precedent going back of America, because the motion to reconsider originated in America.

One of the greatest authorities on parliamentary law, recognized by all students of the subject, is Cushing. I desire to read from section 1264 of Mr. Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wonder if my colleague, who lays such emphasis upon the fact that Congress adjourned sine die in November last, has had in mind Rule XXXVII, subdivision 2 of which reads as follows:

Treaties transmitted by the President to the Senate for ratification shall be resumed at the second or any subsequent session of the same Congress at the stage in which they were left at the final adjournment of the session at which they were transmitted.

Mr. NORRIS. I am acquainted with that rule, and I am also acquainted with the rule which provides that any bill pending at a session of Congress can be taken up at the next session of the same Congress. I mentioned the fact as to a motion to reconsider made at one session principally to emphasize the time that has elapsed, and I am going to show by the authorities that one week would have been enough, that one day would have been enough, to exclude it. The rule the Senator has read has nothing whatever to do with the question of reconsideration. If the treaty had not been finally acted on last session of Congress and had only been disposed of to-day or yesterday, then the rule he has read would apply. It is like a bill disposed of last session. It would be too late now to reconsider it. Our rule which we suspended provides that it must be on the same day or on either of the two succeeding legislative days, but under general parliamentary law we could not go even that far. So when we suspended the rule we got into another rule of general parliamentary law that was more drastic than the one we suspended.

1264. The inconvenience—

Mr. Cushing says—

sometimes resulting from the practical application of the rule above stated—

He has been discussing the motion to rescind before the motion to reconsider had been discovered in parliamentary law. The only method they had to take up a question that had once been decided was to rescind the motion by which the previous action had been taken, and Mr. Cushing was discussing that:

The inconvenience sometimes resulting from the practical application of the rule above stated has led to the introduction into the parliamentary practice of this country of the motion for reconsideration, which, while it recognizes and upholds the rule in its ancient strictness, yet allows a deliberative assembly for sufficient reasons to relieve itself from the embarrassment which might attend the strict enforcement of the rule in a particular case—

That is the rule to rescind to which he is referring—so that it has now come to be a common practice in all our legislative and other deliberative assemblies, and may consequently be regarded as a principle of the common parliamentary law of this country, to reconsider a vote already passed, whether affirmatively or negatively.

In the note he says:

This motion, though parliamentary in its character, is entirely American in its origin, and one of the few motions known only in our legislative assemblies. The nearest approximation to it that I can find in the proceedings of the House of Commons is contained in the ninth volume of the journals of that body, and inserted in the note to paragraph 1257. Neither does it depend for its existence on the rules and orders of any assembly in which it prevails, though it is commonly regulated by them—

As it is in the Senate by the rule which we suspended.

It appears to have been in frequent use in the Congress of the Confederation, though it is not mentioned in the rules and orders of that body; and it was in common use in the House of Representatives of the United States before any rules on that subject were adopted.

In section 1273 Mr. Cushing, going on with the discussion, says what I shall read. I am omitting that part of it which has no reference to motions to reconsider, but he is considering the principle involved in the rule and has enumerated several of them, all of which would be interesting, but they do not have any bearing on the particular point raised by my point of order. In section 1273 Mr. Cushing said:

The third effect of this principle is—that when one motion to reconsider has been made and decided, either in the affirmative or negative, or is still pending, no other motion to reconsider the same question is admissible; but if the question since its first reconsideration has been so altered by amendments as to be no longer the same, it may again be reconsidered.

I want the Senate to note this—

In other words, if you will follow out the reasoning and follow the reasoning of Mr. Cushing in it, you will find that unless that rule be adopted, then a motion to reconsider is simply a means by which endless discussion and endless consideration may be given to any proposition; there is no end to it. So without regard to our rule that we have had in the Senate which we suspended, under general parliamentary law when a question has once been reconsidered it can not be again reconsidered. So on that point my point of order was good. Now I will take up another one, as to time.

One of the points I am making is that from November 19, 1919, until now, with one session adjourned and Congress adjourning from day to day, it is absolutely contrary to parliamentary law that the motion should now be made. I want to read from Robert's Rules of Order, another well-recognized American authority. The subject is "Reconsider," and section 27, on page 73, reads as follows:

It is in order at any time, even when another member has the floor, or while the assembly is voting on the motion to adjourn, during the day on which a motion has been acted upon, or the next succeeding day, to move to "reconsider the vote" and have such motion "entered on the record," but it can not be considered while another question is before the assembly.

So that under general parliamentary law as laid down by Robert, bearing out entirely what Cushing says, and which I might also cite if I wanted to take the time, the general parliamentary law is, as I said, more strict than even the rule of the Senate which we suspended and which provides that this motion can be made on one of the two succeeding days. Robert says that it must be made on the same day the motion you want to consider was acted on or the next day. You can enter the motion even while they are voting on a motion to adjourn; that is, you could not consider it then, but you could enter the motion. The motion once entered can be considered after the lapse of that time.

On the other point I made awhile ago, let me read what Robert said on that, on page 74:

No question can be twice reconsidered unless it was amended after its first reconsideration.

There you are again. We have now reconsidered this proposition twice without any change after months and months and months have expired.

As I said at the beginning, I simply wanted to get this into the permanent RECORD of the Senate, so that it might be known by those who take the pains to look at it in the future that this was laid before the Senate and that notwithstanding the fact that it suspended this rule, the Senate absolutely violated a rule that controlled the Senate after that suspension took place. That is so plain that no man can misconstrue it. It is a rule that has no exception, a rule that has never before been denied by any legislative body in the United States.

Mr. President, if this were the end of it I would not care so much about it, but we are living now in a time when we are complaining of the disregard of law and of rules. We are living now in a time when of all other times we ought to be circumspect in our conduct and in our obedience to law and to order. To have the Senate give to the world an illustration of nullification of a plain parliamentary law that they have promised to uphold and sustain is simply to give encouragement in this day of wild speculation and wild reasoning to those who want to violate other laws and those who want to overthrow all law. It is to give encouragement to every Bolshevist, every revolutionist, and he will be able to point to the Senate of the United States and say there is a precedent where Senators even violated their own law in absolute defiance of all law and without the opportunity of any man on that floor being allowed at the time to raise his voice in criticism of such conduct.

You have the votes. I do not care much about the result. But, Mr. President, it is the exercise of a power that is bound to bring fruit in the end that will be damaging, perhaps not to us but to our children.

Let me read what George Washington said about things of that kind. I have read it before, but I want to read it again. Even though the Senator says in his own conscience we violated the law, but we did it for a good purpose, even though he is so wrapped up in the sacredness of the treaty and thinks it is going to bring so much good to humanity—I think he is wrong about that, but I concede his right to feel that way, and he excuses his conduct on the proposition that the end justifies the means—you establish a precedent. The whole civilization of the world has been built up on precedent. You establish a precedent in high places, and then you put the screws of the law on the poor devil who violates a law not half as sacred probably as the one that you thrust aside in trying to bring about what you consider the proper course to take. It is a usurpation of authority, Mr. President. George Washington said:

But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Thus, Mr. President, calling attention in better language than I can to the fact that we have to-day established a precedent that will give a good excuse for many an anarchist and many a revolutionist and many a Bolshevist to follow his illegal and inhuman conduct and take the law into his own hands; in other words, if the Senate of the United States does not respect law, how can we expect the ordinary citizen to do so?

MILITARY VERSUS REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the first war against militarism was won by our boys in France last year. The second war against militarism in our country is about to be fought out in the United States Congress.

The introduction of the Army reorganization bill of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] makes the issue quite clear. The question is, Shall America be ruled by a military oligarchy more powerful, more expensive, more subversive of freedom than the German military oligarchy ever was? Or shall we continue to be ruled under our Constitution by the representatives of a democratic people? The issue is unmistakable. The lines are clearly drawn. The fight is on.

If the Congress passes the Wadsworth Army reorganization bill, militarism of the German type will have removed its abiding place from the land of the Hohenzollerns to a home in the United States, formerly and still proudly called "the land of the free and the home of the brave," and our participation in the German war will have been in vain. If the bill is defeated, militarism must only be a specter for a long time, because no nation on earth has the means now to resuscitate it except the United States.

It appears to be the common belief that all the Wadsworth bill does is to establish universal compulsory military training. While this is done, there are many other provisions of the bill, like giving the Chief of Staff war powers, abolition of the various State National Guards, giving the Chief of Staff power to build up a civilian organization, and fixing an enormous increase in expenditures for the War Department, any one of which largely overshadows the important matter of compulsory service or conscription. Virtually every provision of this remarkable bill is a blow aimed at peace and liberty. However, at this time I shall only deal with the universal compulsory service or conscription in time of peace.

REENACTMENT OF CONSCRIPTION LAW.

Section 51 of the Wadsworth bill, reported favorably by a majority of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, provides:

All male citizens of the United States (excluding residents of Alaska and the insular possessions) and all male persons who reside therein and who have declared their intention to become citizens, other than persons excepted by this act, shall, upon attaining the age of 18 years, or within three years thereafter, be subject to military or naval training, and shall be inducted into the Army or Navy of the United States for this purpose alone, and shall be subject to training therein for a period of four months and for such further time, not exceeding 10 days, as may be reasonably necessary for enrollment, mobilization, and demobilization.

Section 57 of the bill makes the provision of the conscription act of May 18, 1917, "relative to the registration, examination, classification, exception, exemption, and induction into the service," applicable to this act. All of the great, expensive machinery of the conscription act which was brought into being by the war and used in that war is again brought into force.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. When I get through I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator, if he will wait for just a few moments.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is thus seen that under the terms of this bill the conscription law made necessary by the war with Germany, which act was repealed by the act of June 15, 1917, so as to cease to have effect four months after the close of the war, or after our forces were brought home, is reenacted as a permanent peace policy. We actually provided for the repeal of the conscription act at almost the beginning of the war—and less than one month after the passage of the conscription law—and yet more than a year after the war is over it is proposed by the majority to reenact it.

It is estimated that about 1,000,000 young men arrive at the age of 18 years every year, who will be affected by this act. All of the local and district boards created under the act, and all of the expensive machinery, and all of the penalties created by the original draft act will be continued should the proposed bill become the law.

I do not favor this provision for compulsory universal military training, and my reasons may be stated under three general heads, as follows:

NEITHER A WISE NOR AN AMERICAN POLICY.

I believe that the passage of such a bill would not be a wise military policy for the United States. Such a policy is in opposition to the traditions and to the history of our country. It is in opposition to the habits and to the customs of our people. It is not necessary to our national safety. It may be subversive of our democratic institutions. Since the birth of our Nation we have been engaged in six great wars. We have come out victorious in every one of them. Our armies have never been defeated. Our people are unaccustomed to militarism as a peace policy. It is contrary to the genius and happiness of our people to be under military domination. It is contrary to our well-defined views as to personal liberty and to freedom of conduct to be constantly under the supervision of military officials. Nor is it necessary to our national safety. We can never be in any immediate danger. I am not one of those who do not believe in military preparedness. I believe in military preparedness. I believe in having a Navy as large as that of England or any other nation—large enough to protect our shores from any enemy that may seek to invade them. I believe in having a well-balanced and an effective Army, that can be easily made larger, and I believe in having always such military-training schools in our country as will give us the first order of military officers whenever they are needed, and I believe in having well-organized National Guards in each State; but with two great oceans standing between us and any enemy that is likely to invade us, surely it is not necessary for our perfect defense to have the largest military force ever established in all the earth always in readiness.

Then, on the question of policy, the institution of universal military training, carrying with it the immense central military organization that will be necessary to the fulfillment of such a scheme, would be dangerous to our civil institutions. If kept up it would be just a question of time when the military authorities in this country would be supreme. One or two more foreign wars would turn us from a Republic into a military oligarchy. I am satisfied with the Constitution and the Government of the United States as they are. I do not wish to see them changed into a military oligarchy or to any other kind of government.

UNIVERSAL COMPULSORY TRAINING RENDERS GIANT MILITARY ORGANIZATION NECESSARY.

It must be plain to every student of the subject that in order to train a million men a year in an army that is yearly increasing by nearly that number more that the central military organization must be increased enormously. We must have a vast increase in the General Staff, a vast increase in general officers—Regular and Reserve—a vast increase of equipment and material, a vast increase in the number of camps and Army posts. In other words, it will be necessary to have the full quota of officers for an army of 1,000,000 men now and for 5,000,000 men within seven or eight years, and it will be necessary to have a full equipment for an army of this enormous number of men ready for war at any time.

Should this be established the dangers to our Republic would be enormous. No Congress would be independent of the will of this great centralized and highly organized force. No President would be unmindful of the power and influence of such a mighty military organization. No court would willingly offend such a power. The General Staff would soon become more powerful than all the present departments of government combined. The result must inevitably be a military oligarchy.

It was this kind of military oligarchy, but on a smaller scale, that the United States undertook to crush when she went to war with Germany. It was this kind of a military oligarchy that the free sons of America did crush in that war, for whatever attempts may be made to muddle the matter, the plain fact of the German war is that the hitherto untrained troops of America were better fighters and did overcome the troops of Germany, which has had a system of compulsory training for over 100 years.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield, of course.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Do I understand the Senator to take the position that the universal military service provided in the bill which he is discussing is compulsory service?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do; and, of course, when the bill is read there can not possibly be any difference of opinion on that subject, because the provisions of the draft act are reestablished in the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator believe that under the provisions of the bill those who come under it are subject to duty except when the President shall declare an emergency to exist?

Mr. McKELLAR. They are subject to call for duty when they become 18 years of age and at any time before reaching 21.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not wish to delay the Senator, but as I understand the bill it provides simply for the training of young men for four months during their eighteenth year, and they are not subject to compulsory service unless there is an emergency and unless they are called. They are not part of the organization of the Army of the United States, and therefore, while the bill provides for compulsory training, it does not provide for compulsory service. The Senator has not noted the distinction.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will examine the bill, he will find that he is wholly in error about it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I read for the information of the Senator from page 76, which provides that—shall be liable to call for military services of the President only when Congress shall declare that a national emergency exists.

The organized reserves—

And those in training are a part of the reserves—

Mr. McKELLAR. That does not at all contradict the position that I take in regard to the matter.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEW. I was interested in what the Senator said a moment ago when he expressed the belief, as I understood him, that we must have an army capable of rapid expansion. Is that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recollect having used any such words.

Mr. NEW. I understood the Senator to say that we should have a force that could be mobilized quickly and largely expanded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think if the Senator will wait and hear what I have to say he will be in a better position to interrupt me in regard to the matters concerning which we differ. I do not think the Senator was present during all of my remarks, or, if so, he did not catch exactly what I said; I am quite sure he did not.

Mr. NEW. I have been present, and I thought I understood the Senator to the effect I have indicated.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator misunderstood me on that proposition.

In going to war—and I am talking about the German war—Congress promised the people of the United States that by the sacrifice of their sons and by the contribution of their wealth and of their services, that German militarism would be destroyed forever, and that when the war was over the armies of the United States would be disbanded and those that composed such armies would go back to the peaceful pursuits of life and that the military armaments of the world would be reduced. We did not promise that we would crush German militarism in Germany and then fasten the same kind of militarism, except a larger one, upon the people of the United States. I believe that if the people of the United States had dreamed that this would be done, they would have never permitted Congress to have gone into this war.

THE COST PROHIBITIVE.

But regardless of the merits of compulsory training, it is absolutely impossible—and I want Senators to listen carefully to this—for the United States to stand the gigantic cost of the bill as proposed.

The bill provides on its face in terms for 15,293 officers and 280,000 enlisted men. Generally speaking, a fair estimate of average cost of officers is $4,000 a year per officer. This would make $61,172,000 cost of officers. The estimated cost of the enlisted man is $1,800 each per year. By a simple calculation this would amount to $504,000,000. The combined cost would be $565,172,000. This is exclusive of officers of the Medical Corps, chaplains, professors, and warrant officers—whatever they may be; I believe they are noncommissioned officers or selected men to whom it is desired to give the salary of commissioned officers or something approximating such salary—in all amounting to about 3,000, and which will increase these figures about $12,000,000 more.

The President nominally, but the Chief of Staff, specifically, has the right under the terms of the bill to increase the Army 20 per cent. If this is done, this would make $98,971,000 more, or a total of $605,826,000. This does not include the additional cost which would ensue if he added 20 per cent to the most expensive arm, the Artillery, and reduced the most inexpensive arm, the Infantry. By thus proceeding such action would increase the Army cost by approximately $206,913,000 instead of $98,971,000. To this must be added the cost of training 1,000,000 young men four months in the year. Assuming that you could train them as economically as you could keep men in the Army, and it is very doubtful whether it could be done as cheaply, this would amount to $600 per man per year, being one-third of $1,800, and would add $600,000,000 for the Regular Army, and it would give a grand total of $1,276,143,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am sure the Senator wants to be accurate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure not only that I want to be accurate, but that I am very accurate. I will say to the Senator that I have taken the pains to present these figures to military authorities than whom I consider there are none better, and I am speaking upon military authority when I make these statements about the figures.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to state that if the Senator will read the hearings of the committee I think he will find that the committee and the subcommittee, taking nearly a year in the preparation of this bill, had before them the experts not only of the financial division of the War Department but of all of the branches, and that the best estimate and the maximum estimate which was made for the cost of the establishment as provided in this bill was between $450,000,000 and $500,000,000, and not six hundred and fifty-odd millions, as the Senator stated. Also the estimate of the number of men to be trained annually under the universal system of training was 600,000, and not a million men.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment and I will yield. All I can say in answer to that, in the first place, is that any testimony to the effect that there are not a million young men or a little more than a million young men becoming 18 years of age every year is based on ignorance of the figures given by the census. In the next place, I want to say that any person—I do not care who he is—that has made an estimate of the cost of this bill at $600,000,000, including the expenses of the Regular Army, has not come within 50 per cent of the mark.

I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from New Jersey to say that the estimate, according to the subcommittee's witnesses, was about $450,000,000?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Between $450,000,000 and $500,000,000 for the present establishment provided in this bill, outside of the universal military training. That was estimated for the first year at $134,000,000, and $94,000,000 three years afterwards. The maximum was $136,000,000 and the minimum $94,000,000, and by reason of the universal military training system devised in this bill we eventually expect to save on the cost of our Regular Army Establishment.

Mr. BORAH. What I was going to say was that if the estimate is $450,000,000, judging the future by the past $750,000,000 would be a very reasonable amount at which to fix the actual expense which will be attached to the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the committee were faithful to their duties, because I know that the chairman and others have given very careful study to the question. Basing it upon the present cost, and making allowances for all the underestimates of the past, I think they made a fairer calculation than the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BORAH. I was not referring to the committee's work. I am referring now to what the Senator says was the estimate of these authorities. He may travel through the estimates which have been made before Congress for the last 10 years, and he will find that the estimates generally are about 50 per cent of the actual expense.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. These estimates were based upon the calculation of the committee of the present cost of the service, and not entirely upon the estimates made by the War Department and the other departments relating to this subject heretofore. I want to say, further, that the committee have labored earnestly to give the Senate in this bill not only their best efforts but a very complete study of the whole situation, and not try to fool or lead the Senate into error in regard to the cost. The committee realize that the great question before the country at the present time is the cost of our Military and Naval Establishment. They realize that in this democracy we must bring the cost of our national defense to the lowest possible figure; but they also realize that it is necessary, in order to maintain our dignity and honor, to maintain an Army sufficient to protect this great population of 110,000,000 people.

The Senator from Tennessee probably wants to wipe out the Army. I do not know. I do not know what he proposes. He was not present at the hearings of this committee, although a member of the Military Affairs Committee; and now he is attacking——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just one moment. I want to say that I do not think matters that were brought up before the committee ought to be introduced into the debate on the floor of the Senate; and there was a very good reason why I was not before the committee. The investigation was conducted by a subcommittee, and I was not invited, and of course——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not wish to be discourteous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee further yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, wait one moment. I decline to yield to the Senator any further. His manner is such that I do not want to yield further at this time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to continue for a few moments. Then I will take great pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Utah, or any other Senator who desires courteously to interrupt me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield, and will proceed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, continuing, to this enormous sum, $605,000,000, the cost of the Regular Establishment, must be added the cost of training 1,000,000 young men four months in the year. Assuming that you could train them as economically as you could keep men in the Army, and it is very doubtful whether it could be done as cheaply, this would amount to $600 per man per year, being one-third of $1,800, and would add $600,000,000 for the Regular Army, and it would give a grand total of $1,276,143,000.

I must stop here long enough to remark that it is stated that we pay these boys a little less when we are training them, and we do under this proposal; but that expense is largely increased by the overhead charges for just four months in the year. Of course, we know that the overhead charge will be relatively larger for training men four months in the year than for training them the whole year, and we have to take that into consideration when we measure the cost of the men who are thus trained. I give these figures without fear of successful contradiction, because they have not only been given by Army authorities but they are according to the experience of our country. You can take any Army bill for the last eight years, since I have been here, and any Army appropriation bill that has been passed by Congress will absolutely guarantee the correctness of the figures that I have given.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Just for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to yield to the Senator from New Jersey. The Senator's manner is wholly improper, according to my judgment, and I decline to yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, a point of order. I should like to have the Senator explain what there is about my manner, or anything I have said, which is in any way discourteous to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If there is anything of the kind, I most certainly wish to disclaim it. I have no desire to have any personal feeling between the Senator and myself. I simply wanted to have the truth brought out in this debate, and I want to ask the Senator a question, and I appeal to him to allow me to interrupt him at the present time.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from New Jersey will ask a courteous question I shall be delighted to yield to him; but unless it is so I shall certainly decline.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I always try to be as courteous as I can, and the Senator has failed to point out where I have been discourteous. I should like to have him do it. I should like to ask the Senator what his authority is for the figures which he is stating.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have figures here from officers who have gone over them carefully and who are very much more familiar with them than I am.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What Army officers?

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to give the names of the officers. The Senator will find them in the published hearings. Why should I name certain officers when the Senator will find them in the hearings before the Senator's own subcommittee? The War Department is in favor of this bill, and it would not be fair to Army officers opposed to the bill for me to give their names. There are plenty of them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee further yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator state that some of the officers whose names appear in the hearings before the committee have given him these figures?

Mr. McKELLAR. Some of them have, and the Senator misunderstands and misconstrues and misinterprets the testimony of the officers who have testified before the committee. The facts do not warrant the conclusion reached or suggested in the questions submitted by the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Would the Senator object to giving the names of the officers who appeared at the hearing who are authority for the statements the Senator makes?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will let the Senator examine the hearings for himself. I am perfectly willing that he should examine the record.

This will give a grand total of $1,276,143,000 for the Army when universal training goes into effect. To this must be added at least one-half of the cost of the Air Service, or $50,000,000, if the Air Service bill should pass, and the majority reported it out at one time. It is true that they withdrew it; but if it passes we will have to add $50,000,000 more to that, which will amount to $1,326,143,100 for the Army next year.

The assertion that we can have compulsory training under the bill for $143,000,000 or $150,000,000 a year is an idle dream. I will say to the Senate that you not only could not have compulsory training for $150,000,000, but you could not get the necessary officers to train the men, with the necessary materials, with the necessary Army posts; you could not furnish those things for the $150,000,000 a year. It is going to cost, just as we know that it has always cost, so much on the average per man whenever you put a man into the Army for training or any other purpose. It is going to cost you about $1,800, reckoned by the year. Four months is one-third of a year, and it is going to cost not less than $600 for four months' training, and probably a great deal more when the time comes.

If the bill should be enacted into law, instead of costing something like a half million dollars, as has been suggested here on the floor to-day, it will cost nearer $1,500,000,000 when we come to pay for it. It may not be that we will appropriate for it in the Army appropriation bill, but we will have to pass deficiency bills, as we have been doing for years, to make up the deficit that must come.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. NEW. The Senator says that in case the bill for a separate department of air shall eventually become a law that will add $50,000,000 to the expense of the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. My understanding is that the estimate was $98,000,000.

Mr. NEW. If the rest of the figures that have been given to the Senator are as unreliable as those that he now quotes with reference to the Air Service, I am afraid that he is, to say the least, inaccurate.

Mr. McKELLAR. They could not be very much more inaccurate than the Senator's own bill, because the Senator had so little confidence in his own air bill that he withdrew its consideration from the Senate the other day before a vote came; and I imagine that the Senator's figures must have been a little inaccurate, or he would have gone ahead and tried to put his bill over.

Mr. NEW. So far as that goes, the bill for the separate department of air was not withdrawn for any such reason as the Senator from Tennessee ascribes.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I think it was withdrawn because the Senator realized that the Senate would not pass it. It was an immense increase in the expenditures of the Government, which can not be justified at this time. We will have to raise the taxes on the people if we continue to pile these immense appropriations upon the people of this country, and I think that is why it was withdrawn.

Mr. NEW and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in the first place, I still contend that the bill creating a department of air would have worked a very substantial reduction in the expenses of the Government for the Air Service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Maybe that is why the Senator had so much trouble with his bill. He proved to the Senate that it would work a reduction in expenditures, and perhaps the Senate did not believe in a reduction of expenditures, and for that reason did not pass his bill.

Mr. NEW. Well, that may be possible; but what I rose to ask was, if the Senator from Tennessee leaves the Army without an air service——

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am very much in favor of an air service.

Mr. NEW. The Senator does not wait until I ask my question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. NEW. I was going to add, if he leaves the Army without an air service unless the bill for the department of air is passed, as I understand, he simply leaves the Army without any estimate for air service and adds on $50,000,000 to the expenses in case the department of air bill is passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we would have to add on more than that if we have a separate department of air—very much more than that. However, that is a mere guess. The Senator will remember that we appropriated some six hundred and odd million dollars for the Air Service the first year of the war, and perhaps a billion the next year, and there are not many of us that know where that money ever went. The people of this country do not know where it went. So far as I am concerned, I am very much in favor of an air service; but I am unwilling, for my part, to vote another dollar for the Air Service unless we know that we are going to have aircraft and fliers.

Mr. NEW. I not only admit that we spent $640,000,000 for air service the first year, but I will assert that we spent twice that sum.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we spent a billion dollars the next year and got no service.

Mr. NEW. What I want to know is if the Senator makes no charge for the maintenance of an air service for the Army unless we are to have a separate department of air? He makes no estimate for it in the figures that he is giving us, but just says that he will add on $50,000,000 in case the department-of-air bill passes.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will wipe out his air service entirely, we will have a billion and one-quarter dollars appropriation for the next appropriation bill if this bill is passed. If the bill should be enacted into law, as I said, it will cost nearer one and one-half billion dollars than it would half a billion dollars. The actual cost is always greater than the estimate.

When we compare this gigantic sum—and I hope Senators will listen to this—for the entire military system with our compulsory military training in peace times, we can get some idea of what we propose to do under the Wadsworth universal-training bill. In round numbers Germany spent in 1907 for her entire military appropriation—universal training and all—$200,000,000. In 1908 she spent a like sum of $200,000,000; in 1909 also $200,000,000; and in 1910 and 1911 $200,000,000 each. In 1912 she spent $230,000,000, and in 1913, while preparing for war, she spent $360,000,000.

The very year the war began she had authorized an expenditure of but $210,000,000.

It is thus seen that we are going to expend for our Army during the ensuing year, if the bill passes, a sum more than four times as large as Germany ever spent in peace times for her great military system and more than seven times as much as she ever spent in any year of peace except that one when she was preparing for war. In other words, we will have, in order to establish this military system in this country, a system seven times as expensive as the German military autocracy had, and yet we fought the German war to strike down German militarism!

If this proposed military system is put in force, in 12 years it will cost more than the United States has paid out for the German war. Exclusive of what we loaned the Allies, the war has cost us about $18,000,000,000, according to some estimates. Our Army alone will cost this sum in just 12 years. It is the most ambitiously audacious and expensive military proposal in all history.

This expenditure, in face of the fact that we have 4,000,000 young men well trained and ready for service upon 10 days' notice, is, to my mind, the most monstrous proposition that was ever put before the American people. If they are willing for such a proposition at this time to go through, P. T. Barnum must have been right when he said that the American people loved to be humbugged, and I might add they loved to be taxed. Income and excess-profits taxes must be increased in order to pay the cost or bonds must be issued. I challenge the Republican majority, for they are responsible for legislation, to put this increased burden upon the American people. I challenge our Republican friends to put a demand for peace-time conscription in their platform to be made next June. I will also wager any of my Democratic brethren who differ with me on the proposal that it will never go into the San Francisco platform.

AMERICAN PEOPLE OPPOSED TO MILITARISM.

I believe in thus voicing opposition to this gigantic military scheme I am in accord with the views entertained by the great body of the farmers of the country, who furnish in the persons of their sons the greatest number of soldiers for such an army. Their production will be cut down; their boys will become dissatisfied.

I believe I am in accord with the great body of laboring men, whose sons furnish the next largest quota of men for such an army; and also with the business world, whose business would be greatly hampered and interfered with by the compulsory taking away of such a large portion of their employees; and, again, with the educational world, the schools and colleges of the country, whose students will be taken by force at the most important stage of their school or college life; and, again, with the great body of our boys who have just completed a splendid service for their country in the European war.

Indeed, in my judgment, this bill, while I am sure not so intended, constitutes a direct slap at our splendid boys who won the late war. Never was a duty more nobly performed than they performed theirs. We asked them to destroy German militarism. They did it. We promised them to make our country safe from the militarism which they destroyed. Instead of fulfilling our promise to them the majority now propose to set up in our own country an even worse and vastly more expensive militarism than that which they destroyed and seven times as expensive and very much larger than any German militarism that ever existed.

We have discharged them from the Army without doing anything substantial for them. We have paid them little. We have promised them much by way of bills and have given them little by way of acts. I think we ought to do something substantial for these boys who have already done so much for our country before we embark on this wild orgy of expenditure for a future army of American militarism. We should pay our just debts to the Army just demobilized before we undertake to create a new army, to which as yet we owe nothing and so far as any man can now see we have no need for. To be perfectly frank, I shall vote for no large army and no large scheme of military training until the boys who won the late war with Germany have been properly paid. Instead of spending $1,300,000,000 for a new army this year, I would much prefer to spend not exceeding $300,000,000 on our present Army, and in some proper way devote a reasonable portion of this difference of a billion dollars to our soldiers who won this great war.

I am not unmindful of the fact that one of the great post-war organizations has passed a resolution favoring compulsory universal military training. I have the greatest respect for the views of that excellent organization, but I do not believe that resolution reflects the majority views of the great body of the soldiers who took part in that war, though it may reflect the views of a majority of the officers. I believe the enlisted men of the war are more generally opposed to conscription in times of peace than are the officers.

I believe I voice the views of all those who favor our National Guard system, indissolubly connected with our military system by our Constitution itself and by the desires of our people in all the years since the Constitution was formed. The various State National Guards did the most excellent service during the late war. No body of our troops behaved more splendidly. We should build up their organizations instead of pulling them down.

The Wadsworth bill should be defeated. No amendment of it can make it an American bill. We have an excellent law now. It is known as the Army reorganization act of 1916. That gives us an American military system. Under such a system we won the greatest of all wars. Under it we defeated the trained armies of Germany, trained under universal compulsory military training laws. Our troops won because they had in the highest degree a spirit to fight, a spirit that can not be built up under a military autocracy, and can only live under a democracy. Let us not crush out this American spirit to fight. Let us keep it as one of our most precious heritages, for our experience shows that we can never know when we may need it.

Let us have an Army sufficient for our needs. Let us have a splendid National Guard in each State. Let us build up a system of military training in our schools and colleges, so that we may always have a reserve of well-trained officers, and let us keep a Navy ever ready equal to that of any nation. Let us make our Regular Army a great vocational training institution, turning out and graduating 100,000 well-educated and well-trained young men every year, after a three years' course; let us make the educational and vocational advantages in the Regular Army, now already begun, so attractive to young men that there will be a waiting list to get in the Army instead of the present difficulty in getting recruits; but we should never establish a military oligarchy or autocracy in this country. We should never turn our country into an armed camp. We should never jeopardize our free institutions by raising, during the time of excitement caused by the winning of a great foreign war, the graven image of the time-despised, cruel, false, and imperious god of war, which has caused the downfall of so many great nations in the years that have gone by. Under our historically democratic military system we have never known defeat. Shall we exchange this uniformly successful system for a system of military despotism that has never in all the history of the world known a permanent success? To me such an exchange by us is inconceivable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was very much interested in the suggestion the Senator made a moment ago as to what sort of a Regular Army we should have and what it should be used for. As I understood him, he suggested in the latter part of his remarks that the Regular Army should be used as a great vocational training school, with which I am in entire accord; but the Senator further suggests that from that Regular Army there should be graduated 100,000 men a year, each man having served three years. That means at least a Regular Army of 300,000 men, does it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At $1,800 per year per man in cost, there is $540,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator a little earlier in his speech stated that he was in favor of no appropriation larger than $300,000,000 a year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that we have a Regular Army now authorized, and which is to be reduced to 225,000 men after July 1 next, as I understand it. The Senator knows it is almost impossible to get these young men to enlist in the Army voluntarily. We have great difficulty in recruiting for the service. Why? Because Army life is not attractive to the vigorous, splendid young men of America. They can make more money, they can do better, they can prosper more in the various walks of life in times of peace.

In order to have an Army we have to make it attractive to the young men, and we could not spend our money better than to make a great educational institution of the Regular Army. If we could arrange it so that we could take recruits into that Army, keep it filled at 300,000 men at a cost of $500,000,000, if you please, I think it would be vastly to the interest of the United States to do it, and I believe that we would build up a stronger body of military men than we can by giving every young man four months of military training when he becomes 18 years of age, a little dab of military training that would not amount to a row of pins after four or five years. What you want to do is not only to give him a military training but to educate him and fit him for life, and let him go out afterward and be equal to the other young men of the country who are otherwise well educated. As the Senator knows, in the last appropriation act we provided not a very large sum, a rather moderate sum, to begin vocational training in the Army. I very gladly voted for it. I would be delighted to increase the amount a great deal more this year. It is our duty to increase the amount. We ought to educate these young men, and if we are going to have a Regular Army at all we must offer them some encouragement in order to secure their services.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was not arguing the merits of vocational training in the Army. I am heartily in favor of it. I merely ask the Senator which figure he now adheres to? In one portion of his speech he announced that he thinks the appropriation for the support of the Regular Army should not exceed $300,000,000 this year. Then he announces at the end of his speech that he is in favor of a Regular Army of 300,000 men, which, on his figure of $1,800 per year per man, makes $540,000,000. Which is it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Though apparently that is a discrepancy, really it is not so, if the Senator will examine in the RECORD what I have actually said. I said that this year I thought we could reduce the amount for our Regular Army to $300,000,000 and use the difference between what I believe the Senator proposes to appropriate, about $1,300,000,000——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. Use a reasonable proportion of the difference to pay these boys what we owe them. We have been promising these boys for a long time, and we have not performed at all. I have seen no bill from the committee authorizing the payment of a proper sum to the young men who won the war. I think we ought to pay them back before we start on this gigantic scheme of militarism in this country.

As I said, it seems to me $300,000,000 is enough for this year. We ought to have an army costing about that—an army of 180,000 men—and I think that would be ample for this year. We have right now 4,000,000 young men well trained whom we can get on 30 days' notice if we need them. Why should we embark on this enormous expenditure for training other young men when we have 4,000,000 men already trained in the country right now, and trained at an enormous cost to the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator's comparison of figures is very interesting. At a later time I shall endeavor to give the correct estimate. As I understand it, after this year perhaps the Senator would advocate the maintenance of a regular army of 300,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see no objection to it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At $1,800 per man per year?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that unquestionably we can not expect prices to always remain like they are. The Senator knows that about six years ago it took about $1,100, maybe about $1,000, to maintain a man. Seven or eight years ago, when I first came to Congress, I think we estimated it at $900 per year per man. It is the increase in the cost of living and in general prices that has carried the cost of the Army up. I think we could have and ought to have 300,000 men in the Army for a very much less sum than half a billion dollars.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator admits that we can not have them at present prices. I assume his estimates are all based on present prices?

Mr. McKELLAR. They are all based on present prices.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Evidently the Senator is willing to vote this year for the amount necessary to support a Regular Army of 300,000 men at a cost of $540,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Provided——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Provided what?

Mr. McKELLAR. Provided those men are given a good education while in the Army, where they could graduate and go out in the business world; and I venture the prediction right now that the business men of the country would vie with each other in endeavoring to get the young men trained in such a way with such a splendid physical and mental training.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not arguing that question. I am heartily in favor of it. The Senator's estimate is $1,800 per man per year, and that includes vocational training?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to ask the Senator if, having committed himself to a $540,000,000 Army, how much is he going to allow the National Guard besides?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not figured the amount.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought the Senator had not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am perfectly willing to do with the National Guard what is right. We have been exceedingly liberal with the National Guard all over our country, and we were ever since the act of 1916. We have built them up. The provisions as to the National Guard are so involved that it is difficult to estimate about them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At what cost?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not remember the figures, but I am perfectly willing to go on like we have been doing and continue to build them up.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me interject with this suggestion——

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it is necessary this year, because, as I said, we have 4,000,000 young men upon whom we can put our fingers in 10 days or in 30 days at the outside.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not speaking about this year. I am taking the Senator's own suggestion that we will let this year go by, and after this year goes by we will have a Regular Army that will cost $540,000,000 a year on the basis of present prices. I ask the Senator how much more than that are we to spend for the National Guard? Apparently the Senator has made no estimate of that. Let me say to the Senator that the National Guard, under the national-defense act, was authorized at a maximum strength of 425,000 men. I would not contend that it could reach that strength——

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I have not the figures before me, but the most that we ever got up to until the war, it seems to me, was 60,000 or 70,000; it may be that it ran up to 100,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is exceedingly inaccurate in his figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We had 130,000 men in the National Guard at the time of the Mexican border service.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was because of threatened war with Mexico. Up until the time of threatened war——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is a little off in his figures, as he himself has admitted.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator has the figures on the National Guard for 1912 and 1913, will he give them to us?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not them on my desk, but I will guarantee they are over 100,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department estimates that it will cost on the average $400 a year to support a soldier of the National Guard; that is, through Federal assistance. We will say that the National Guard is no larger than it was in 1916—100,000 men. That is $40,000,000; and that is a very low estimate in strength a year from now. We will add that to $540,000,000, that the Senator has already said he is willing to stand for, and we shall have a sum of money which is greater than this bill will cost.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not agree with the Senator at all. I do not believe this bill can possibly be put into force entirely, as I shall attempt to point out later on, for less than $1,325,000,000 or $1,326,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the Senator estimated for the National Guard in the estimates he has given the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I have not; but that would add that much more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I see the Senator has been very thorough.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am thorough enough for this: I think I understand the difficulties in the way of the Senator's bill. The Senator was not kind enough to put me on the subcommittee which had the arrangement of the hearings on these matters—at which I do not complain—and, therefore, my exact information as to what occurred in the committee is not as good as that of some other Senators who were on the subcommittee; but, I take it, that we all know what the Senator's bill contains; we can read his bill; we know what it calls for; and we all know from actual appropriations and from deficiency bills how much it takes to pay an officer and to keep an enlisted man in the Army.

Does the Senator desire to interrupt further, or does any other Senator desire to interrupt? If so, I will yield now.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask a question either of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] or of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. McKELLAR. If I think the Senator from New York can answer the question better than I can, I shall turn it over to him.

Mr. BORAH. What are the provisions of the bill so far as military trials and courts-martial proceedings, and so forth, are concerned relative to the boys who may be in training in the camps under the universal-training provision?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are no specific provisions in the bill covering courts-martial.

Mr. BORAH. Then I take it that there are no provisions which except them from the operation of the ordinary rules of courts-martial proceedings?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; there are not.

Mr. BORAH. Then, they would come under the ordinary rules of procedure?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They would come under the Articles of War.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will call the Senator's attention to this provision of the bill which may cover the matter. I do not know, but I will examine it and see. It reads:

SEC. 57. THE EXISTING LAW MADE APPLICABLE.—In order to carry out the provisions of this act relative to the registration, examination, classification, exception, exemption, and induction into the service of persons liable for the military training provided for in this act, so much of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," as may be necessary and applicable thereto are hereby extended and made applicable for this purpose.

That clause might not be sufficient to include them; but the very fact that by section 51 they are inducted into the Army makes it absolutely certain that they will have to stand court-martial just as any other boys in the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no question about that. The Articles of War, of course, apply.

Mr. McKELLAR. I take it that there can not be any question about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now desire to take the time of the Senate for just a moment. It so happens that I have a detailed estimate before me prepared after weeks of effort by the War Department, in this instance by Gen. Lord, of the Department of Finance. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee has great confidence in Gen. Lord. This statement gives in itemized form the items of cost of the training for four months of 100,000 men. I think I will read it. It will not take very long.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator reads the statement, I should like to say that while I have great confidence in Gen. Lord, I have always found this about officers in the War Department—and it applies to most of them, indeed, I presume it applies to most men, for that matter—that when it comes to figures and they are figuring on something of which they approve, the figures are very favorable, and when they are figuring on propositions to which they are opposed, the figures are usually found unfavorable; but the fact is that we here in the Senate always have to check them up by deficiency bills, and oftentimes our deficiency bills for the War Department have been almost as large as are the regular appropriation bills. I make no charges against any officers, but we all know that figures are oftentimes confusing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In spite of the Senator's indictment of the figures before he hears them, I am going to read them. This is the cost of training 100,000 men for four months. First, the cost of transportation to and from the places of training, at an average round-trip journey of 572 miles, at 3½ cents per mile, for the 100,000 men, $2,002,000. Certainly the Senator would not say that 572 miles was an underestimate of the average round-trip journey that every young man should take. That is a maximum.

Per diem allowance for subsistence in getting to and returning from the place of training, two days, at $2.25 per day, for 100,000 men, $450,000.

Cost of subsistence while undergoing training, 100,000 men, $6,390,000.

Cost of clothing while undergoing training, $2,855,385; cost of laundry while undergoing training, $400,000; medical attention, including dental treatment, $766,667; allowance of $5 per month for four months for each of the 100,000 men, $2,000,000; family allowance, estimated at $30 per month for four months for 10,000 men—that is, one-tenth of the entire number was estimated here to have dependents, a most generous estimate for men of 18 years of age—$1,200,000.

Expense of local boards, not less than three members each, to receive pay not exceeding $10 per day—the bill provides for only $5 per day—not exceeding $10 per day and per member for services and reimbursement of expenses, $553,500.

Clerical help, office rent, and maintenance, $384,375; appeal boards, estimated at 50 boards, 3 members each, 30 days, at $10 per member, $45,000; clerical help in connection with the appeal boards, $31,250; the boards themselves, two reports, at $2 per man for 100,000 men, $200,000.

Quarters, heat, and light—that is, in the camps—$1,013,374.

Equipment—that is, the rifles, the cartridge belts, and various other equipment other than clothing—$7,900,667.

The total for 100,000 men is $26,162,218.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, except for a difference in the salary paid, what differences will the Senator suggest between the cost of inducting and training a young man into the Army and the cost of keeping a volunteer or a conscripted man in the Army? I am not concerned about figures, but, so far as I can see, the only difference—and it must be apparent to anybody—in the actual cost is a little difference in salary. If there are any other differences, will the Senator point them out? What are the differences?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the difference in salary is very large. The lowest pay in the Army is $30 a month. The pay under the Army reorganization bill for men undergoing training is $5 a month, which represents one-sixth of the lowest pay of the Army. The pay of the Army runs all the way from $30 a month to $12,000 a year. None of these men are going to get anything like that pay, and, of course, the saving is a great deal more therefore than five-sixths, infinitely more, in the matter of pay alone. In another direction the overhead is infinitely smaller.

Mr. McKELLAR. Proportionately, how could the overhead possibly be smaller for training a man four months than it could for training him a year month after month?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because for that work we use the Regular Army officers, who are already on the rolls.

Mr. McKELLAR. This bill provides for a tremendous increase in the number of Army officers, in some cases as high as 300 per cent in certain classes. I have not the figures before me on my desk at this time. In a subsequent speech I am going to point out the enormous increase in officers provided for in order to carry out this unparalleled scheme of military training.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will indulge me a moment further, I venture to say that when we come to the actual payment we are going to find that it will cost proportionately more to train a young man for four months than it will to train him for a year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has said that a good many times; he may be right; but I should be exceedingly gratified if the Senator would put into the RECORD the itemized estimates which he has in mind and also state to the Senate where he got them.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to put in exactly the cost, as shown by appropriations we have provided to support the soldiers. I shall not put in the RECORD any names of Army officers from whom I have received figures in view of the attitude of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff on this bill. The Senator would not expect me to do it under these circumstances, and, of course, I can not do it.

HOUSING CORPORATION.

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STERLING. I will yield to the Senator if he will state the purpose of the interruption.

Mr. FERNALD. The purpose of my interruption at this time is this: Every time we consider the calendar we lack about a dozen bills of reaching a very important measure to which I think there is no objection on either side of the Chamber. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 358, being Senate bill 3738, abolishing the United States Housing Corporation. I think there is no objection to the bill.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator can give any assurance that it will lead to no extended discussion, I will yield in order that the Senator may have the bill considered.

Mr. FERNALD. I do not think there is any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the pending measure, the unfinished business, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3738) abolishing the United States Housing Corporation and other agencies and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell or otherwise dispose of property acquired or constructed pursuant to the power and authority granted by the act of Congress entitled

"An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not know anything about the bill. I think a quorum should be here when it is being considered, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Beckham	Harris	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Henderson	New	Smoot
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Elkins	Keyes	Page	Trammell
Fernald	King	Phelan	Underwood
France	Lenroot	Phipps	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Glass	McCormick	Poindexter	Watson
Gore	McCumber	Pomerene	Wolcott
Gronna	McKellar	Robinson

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill, as the title would indicate, is to abolish the United States Housing Corporation.

Early in 1918 an appropriation of $100,000,000 was made to establish and inaugurate an agency to build housing for people who were engaged in war work, in the building of ships and the manufacture of munitions of war. Forty-three projects were started, and most of them completed, in the country. The corporation now are endeavoring to sell that property in the many States where it is located. It is expected that they will be able to turn back to the Government about $72,000,000. This bill proposes to turn all of the business, which naturally now is of a clerical nature, over to the Treasury Department, and in doing this they are now selling this property. Three projects have already been sold complete, and it is thought by the corporation that having some definite legislation to determine when this business shall be turned over to the Treasury Department might hasten the process and aid them in disposing of the property.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that at the winding up of the business of the corporation they will be able to turn back to the Treasury $72,000,000?

Mr. FERNALD. That is the estimated amount.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the loss is $28,000,000?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. When the last appropriation was asked for by the Housing Corporation hearings were had upon the matter before the Appropriations Committee, and at that time I understood that the estimated loss of the Housing Corporation at its final wind-up would be about $22,000,000. That has now increased to $28,000,000?

Mr. FERNALD. About $28,000,000; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator where he got his estimate of $28,000,000?

Mr. FERNALD. I got it from the Housing Corporation. This is their estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. They gave the committee that estimate?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes. They estimate that they will return to the Government, after deducting for all of the war losses on account of excess cost of construction, the abandonment of uncompleted contracts, the return of building materials, the cost of the Homes Registration Service, and general overhead, the sum of $72,995,000. These assets are as follows:

Completed houses and dormitories	$27,436,000
Loans to transportation companies	6,307,000
Transportation property owned	152,000
Loans to municipalities and utility companies	1,600,000
Salvaged furniture and building material	2,800,000
Cash on hand to be returned to United States Treasury	2,200,000
	40,495,000
Cash returned to the United States Treasury	32,500,000
Total amount estimated to be returned to United States Treasury	72,995,000

Mr. SMOOT. Those are estimates?

Mr. FERNALD. Those are estimates. Of course it is impossible to tell the exact amount, because this property is now being sold, and it is not possible to tell just what it will bring. Three projects have been sold already, and they are very rapidly closing out the balance. This matter has been gone over very thoroughly with the Treasury Department, and it seemed necessary to turn it over to some one of the departments; and as the business is naturally of a clerical nature, collecting rents and handling money, that seemed to be the proper department.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all to turning it over to the Treasury Department. I will ask the Senator if his committee asked the Treasury Department as to the advisability of turning it over to that department?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; and I had a representative from the Treasury Department with me in working out the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. In the hearings was anything developed by way of testimony that would show that now was the best time to sell these buildings or whether some time should be allowed for their disposition in the future?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; we went through that subject very thoroughly. We had real estate men from different cities before the committee, and almost every witness testified that this was the best time to dispose of this property; that it ought to be done in the nex few months. They are getting very good prices, as the Senator will see. The loss of $28,000,000 is not a large amount, considering the circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if the estimates are correct and the results tally with the estimates I shall be very well satisfied with the undertaking. I remember that at the time the bill was passed I expressed the opinion that there would be a loss of 33⅓ per cent. If we get back $72,000,000 instead of $67,000,000 it will be better than I anticipated when the bill passed, but, of course, these are only estimates, and we can not tell what the wind-up will be.

Mr. FERNALD. It is not possible to tell exactly. The estimates on what they have to sell are based upon the returns for what they have sold.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that when the last appropriations were asked for the Appropriations Committee were of the opinion that there ought to be a winding up of the affairs of the corporation as quickly as possible, and the House went so far as to compel the Housing Corporation to dispose of the property within a certain time. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, however, thought that would be an unwise thing to do, because if the purchasers knew that the property had to be sold by a certain date no doubt it would have an influence in "bearing" the price at which the property would be sold through bidding by interested parties.

Mr. FERNALD. I want to say to the Senator that that is the precise reason why we determined that the affairs of the corporation should be wound up by June 30 instead of immediately, to give them a few months to advertise the property and to cast about for customers, which they are doing.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had time to read the bill in full. Do I understand that the bill provides that all of the buildings of the Housing Corporation shall be sold by June 30, 1920?

Mr. FERNALD. No; it is left entirely with the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the bill provides that by that time all of these things shall be turned over to the Treasury Department, and they shall handle them in the same way, together with the funds that the corporation may have on hand.

Mr. FERNALD. Exactly; all the notes, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. And whatever obligations the Housing Corporation is under at that time the Treasury Department will assume and carry on the business?

Mr. FERNALD. Precisely, with the exception of three projects which this bill transfers to the Navy Department. They are buildings that were built on the property of the Navy, and it was thought best by the Housing Corporation and by the Navy Department and by the Treasury Department that those three particular projects should be turned over to the Navy Department, which is done by the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that those houses which were on the Navy property are to be turned over to the Navy Department, with a view to disposing of them?

Mr. FERNALD. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Or to hold?

Mr. FERNALD. To hold for their use.

Mr. SMOOT. Were they built for that purpose?

Mr. FERNALD. No; they were not built for that purpose. They were built in connection with work that was going on for the Navy, but they were built by the Housing Corporation.

The land, however, is owned by the Navy, and is in close proximity to the work carried on by the Navy.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, instead of the Navy Department coming to Congress for an appropriation to build those houses, it secured the consent of the Housing Corporation to build them, knowing full well that at the end they would get the houses, because of the fact that they were built on Government land?

Mr. FERNALD. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that is a very good way of doing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, what becomes of the property where the working girls' dormitories are located?

Mr. FERNALD. That property is turned over to the Treasury Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that to be sold?

Mr. FERNALD. It is not to be sold unless it seems wise to sell it. It was the opinion of the committee that these dormitories ought to be operated for some time to come yet.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who is to operate them, and how?

Mr. FERNALD. They are to be operated under the Treasury Department. The Housing Corporation will operate them until the 30th of June, and then the Treasury Department. They must be operated by somebody.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I am very glad to yield.

Mr. KING. Was the Senator entirely accurate when he stated that all of the buildings that are to be turned over to the Navy Department were constructed upon land which belonged to the Government and which was controlled by the Navy Department? I find in line 15, page 6, words which would seem to negative that suggestion. The language is as follows:

> The land located near the Puget Sound Navy Yard at Bremerton, Wash., with the improvements thereon, consisting of a hotel and apartment house, together with the land purchased by the United States Housing Corporation adjoining the said hotel.

Mr. FERNALD. I am glad the Senator called attention to that. I want to say that in that particular case the water that is used by the Navy comes from the spring where these buildings are built; and I think in that instance the Navy Department did not own the land, but they owned the spring and have for many years controlled the water there for their use.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, then we are turning over to the Navy Department now hotels and apartment houses and other property that have been constructed by the Housing Corporation?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that is wise and proper?

Mr. FERNALD. I thought it was, for I believe the Navy Department are now using that hotel. It is used for that purpose.

Mr. KING. By whom, and for what purpose?

Mr. FERNALD. By the Navy Department.

Mr. KING. For what purpose?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know for what purpose. They have a great many men there, and I do not know just what those men are doing.

Mr. KING. Does the Navy Department furnish houses for those who are working in the navy yards?

Mr. FERNALD. I think they do, in many cases.

Mr. KING. I did not understand that that was the policy of the Government. I can readily see that if we furnish houses for the civilian employees in the navy yards in any part of our naval service the demand will soon be made that we furnish housing facilities for all employees in all navy yards and for all employees in the arsenals and powder factories and wherever the Government is engaged in any operations.

Mr. FERNALD. The Navy Department erected a good many houses, and in this instance section 5 authorizes the transfer to the Secretary of the Navy of houses, dormitories, and the schoolhouse on the naval reservation at Indianhead, Md.; the houses and schoolhouse on the naval reservation at Charleston, W. Va.; and the land located near the Puget Sound Navy Yard, at Bremerton, Wash. That is the property on which is located the spring which furnishes the water for the other houses that are used by the naval officers and the employees.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a further inquiry?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator consider what the effect will be if we now furnish houses in one navy yard upon the morale of the employees in other navy yards? Does not the Senator realize that if we do that the demand inevitably will follow that we supply housing facilities for all employees of the Government?

Mr. FERNALD. I assume that it is very necessary, in many instances where the Navy are carrying out operations of different kinds, to have buildings. They have already constructed them in many instances, and this item would save the Government just about that much, because they have to have these buildings. They are using them now, and I think the buildings are practically filled with men who are working in the navy yards.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that in Seattle we had a navy yard before the war, and the activities of the yard were as great or substantially as great as they will be in the future. I repeat that if we inaugurate now in one yard the policy of furnishing houses for the civilian employees we will have demands to furnish houses in every yard; and if we furnish houses for the civilian employees in the navy yards we will be compelled to furnish houses for the civilian employees in the arsenals and in all of the agencies of the War Department, and finally all those who work for the Government. I do not see where we are going to draw the line. I respectfully submit to the Senator that I think he has made a mistake, and that his committee have made a mistake, in legalizing this proposition that the Federal Government shall embark upon the plan of furnishing houses to those who work for it. I do not know where it is going to end. Unless there is a fuller explanation furnished with respect to this provision I shall ask the Senator to modify it or consent to an amendment; and I shall offer an amendment to strike out this section and ask that all of the houses referred to in the section shall be treated as the other houses owned by the Housing Corporation, namely, sold by the corporation, and if not then turned over to the Treasury Department to be sold at the earliest possible date.

Mr. FERNALD. I should like to read to the Senator the statement of Admiral Coontz, of the United States Navy. The chairman asked this question:

> The immediate matter that I understand the Secretary of the Navy wishes brought before this committee is the amendment offered to section 2 of the bill, reading as follows:
> "The following property shall be exempted from the provisions of this section and shall be placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Navy, together with any unexpended balances of appropriations made for the maintenance thereof by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 19, 1919, which balances shall be accounted for and audited as Navy funds:
> "Houses, dormitories, and schoolhouse on the naval reservation at Indianhead, Md.; houses and schoolhouse on the naval reservation at Charleston, W. Va.; hotel and apartment house adjoining the Puget Sound Navy Yard at Bremerton, Wash.; together with the land purchased by the Housing Corporation adjoining the said hotel and that upon which said apartment house is erected."
> Now, Admiral, we will be glad to listen to you.
> Admiral COONTZ. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that in 1917, about the time the war broke out, there were at Puget Sound, Bremerton, Wash., which is adjacent to the city of Bremerton, if I recall, 1,180 employees.
> As the war went on, that number increased to about 6,800, and is now, I believe, about, roughly, 6,000.
> At the same time it became necessary to build a camp there to handle our enlisted force up to, say, 7,000 men; and we handled all sorts of officers, as we averaged about one ship to France every five days, with either flour or munitions, or sent it to Chile for nitrate; and it became necessary to find housing for these people. Bremerton was a small city; it is 15 miles from Seattle, and we had to have a ferry service.
> In the course of time the Housing Corporation built some 250 houses on various lots purchased contiguous to the navy yard and also a hotel and an apartment house.
> In order to get the land for the hotel and to make it convenient for the employees, they asked to place it on certain lots which the Navy owned in the city of Bremerton, and which were right across the street from the navy yard. Those were composed, I believe, of 14 lots. Seven of them were on one side of Park Avenue and seven on the other.
> In order to get the land large enough for this hotel—I happened to be commandant of the district out there at that time—I appeared before the city council of the city of Bremerton and they condemned this Park Avenue, which was a very nice street, and gave it, I believe, completely to the Government.
> They also gave us the right to run a tunnel under what is known as Burwell Avenue, in order that the navy-yard employees might get out quickly during their lunch hour, or at any time, to this hotel, and get their lunch and come back. This was done by the city of Bremerton.
> Since then they have paved the street, I believe, over the tunnel. In order to have a little extra land around the hotel the Housing Corporation bought two lots on Burwell Avenue and three lots on Fourth Street.
> The hotel, as is shown by this blue print [indicating], is on the original Navy land, and on that given by the city of Bremerton to the Government. This hotel is occupied now entirely by men and women who are employed in the navy yard. When I was out there two or three months ago with the fleet there were 40 women in the house, and my recollection is there were anywhere from 300 to 700 men that had rooms.
> In addition the United States Housing Corporation acquired some land further back in the city on which they built an apartment house, and rent small apartments to the employees of the navy yard and of the Government.
> They also built, as I stated, 250 houses, but they do not come into this question.
> The reason the Navy owned this land on which the hotel was built is because of a spring on the land, and because they wanted the spring rights so that this water would always be under our control. It comes down into a big reservoir in the navy yard, and several times during the last few years, when the other water there has failed, the fact that we had three days' supply from that spring tided us over some very serious situations. I understand that situation is now about to be remedied by the Bremerton Water Co.

What we desire to ask is that that hotel built on the Navy land be transferred to the Navy Department, and the apartment house; this for the reason that it will be of great advantage, we believe, to the Navy and to the Government, and stabilize rent conditions in that part of the world, and keep them down to normal.

The hotel, which is known now as Navy Yard Hotel, is run by persons, as I understand it, who have leased it from the United States Housing Corporation. The apartment house is run by the Housing Corporation itself. We would expect to turn steady sums of money into the Treasury from those two buildings, as far as my knowledge goes.

The CHAIRMAN. You are speaking of the navy yard at Puget Sound. Do you know anything of the other propositions?

Admiral COONTZ. No, sir; Admiral Earle will handle those.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of any opposition to this amendment from any source?

Admiral COONTZ. None whatever.

From the testimony given by Admiral Coontz it will be seen that if these buildings were not turned over to the Navy Department they would have to be salvaged. They are now used and filled with people who are working in the navy yard, and it seems to me to be much better judgment to turn them over than it would be to salvage them for a very small amount and then be compelled to build other buildings to accommodate these men in the Navy. I think it is a very wise proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator if they are rented to these employees?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; they are rented.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the hotel is rented?

Mr. FERNALD. The hotel is run by somebody who charges rent and turns it back to the Government.

I wish to say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that they do not get free rental there. They have to pay for it. I do not see how the Government would get much of anything out of it if it undertook to sell it, because the buildings would have to be torn down in this particular case, and in the other two cases, where they are turned over to the Navy Department, the houses and buildings are on land owned by the Navy Department.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator why that property was not turned over to the Treasury Department, if they are going to run the housing proposition? Why was it not turned over to the Treasury Department instead of the Navy Department?

Mr. FERNALD. For the reason that the Navy was on the ground and operating the housing.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the Housing Corporation—and I am quite sure that is the case, because it so developed before the Committee on Appropriations—made a lease of the hotel at Bremerton to some private parties, and they are running the hotel. It seems to me that if the Housing Corporation is going out of existence it would be very much better to turn it back to the department of the Government that is going to operate the houses that were built by the Housing Corporation. Why should the Navy have this property turned over to them and the Navy rent the building? If any department of the Government is to rent it, it ought to be the Treasury Department, and then let the money go back into the Treasury of the United States. It seems to me that would be the proper thing to do.

Mr. FERNALD. The Navy Department is constructing buildings almost every year in all their different activities, and it seemed to be proper to turn this property over to the department that was using it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Navy Department is certainly not erecting buildings to rent, and this is a building that happened to be built by the Housing Corporation upon Government land. That land ought to be held by the Treasury Department, just the same as all the post offices of the Government are held, just the same as all houses that the Government owns are held, and not allow the Navy Department to come into the question of holding titles for the Government for property of the United States and make leases in behalf of the Government of the United States.

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator permit me to read what Admiral Earle had to say on the other two projects?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FERNALD (reading)—

TESTIMONY OF REAR ADMIRAL RALPH EARLE, CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

The CHAIRMAN. Admiral, which particular project do you wish to speak of?

Admiral EARLE. I wish to speak of the projects at Indianhead, Md., and South Charleston, W. Va.

The CHAIRMAN. Only these two projects?

Admiral EARLE. Only these two projects.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; proceed.

Admiral EARLE. The project at Indianhead was initiated in much the same manner as were all the housing projects; that is, because the need for housing of employees during the war was far and away greater than the possibility of housing them. The United States Housing Corporation very kindly helped the Navy out, and these two places especially. The only land available at Indianhead and at South Charleston, W. Va., was land owned by the Government.

At Indianhead the Housing Corporation erected 100 houses and 3 dormitories and 1 schoolhouse, all of a very substantial and very nice character, that would attract the leading men in the employ of the Navy in the manufacture of powder and the testing of guns at Indianhead.

The CHAIRMAN. You expect to continue operations, do you, right along there?

Admiral EARLE. These operations will continue during the time of peace. The powder factory manufactures the powder that we use each year for target practice, and also the powder that is needed for vessels under construction.

The proving ground, of course, goes on actively all the time, testing all ordnance material of every description. These houses and this schoolhouse will be needed constantly. The schoolhouse particularly is of very great help to the people living at Indianhead. In fact, until this schoolhouse was built we had practically no way of educating the children of the employees, and now that is on a very good basis.

At South Charleston, W. Va., we are erecting the Navy's armor plant, the projectile plant being already in operation at that place.

The United States Housing Corporation has erected 65 houses and 1 schoolhouse for the same purpose; that is, to take care of the leading employees, make them satisfied with conditions, and thus insure that we have contented employees and employees of a good class.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Do I understand that the Navy Department is operating schools for the children of employees and paying the teachers, and so forth, out of funds appropriated by the Government? It is a great surprise to me if such is the case. We are supposed to tax every State for funds for schooling purposes. Now, in addition to that, does the Senator tell me that the Government is running a school in the Navy Department, and is there any more reason for conducting a school by the Navy Department than there is for conducting a school by the Interior Department?

Mr. FERNALD. In the building of these projects all over the country by the Housing Corporation they did erect schoolhouses. They erected entertainment halls.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are running theaters as well as schools for the employees?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; and they erected garages.

Mr. McCUMBER. And motion pictures?

Mr. FERNALD. I suspect they have moving-picture shows.

Mr. McCUMBER. All to be run at the expense of the Government and for the amusement of the people who are employed?

Mr. FERNALD. I am afraid that is the case sometimes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator think it is about time for us to get back to normal conditions and quit this extravagance?

Mr. FERNALD. I think it is. This is the first bill I know of that has been introduced to get back to normal conditions. We appropriated last year $2,060,970 to carry on this proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. But is it getting back to normal if the bill allows schools to be conducted by the Navy Department, as well as theaters and hotels?

Mr. FERNALD. I know in this project in Washington they have an entertainment hall. I do not know how the money is raised, whether by the people who live in the buildings or how it is done.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator another question right here, because he has been on the committee that has been investigating this housing proposition. If the reports which come to me are not true they are certainly of a very slanderous nature. For instance, in the operation of all these buildings around the Capitol Grounds, that are rented to girls and where the Government is conducting a boarding house, charging them the usual price probably that is charged elsewhere in the city for room and board, I am informed that the Government is losing enough to board as many more.

Mr. FERNALD. That is not true, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to know whether it is true or not.

Mr. FERNALD. I think I can give the Senator the exact amount.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is estimated to me that the actual loss in running the dormitories over here, when you take into account the overhead expenses which are not charged at all to them but are paid directly by the Government, amounts to three hundred and forty-odd dollars per head. If it is not true I should like to have that matter cleared up.

Mr. FERNALD. The exact cost of boarding the girls, provided we charge interest at the rate of 5 per cent on one-half the expense of constructing the buildings and one-half the expense of the furnishings, would be $50.50 per month. The Housing Corporation charged the girls $45 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why does the Senator take one-half of the expense of the buildings? If you put up a building that costs $100,000, why have you not got $100,000 invested, and why not take 10 per cent or 25 per cent as well as 50 per cent?

Mr. FERNALD. To be exceedingly fair, I thought I would make as good a showing as I could for the Housing Corporation, for the reason that if the buildings were salvaged they would not bring 50 per cent of their cost. We have these buildings, and if they were salvaged they would bring much less than 50 per cent of their cost, and the furnishings would bring much less than 50 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, the point I want to get at is as to the success of the Government in running boarding houses.

Mr. FERNALD. I think the Government ought to go out of the business as soon as it reasonably can; but so long as we are bringing people in here at the rate of 1,700 per month and there is not room to house and board girls or anybody else, we must do something. I want to wind up the affairs of all these agencies that were established. The bill is in the line of economy, and it is the first one, so far as I know, to wind up the affairs of any war agency.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me to come right back to the first proposition, taking these buildings at just what they cost, not what you can sell them for, but what they cost the Government, allowing 6 per cent, allowing for depreciation, allowing the ordinary overhead charges—because now all the clerical service is paid directly by the United States—I want to know whether the Government is not actually losing over $300 per head for each person who is being boarded there, notwithstanding the fact that they are charged the same price that they would pay elsewhere in the city?

Mr. FERNALD. I think that amount is too large. I want to read just the exact amount:

> The Government dormitories at Washington show expenditures, including accounts payable December 31, in excess of receipts in the sum of $18,624.24. The disbursements, however, include $44,712 worth of current supplies on hand as of December 31. The operating profit is therefore $26,093.91. An estimate for the deficiency appropriation for the fiscal year will be submitted in the usual way.

According to the figures, and we made a penny-wise examination of the accounts, it is shown that there is a little profit without charging any interest or any depreciation.

Mr. SMOOT. Or any overhead?

Mr. FERNALD. Or any overhead; that is, with the exception of the management and the officers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, they could show a balance that would be very favorable if they did not charge anything but the real expenses of operating the buildings. They are free from taxes because they are on Government land, and at least you ought to figure 6 per cent, for there are no taxes upon the value of the buildings. Then there ought to be a charge for depreciation. Then there are all the expenses for the several hundred or thousand of clerks who have to look after the houses. That is not charged up in your bill to the expense of running the houses. When you deduct those charges I think you will find that you will get right back to a place where the rumor is about correct that we are losing about $300 per head for boarding those girls.

Mr. FERNALD. I still think the estimate is pretty large, but much that the Senator says is true. We make no account for depreciation or for interest or for overhead of the United States Housing Corporation, which I am seeking to abolish and do away with.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would have been very much better satisfied with the bill if the committee had provided for the sale of every one of the houses. That is what ought to be done. They should have sold the hotel at Bremerton. It would be there for the employees of the Navy Department to live in just the same as it is now. The houses adjoining one of the other navy yards will be there, but the Government ought to sell those houses now. They are in good shape and will bring more money to-day than at any other time; and then, of course, it would be doing just what the Senator, I believe, would like to see the Government of the United States going out of the housing business entirely.

Mr. FERNALD. Every kind of business they have ever undertaken has been a failure.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] spoke of schools. We have theaters right here in the post-office building in Washington. Space there has been turned over for a theater and shows are held there every Saturday night, and I understand sometimes during the week. It seems to me that ought to come to an end before very long. The space that is being held there for the theater can be used to good advantage to give space for employees in the District who are at present in rented buildings. The Government is paying exorbitant rent to-day for buildings located in the District of Columbia, and still we are running a theater in the Post Office Department.

Mr. FERNALD. I agree with the Senator that just as soon as it is feasible, and can be done in a business way, the Government ought to go out of all kinds of business, for the Government never made a success of anything of that sort; but it is true that the Navy has in many cities erected a great many buildings, and those buildings are necessary to house the Government employees. I am still, however, of the opinion that the Government would be wise, wherever it is necessary and it has the buildings, to turn them over rather than to make appropriations for the Navy to erect buildings, which will be done. In this instance it is simply turning them over after they have been built at an enormous expense, thereby saving the erection of other buildings, because otherwise the Navy will ask for an appropriation for the erection of similar buildings there. If we salvage them, we shall only have to go to work and erect other buildings at an enormous expense, because there are 6,000 people there who have got to be housed.

Mr. SMOOT. But the buildings would be there, whether we sold them or not.

Mr. FERNALD. If we sold the buildings, they would not be available, would they?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly they would. If we sold the buildings to private parties and they did not want to live in the buildings they had purchased, they would rent them to Government employees. There is no need for houses there at all if they are not to house Government employees. If the Government employees have made money enough during the last two or three years to purchase their own houses, I am very glad of it; I hope that the Government employee may own his own house and live in it; but if he does not, then he can rent it just the same as he is renting a house now from the Government of the United States.

Mr. FERNALD. I have stated the status of the case, Senators. The reason why we thought it was wise to turn them over to the Navy Department was simply to save the buildings we have at what it cost us, rather than to tear down and salvage and go ahead and erect new buildings at probably five times the expense of the construction which we already have on the ground.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. Gladly.

Mr. KING. If this policy is to be pursued, does not the Senator think that the Housing Corporation ought to get credit for the value of the property and the Navy Department be charged with it in whatever bookkeeping system obtains between the departments? Let me say to the Senator that, as I understand this measure, I am opposed to the transfer of these properties to the Navy Department, and I shall offer an amendment, unless I hear additional reasons, transferring these houses to the Treasury Department. If such transfer be made, the Treasury Department may lease the property to employees of the Government or to whomsoever it please, and the rentals derived therefrom could be devoted to meeting the expenses of caring for the property. There will be no profit to the United States in acting as a landlord, because the cost of maintaining the property and handling it will be in excess of the rentals obtained by the Government. I have no confidence in the Government as a landlord. The cost to the Government in conducting hotels and boarding houses and in handling dwelling houses for rental purposes will be very much greater than if private persons were engaged in the same business; and if we continue the Government in the hotel business and housing business and the real estate business generally we will continue a wasteful and extravagant system for which there can be no valid excuse. Moreover, if in times of peace we inaugurate the plan of housing civilian employees of the Government in the navy yards, imperative demands will be made that this system be installed in all yards, and finally at the arsenals and wherever the Government has any considerable number of persons engaged in service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I desire to say that in section 5 it is already provided that "immediately upon the transfer of the said projects to the Secretary of the Navy" they shall "become available for the purposes appropriated, to be accounted for and audited as funds appropriated for the use of the Navy Department."

In other words, the Housing Corporation is to receive credit for the amount agreed upon for the transfer of the houses. Then we authorize the Navy Department to audit these funds as if Congress had made a direct appropriation for them to erect buildings. That is what section 5 proposes to do.

Mr. KING. I have not read the latter part of the section, but, doubtless, my colleague is correct in his interpretation of it.

I wish the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] would consent to a modification of section 5. I am so much in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, and have so often condemned the Housing Corporation for its lack of economy, that I shall interpose no obstacles to the speedy passage of the pending measure. It does not meet in a satisfactory manner the entire problem, and fails to provide adequately for the closing out of the enterprise. The Housing Corporation is to be dissolved, but its duties are to be devolved upon the Treasury Department, and that agency is not compelled to wind up the entire business within a stated and definite time. Knowing the immortality of executive agencies of the Government, I am afraid we are "scotching"—not actually killing—the snake.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, for weeks I have been trying to get this bill before the Senate. It is costing the Government $100,000 every month to provide employees for the United States Housing Corporation. It has been my desire to save some money for the Government, and yet I have been unable to get this bill up until to-day, and then I have obtained consideration for it only by the courtesy of my friend from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

I agree with everything my friend from Utah [Mr. KING] has said; I do not believe that the Government can carry on any kind of business economically; and I want to put every one of these agencies out of commission just as soon as I can.

I have considered this matter. For four months I conducted, as carefully and as conscientiously as any man could have done, an investigation of the War Housing Corporation. The Senator from Utah probably has read my report. I have made many criticisms of this activity, but this property is now in the Government's hands, and I have endeavored to find some way to get all we could out of it, and to dispose of the property involved at the earliest possible moment. Instead of carrying it on from year to year, I have long been anxious to close and wind up the affairs of the Housing Corporation. Here, however, is a lot of property that must be turned over to some department or to somebody, either to a bureau or a commission or a corporation. Why not turn it over to the Treasury?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will excuse me, my suggestion is to turn over to the Treasury Department the buildings that are described in section 5 of the bill.

Mr. FERNALD. Does not the Senator think it wise to turn over to the Navy Department the buildings in these two projects that are already on land owned by the Government and controlled by the Navy? The one at Bremerton is not on naval land, although the water supply for the 6,000 people occupying the buildings erected by the United States Housing Corporation does come from Government sources, as I understand.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that the objection I have to turning any of these projects over to the Navy Department is that soon after it is done the Navy Department will conceive the plan of allowing employees to occupy these buildings for nothing. Then we shall have demands made in every other navy yard and in the arsenals and wherever there are employees of the Government that the Government of the United States shall also furnish buildings for them; and, in my opinion, we shall in the end be compelled to expend millions of dollars.

My idea would be this: We are transferring the other projects to the Treasury. I do not think we have been very happy and felicitous in selecting the Treasury Department, and yet I have no quarrel with the committee by reason of that fact. Having, however, turned the other projects over to the Treasury Department, it seems to me it would be wiser to turn these projects over to that department and then let the Treasury Department rent these houses to individuals until they are sold. If the Navy Department charges a ground rental for the buildings the Treasury could pay the Navy Department out of the rentals received a reasonable sum, and the residue could be used to cover in part the operating expenses.

As I said a moment ago, of course we shall not get enough to meet the overhead expenses; but if the Senator will consent to such an amendment I will agree that if it goes to conference, and upon further investigation the Senator finds that that is impracticable, whatever plan is finally agreed upon, after further consideration, I shall not object to, because I am so anxious to have the matter closed up.

Mr. FERNALD. I know the Senator is as anxious as I am to close up this and other features of this matter.

Mr. KING. And the Senator will agree with me that I have done all I could to facilitate the consideration of the bill, and that there has been no opposition from the minority side.

Mr. FERNALD. If the Senator will prepare an amendment which will cover this matter, I will accept it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state the amendment. I move to strike out, in line 12, the word "Navy" and insert the word "Treasury"; and also, in line 21, to strike out the word "Navy" and insert "Treasury," so that it will read:

That immediately upon the passage of this act the Secretary of Labor shall cause to be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury the houses, dormitories—

the same to be maintained and operated under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury is going to operate the other houses. If he deems it wise not to salvage these properties, let him make some arrangement with the Secretary of the Navy by which the Navy will lease to the Treasury, for such period as may be proper, the ground, and then let the Secretary of the Treasury rent, as he rents the other buildings, the dormitories and structures that are alleged to be upon Navy ground.

Mr. FERNALD. In lines 3 and 5 on page 7 it will be necessary to make a similar change.

Mr. KING. Yes; I move the same amendment in those places. If the Senator will accept the amendment, and it goes to conference—if he then finds it is impracticable after further consideration, I will not press it.

Mr. FERNALD. I accept the amendment. I am anxious to get this matter through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, lines 12 and 21, and in line 3 on page 7 it is proposed to strike out "Navy" and insert "Treasury," so as to read "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. SMOOT. A similar amendment should be made on line 5, page 7.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Also, on line 5, page 7, it is proposed to strike out the word "Navy" and insert the word "Treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will now state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the words "granted by," to insert "sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of"; and on page 2, line 1, after "1918," to strike out "and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof," so as to make the section read:

That the power and authority to provide housing, local transportation, and other general community utilities as granted by sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, shall cease and determine as of the date of the approval of this act: Provided, however, That the power and authority granted by the said act of May 16, 1918, to requisition any improved or unimproved land or any right, title, or interest therein, on which houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other general community utilities and parts thereof have been constructed, shall remain vested in the President, to be exercised when necessary to protect the interest of the Government, and to cease with the termination of the war when formally proclaimed by the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 17, after the word "including," to strike out "all" and insert "such"; in line 20, after the word "act," to strike out "and" and insert "also"; and on page 3, line 7, after the word "available," to strike out "for the purposes appropriated, to be expended under the supervision of the Treasury Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," and insert "for expenditures as a lump sum by the Treasury Department in carrying out the provision of this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the various offices, bureaus, divisions, and branches of the public service and of the various corporate or other agencies exercising the powers granted by the said act of May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, and all that pertains to the same, including such officers, clerks, and employees employed therein, as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, also the official records and papers on file in and pertaining to the business of the said offices, bureaus, divisions, and branches of the public service and of the various corporate or other agencies and relating to the exercise of the said powers, together with the furniture, equipment, and supplies used in connection therewith, shall be transferred to the Treasury Department on the 30th day of June, 1920: Provided, That the unexpended balance of any and all appropriations available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, for the exercise of the power and authority prescribed in said act of May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, shall continue available for expenditure as a lump sum by the Treasury Department in carrying out the provision of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 14, after the words "property of," to strike out "any" and insert "every"; in line 18, before the word "remaining," to strike out "and"; in line 22, before the word "legal," to strike out "such"; in the same line, after the word "form," to strike out "as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury is necessary" and insert "required"; and in line 24, after the word

"America," to strike out "to be disposed of" and insert "for disposal," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury on the 30th day of June, 1920, all property of every character whatsoever acquired under the power and authority granted by the said act of Congress approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, remaining undisposed of on June 30, 1920, together with all deeds, contracts, agreements, mortgages, assignments, notes, stocks, bonds, and other evidence of security or indebtedness: Provided, That the same shall be transferred in legal form required to vest the legal or equitable title in the United States of America for disposal in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment before we leave page 3. My attention was diverted at the time the amendment was agreed to, in lines 7, 8, and 9, striking out the words "for the purposes appropriated, to be expended under the supervision of the Treasury Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for expenditure as a lump sum by the Treasury Department in carrying out the provisions of this act."

I wish to say to the Senator I think that is a very unwise amendment, and I wish to tell him why. The appropriations were made to end June 30, 1920. They are specifically provided for in the appropriation bill. The amendment means that all of that money which was appropriated, no matter what it was for, is to be thrown into a lump sum, and the Treasury Department is to expend it in carrying out the provisions of this act with no limitation whatever. They may run it over into the year 1922; the only reason that they would not do so is that no department of the United States Government ever allows an appropriation to last any longer than it can possibly get rid of it. However, the bill itself would authorize that; it is unlimited appropriation and the amount is placed in a lump sum.

Mr. President, the greatest evil involving the waste of money comes from the departments expending money appropriated in lump sums. There is no limit what they may pay for salaries or anything else, and if they have any favorites they desire to take care of it is always out of a lump-sum appropriation. I think, if the Senator will consider that amendment, he will realize that the bill as it was originally drawn would be very much better, because the money was to be expended for the purposes appropriated and "to be expended under the supervision of the Treasury Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921." It provides a limit, while there is no limit under the amendment the committee has suggested. Not only that, but all of the appropriations are put into a lump sum and the Treasury Department under this amendment can expend them in any way they desire.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the reason for the amendment was that many of these properties have or are being sold, and, of course, as soon as they are sold all expenditures in connection with them cease and can not be carried to another project. For instance, in the property here in Washington the appropriation made will not be sufficient; but the properties at Rock Island, at Moline, and at Davenport have all been sold, stopping all of the expense incident to them.

Mr. SMOOT. That is another reason why we never ought to agree to this amendment. When those properties are sold the money ought to go back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FERNALD. It does go back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Then this amendment does not affect that. The bill provides—

That the unexpended balance of any and all appropriations available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, * * * shall continue available.

Mr. FERNALD. I shall not object to the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure the Senator will not insist upon the amendment reported by the committee. I therefore ask for a reconsideration of the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, beginning on page 3, line 7.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in section 4, paragraph (a), page 4, line 16, after the words "the same," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That all deeds, contracts, or other instruments of conveyance executed by the United States Housing Corporation by its duly authorized officer or officers where the legal title to the property in question is in the name of said corporation, and by the United States of America by the Secretary of the Treasury where the title to the property in question is in the name of the United States of America, shall be conclusive evidence of the transfer of title to the property in question according to the purport of such deeds, contracts, or other instruments of conveyance, and in no case shall any purchaser or grantee thereunder be required to see to the application of any purchase money.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 2, to strike out:

To conclude and execute contracts or other obligations and to collect the principal and interest of loans made or other sums due under obligations incurred pursuant to the provisions of the said act of Congress approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof: Provided, That all moneys received from the disposal of properties or otherwise collected in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and that all deeds, contracts, assignments, or other instruments or conveyance or transfer executed by the United States Housing Corporation or other agencies through their duly authorized officer where the legal title was in the name of such corporation or other agencies prior to June 30, 1920, shall be conclusive evidence of the transfer of title according to the purport of such deeds, contracts, assignments, or other instruments of conveyance or transfer, and in no case shall any purchaser, grantee, or assignee thereunder be required to see to the application of the purchase money or other consideration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 22, to strike out the letter "c" in parentheses and insert the letter "b," and on page 6, line 6, after the word "thereof," to insert "Provided, That all moneys received from the disposal of properties or otherwise collected in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts," so as to make the clause read:

(b) To conclude and execute contracts or other obligations made or incurred under the provisions of the said act of Congress approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof; to collect the principal and interest of loans made or other sums due under such contracts or obligations and to take such other steps as are necessary to protect the interest of the Government and to fulfill the obligations duly incurred in carrying out the power and authority granted by the said act and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof: Provided, That all moneys received from the disposal of properties or otherwise collected in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have paragraph (b) stricken out. Before I ask that, however, I want to ask the Senator a question. From the print of the bill, I take it that paragraph (b), beginning on line 22, is not in lieu of paragraph (b), beginning on line 3. It is another provision entirely, is it not?

Mr. FERNALD. It is another provision; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I should like to have paragraph (b) that the committee has stricken out read, to see just what it refers to—lines 3 to 21, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out the following words, beginning on line 3, page 5:

(b) To conclude and execute contracts or other obligations and to collect the principal and interest of loans made or other sum due under obligations incurred pursuant to the provisions of the said act of Congress approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof: Provided, That all moneys received from the disposal of properties or otherwise collected in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and that all deeds, contracts, assignments, or other instruments or conveyance or transfer executed by the United States Housing Corporation or other agencies through their duly authorized officer where the legal title was in the name of such corporation or other agencies prior to June 30, 1920, shall be conclusive evidence of the transfer of title according to the purport of such deeds, contracts, assignments, or other instruments of conveyance or transfer, and in no case shall any purchaser, grantee, or assignee thereunder be required to see to the application of the purchase money or other consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take that to mean that all moneys received from the disposal of properties or otherwise collected in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. FERNALD. We thought the next section cleared it up. If the Senator will read the section beginning with line 22, he will see that it is more brief, and clears up the whole situation, I think, even better.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I asked the Senator—whether or not it was a substitute for that.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; it is a substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read then and let us see if it is. I will ask the Secretary to read the next paragraph, beginning on line 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

(b) To conclude and execute contracts or other obligations made or incurred under the provisions of the said act of Congress approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof; to collect the principal and interest of loans made or other sums due under such contracts or obligations and to take such other steps as are necessary to protect the interest of the Government and to fulfill the obligations duly incurred in carrying out the power and authority granted by the said act and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Then follows a proviso added as an amendment:

Provided, That all moneys received from the disposal of properties or otherwise collected in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that does cover the substance of the part of the bill beginning on page 5, line 3, going down to and including line 21 on the same page. It certainly does if it refers to all the acts, and I think it does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment on page 5, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 6, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That all moneys received from the disposal of properties or otherwise collected in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 15, after the word "land," to strike out "adjoining" and insert "located near," so as to read:

That immediately upon the passage of this act, the Secretary of Labor shall cause to be transferred to the Secretary of the Navy the houses, dormitories, and schoolhouse on the naval reservation at Indianhead, Md.; the houses and schoolhouse on the naval reservation at Charleston, W. Va.; the land located near the Puget Sound Navy Yard at Bremerton, Wash., with the improvements thereon, consisting of a hotel and apartment house, together with the land purchased by the United States Housing Corporation adjoining the said hotel; the same to be maintained and operated under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 5, to strike out:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1919, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanitarium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," and the same hereby are, extended so as to authorize the President to direct the transfer to the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service such lands or parts of lands, buildings, fixtures, appliances, furnishings, or furniture under the control of the various corporate or other agencies of the Government not required for the purposes of such agencies, and suitable for the use of the Public Health Service, and the said act of March 3, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, amended to this extent.

And insert:

SEC. 6. That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanitarium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," approved March 3, 1919, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer without charge to the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use of the Public Health Service, such hospital furniture and equipment, including hospital and medical supplies, motor trucks, and other motor-driven vehicles, in good condition, not required by the War Department, as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals, and the President is authorized to direct the transfer to the Treasury Department of the use of such lands or parts of lands, buildings, fixtures, appliances, furnishings, or furniture under the control of any other department or executive agency of the Government (including the United States Housing Corporation, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or other corporate agencies) not required for the purposes of such department or agency and suitable for the uses of the Public Health Service."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Maine what relevancy this section has to the subject of the dissolution of the Housing Corporation? It seems to me it is as incongruous as the introduction into a bill of this character of something dealing with the construction of an aerial railway.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, permit me to say to the Senator that there is already before our committee a bill carrying an appropriation of $80,000,000 for the establishment of hospitals, and it was felt that some of this property could be transferred to the War Department and save, as I suggested in the case of the other clause, much money in erecting new buildings. This provision reads:

That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanitarium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," approved March 3, 1919, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Then it goes on:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer without charge to the Secretary of the Treasury for the use of the Public Health Service such hospital furniture and equipment—

We have thousands of dollars' worth of furniture that would not bring anything on the market if it were sold that could be transferred to that department for the use of hospitals.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, it says "such hospital furniture."

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Do I understand that it is the plan of the Senator to transfer to the Public Health Service furniture which the Housing Corporation has?

Mr. FERNALD. We have a great deal of hospital furniture, and the proposition is to turn that over.

Mr. KING. How did the Housing Corporation acquire a vast amount of hospital furniture; was it by the improper use of public funds?

Mr. FERNALD. Quite so; yes.

Mr. KING. By a gross usurpation of authority?

Mr. FERNALD. Well, they felt that they had authority. I do not think that they had, but they went on and bought it. They own the furniture, and, of course, it is practically worthless, except for such use as it might be put to in hospitals which the Government is operating.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah if he does not understand that in this boarding-house system down here they not only have hospital service but they have doctors? I do not know whether they have dentists or not——

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. But they are furnishing amusement halls—furniture for amusement halls—and it will all have to be sold to some one finally, or else the Government will have to continue to run a theater here, and down in New Mexico it will probably have to run a bull pen for bull fights. Whatever the public wants for amusement apparently should be furnished and paid for by the Government.

Mr. KING. Answering the Senator, I confess that I have not kept pace with the faddists and cranks who have projected themselves into governmental activities. It is about time that we got rid of some of these cranks and faddists and got some sensible American citizens to look after some of these public activities.

Mr. FERNALD. I agree absolutely with what the Senator has to say. I am wondering if the Senator has read my report on the investigation of the United States Housing Corporation, which covers several pages?

Mr. KING. No; I have not had the opportunity.

Mr. FERNALD. I have made some criticisms along those lines all through, and I commend the report to the Senator's attention.

Mr. KING. I shall take the first opportunity to read it.

Mr. FERNALD. We have in these buildings, all over the country, much hospital furniture. We have it here. We have a hospital down here which is filled with girls to-day, and is equipped with much apparatus and medicine for carrying on all the work that is to be done in any hospital. This bill simply transfers that to the Public Health Service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. If my colleague will permit me, the Senator mentions the fact that there is pending before his committee a bill for the expenditure of $80,000,000 for additional hospitals.

Mr. SMOOT. Eighty-five million dollars.

Mr. KING. Eighty-five million dollars, my colleague says. I want to suggest to my friend from Maine that when he becomes more familiar with the Public Health Service he will be surprised at their moderation. It is a wonder that they did not ask for $150,000,000. The fact is, they ought not to have the $85,000,000, and they will never get it with my vote, and I shall oppose it in every legitimate and proper way. I am not in favor now of giving to that organization, in this indirect way, anything else. Whatever they get, let them get it as the result of a fair and full investigation, and let the needs of the organization be fully demonstrated. I have no doubt that they would take $100,000,000 worth of hospital fixtures, and what not, if the Government had them. I think it is unwise to turn them over in this way. If this organization ought to have them, let them buy them in the proper way, under appropriations which are made by Congress, or upon full investigation, if it is clear that additional hospital supplies or other property are needed, then by appropriate legislation designate the amount and value of the same and charge the Public Health Service with it and credit the agency that parts with such property.

Mr. FERNALD. I will say to the Senator that this bill contemplates that. He will find on page 8, down in line 6, the following provision:

And the President is authorized to direct the transfer to the Treasury Department of the use of such lands or parts of lands, buildings, fixtures—

And so forth. That is all provided for. It simply turns it over to the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. I wonder if the Senator has read the last provision, to which he has called my colleague's attention. He will find that it goes further than the first provision. The first provision is that "such hospital furniture and equipment, including hospital and medical supplies, motor trucks, and other motor-driven vehicles, in good condition, not required by the War Department, as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals," shall be turned over—and what more? Under this amendment you authorize and direct the President to transfer to the Treasury Department "the use of such lands or parts of lands, buildings, fixtures, appliances, furnishings, or furniture under the control of any other department or executive agency of the Government," including the United States Housing Corporation, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or other corporate agencies, "not required for the purposes of such department or agency and suitable for the uses of the Public Health Service."

I want to say to the Senator that that means that the President of the United States can transfer to the Public Health Service almost any of these buildings and any lands he may see fit to transfer that are not being used now by any of the agencies of the Government. The Public Health Service requested $85,000,000, as the Senator says. I have the statement in writing of an official of this Government who says that beyond a doubt every one of the soldiers who will require hospital attention can be taken care of in the soldiers' homes as they exist in the different parts of the United States to-day.

Mr. FERNALD. Let me say to the Senator that I have already taken that up and written to these homes, and I find that that is absolutely true. In this instance, however, here is a lot of medicine, thousands of dollars' worth of medicine, that would not sell for a cent at auction or at private sale, and this simply transfers it to the Public Health Service. Now, of what earthly use would that be to anybody, and who would buy it? In this instance, however, it may be turned over to that department and will save the Government from the necessity of purchasing those things.

Mr. SMOOT. If the amendment only went that far, nobody would object to it; but medicine is included. Medicine is not land; and lands, of course, are not to be used by the Public Health Service to administer to patients.

Mr. FERNALD. But there are hospitals that may be used by the Public Health Service, instead of expending $85,000,000 in the building of more hospitals. Let me say that it is much more economical for the Government to turn over such hospitals and such lands as they now have. Instead of going ahead and making another appropriation and building more houses on purchased land, this property that is not worth a cent may be turned over for the use of the Public Health Service under this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The proper thing to do is to have the Public Health Service come before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and ask for an appropriation to build these buildings, and then it will not be made if we have these buildings to transfer to them.

Mr. FERNALD. They get everything they come before the Appropriations Committee for, and all the other committees.

Mr. SMOOT. But if the object of the amendment is as the Senator says, then the amendment is drawn in the way that it is drawn by the department for some purpose.

Mr. FERNALD. The purpose, I think, I can explain to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment says what the purpose of it is.

Mr. FERNALD. Does the Senator know that the United States Housing Corporation is incorporated in many States? The United States Housing Corporation that we have here is not the only such corporation. They are incorporated under the laws of the State of New York and other States.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill already provides that all of these transfers shall be made to the Secretary of the Treasury. That does not affect this at all, and I tell the Senator that this is dragged into this bill because there is not a bill that passes Congress but that the Public Health Service are looking for an opportunity to add something on to it; and all they have to do is simply to say, "It is for the health of the people," and any kind of an appropriation on the top of the earth is granted.

Mr. FERNALD. I thought I was doing a great service to this country when I proposed turning over the medicine and the appliances that we have in these hospitals, and the hospitals that the Government has already built at a tremendous expense, and saving the building of other hospitals for which bills are already pending before committees, and will go through somehow. The amount will not be $85,000,000, but there will be something appropriated, probably.

Mr. SMOOT. But the trouble is that the amendment does not reach what the Senator thought it did reach. The amendment is drawn so that they can take any buildings or any lands.

Mr. FERNALD. Any lands that these corporations may have in the District of Columbia or in the various States.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it refers to any agency of the Government, or any department of the Government, or any kind of building.

Mr. FERNALD. The Emergency Fleet Corporation have a little property that is embraced in this bill, but another bill will be drawn to turn over that property. It seemed to me a very wise thing, after it was shown to me where they had property and the use to which it was put, that it should be embraced in this bill. I can not see any objection to that amendment. I am sure that it is saving thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government to turn over to the Public Health Service property that we already have and that will not sell for a single dollar, either at private sale or at public auction.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the amendment were restricted to what the Senator thinks it is for it would be all right, but it grants sweeping authority to the President of the United States to turn over to the Public Health Service any of the buildings that any department of the Government is not using.

Mr. FERNALD. The President already has that authority under the act of March 3, 1919.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, then, if he has there is no need of this amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. With the exception of the properties that the Housing Corporation had, and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the United States Housing Corporation of New York and other States.

Mr. SMOOT. This amendment is not limited to that. If it were I would not object for a moment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator wait for just a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. FERNALD. I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has an amendment to offer which may cover the matter.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I realize that the power given in that part of the amendment to which reference has been made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is a pretty broad and sweeping power, and I am going to move an amendment. I move, after the word "hospitals," in line 6, page 8, to insert a period and to strike out the remaining part of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator if he would not accept such an amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. Would not the Senator be satisfied if we included the appliances and medicines in the hospitals now already owned?

Mr. SMOOT. They will be included in it. The Senator will find in line 2 that it reads:

> Including hospital and medical supplies, motor trucks, and other motor-driven vehicles in good condition not required by the War Department as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals.

Mr. FERNALD. I accept the Senator's amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "hospitals," in line 6, strike out the comma and all down to the period in line 14, so the section will read:

> SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer without charge to the Secretary of the Treasury for the use of the Public Health Service such hospital furniture and equipment, including hospital and medical supplies, motor trucks, and other motor-driven vehicles in good condition not required by the War Department as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] consent to another amendment, as follows: After the words "supplies," in line 3, page 8, strike out the words "motor trucks, and other motor-driven vehicles, in good condition, not required by the War Department, as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals"?

If I believed that the Public Health Service would act fairly and reasonably in the matter, I would not object to that language; but, as my colleague has said, that agency is so grasping that it will not be content until it gets millions for additional buildings not necessary and for equipment costing millions which is not required. It will demand vehicles not required, and thereby lay additional burdens upon the Government.

Mr. FERNALD. I could hardly accept that, for the reason that we have thousands of motor trucks here now that would be practically useless, and the department would simply buy new trucks. It seems wise, therefore, to turn these over to that department.

Mr. KING. Of course; but are we going to authorize them to purchase additional trucks? We have made liberal appropriations for this service for the purchase of necessary equipment, and I think its needs are satisfied. Certainly they are until the regular appropriation bill, which will soon be passed, places additional funds at the disposal of the officials. We made liberal appropriations for the Public Health Service for motor vehicles and for whatever else was necessary to cover the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. FERNALD. This provides for trucks not required by the War Department. They are practically useless.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that he knows that by previous legislation we authorized the War Department to turn over to the Agricultural Department and, I think, to the Public Health Service motor vehicles that the War Department does not require, and there have been turned over to the Department of Agriculture—at least there have been allocated to it, according to information furnished me some months ago—some 18,000 motor trucks and motor vehicles. I do not know how many more have been allocated, but it was stated they were going to allocate to the Agricultural Department more than 25,000 motor vehicles. How many have been allocated and turned over to the Public Health Service by the War Department I am not prepared to state.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Was not that transfer of motor transports by the War Department limited to the Post Office Department and the Department of Agriculture? Were there any allocated to the Public Health Service?

Mr. KING. My recollection is that there were some, but I will say to the Senator that I am not positive.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey and to my colleague that I think the words ought to remain in the bill, but if they do remain in the bill, and the Public Health Service ask for motor trucks in their estimate for the next appropriation bill, they will not get them. We are no longer counting by the hundreds or thousands the motor trucks and the automobiles which the Government owns now. We are counting them by the acre. "How many acres have you?" If we give the trucks to them now and can thus stop an appropriation for such purpose hereafter, I think that is exactly what we had better do.

Mr. KING. If my colleague will permit, I think that his suggestion would be a wise one were it not for the fact that the Public Health Service have such an ambitious program. They are not now satisfied with hundreds of employees and a few million dollars annually, but they demand thousands of employees and tens of millions of dollars. There are overlapping divisions and constantly increasing demands. With that ambitious program, and if the bill passes with this provision in, I make the prediction now that they will submit demands to the War Department for thousands of motor vehicles upon the theory that their ambitious and extravagant program will ultimately be carried through and approved by Congress. If there were some limitation in the bill as to the number to be turned over to them, I would not object. But I warn the Senator that if the bill goes through in this form the Public Health Service will make demands upon the War Department for hundreds, if not thousands, of motor vehicles, based upon the extravagant and ambitious program which some of its officials have projected. Senators will be surprised when they are brought face to face with this bureaucratic agency and learn of its plans and purposes. Already it has inaugurated a plan to go into States and investigate the schools and exercise a sort of paternalistic care over school children. Surveys of various kinds are being planned. Thousands of employees are scurrying throughout the land, all at Government expense. Soon a department of public health will be demanded, and millions annually demanded for its support. Executive agencies grow great and fatten upon the credulity and negligence of the people.

Mr. FERNALD. I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment to the amendment for the very reason that he suggests and that his colleague suggests. We have these motor trucks by the thousands of acres. There is a bill now on the calendar to erect buildings for them that will cost several hundred thousand dollars. If we could turn these automobiles and motor trucks over to somebody for nothing, it would be money saved to the Government.

Mr. KING. The Senator fails to catch the point I was attempting to make, namely, that if there is no limitation placed upon the functionaries of this service they will demand far more than they need. The Senator says we have these automobiles, so let us get rid of them. If we turn them over to this department and it does not need them, it will have charges against the Government for maintenance and for the upkeep of the vehicles, which, in the end, will aggregate thousands and tens of thousands of dollars per year. It is not economy to give to some department thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of vehicles when that department does not need them. The Senator now, I respectfully submit, is not acting in the interest of economy by turning over to this service without any limitation whatever the large number of motor vehicles which it will demand simply because the Government has "acres" of them which it is not using and which are costing the Government a great deal to maintain.

Mr. FERNALD. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. KING. I shall not press it if the Senator from Maine will not accept it. I had hoped he would accept it or at least accept a limitation as to the number. My only reason for not demanding a vote is that because of the lack of a quorum it would result in defeating the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 9, line 9, after the word "Corporation," to strike out "on June 30, 1920"; in line 14, after the word "effective," to insert "on June 30, 1920"; and in line 15, after the words "this act," to strike out "on June 30, 1920," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Labor immediately upon the passage of this act shall cause to be instituted such legal steps as are necessary to wind up the affairs of the United States Housing Corporation, so as to dissolve the said corporation and all other corporate agencies heretofore and now exercising the powers and authority granted by the act of Congress approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, and to make effective on June 30, 1920, the transfer to the Treasury Department provided for by this act: Provided, That on June 30, 1920, the Secretary of Labor shall report to Congress in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 19, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes" (United States Housing Corporation), and in addition thereto shall furnish a detailed statement showing all real and personal property acquired under and by virtue of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof; showing the use to which each piece of property was applied and showing all property disposed of, together with the cost and the amount received from the sale of the same: Provided further, That the Secretary of Labor shall furnish a copy of the said report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator from Maine that if these amendments are agreed to there will not be any requirement as to a date in the bill?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, yes; the amendments strike out the date in two places, but it is found in the proviso—

That on June 30, 1920 the Secretary of Labor shall report to Congress in accordance with the provisions of the act—

And so forth.

Which winds up the affairs of the Housing Corporation. We cut out the date in two places and have it appear only once.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator from Maine if he will consent to an amendment in section 4 which will limit the time within which the Treasury Department must make disposition of this property?

I call the Senator's attention to a fact with which he is familiar, namely, that if we give an executive agency any discretion as to the duration of its existence, it will never die. If you leave it to the discretion of any department, I do not care how patriotic the employees of that department may be, there will be a thousand excuses urged for the continuance of the agency or the instrumentality. We may be settling the business and activities of the Housing Corporation, but we are not ending the projects which have cost millions. We are permitting a discretion to the Treasury Department, and I prophesy that unless there is further legislation we will for years hear of this incompleted work. We should fix a time limit and compel the settlement of every phase of the questions and matters involved within that limit. Our work by this bill is incomplete.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator, I think, must realize that it is an impossibility to close this out entirely, for the reason that notes which run for some years ahead have been taken for the property, and it will be necessary to collect the interest on those notes. It is quite impossible to close out entirely the business of the Housing Corporation, although it ought not to take any or very many extra employees with the Treasury Department, because the Housing Corporation expects to sell all of the property and get everything into notes and money to be turned over to the Treasury Department.

Mr. KING. Suppose the Housing Department does not sell the real estate, and it is turned over to the Treasury Department?

Mr. FERNALD. I think it would be unwise to provide that the property must be sold by a given date, because it might not be advisable. The price might not be fairly made on the property that must be sold. I do not think it would be wise to fix a date when everything should be closed out that is now owned by the Housing Corporation. It can not be done, because these dormitories here in Washington could hardly be sold by the 30th of June. I think it is wise to leave it in the hands of the Treasury Department.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator will regret the conclusion that he has announced. If more Senators were here, I should ask for a vote upon the amendment, but I know we can not get a quorum to-day, and that would defeat the passage of the bill. Therefore I shall not press it, but I warn the Senator now, if he will permit me, that unless there is a limitation placed in the bill there will be urged as long as he is in the Senate of the United States pretexts for the maintenance of an organization in the Treasury Department and the retention of scores, if not hundreds, of employees for the purpose of handling the remnants of the defunct Housing Corporation.

I think that the Senator ought to consent to an amendment compelling the winding up and sale of all of the property of this corporation by the 30th of December, 1920. If the Senator does not do it, I assure him now that as long as he is here he will be compelled to face demands for appropriations for the salaries of a large number of employees who will be retained by the Treasury Department.

Mr. FERNALD. I do not accept that because I do not think it would be wise.

Mr. KING. Rather than defeat the bill, I will not press my suggested amendment; but I express the view that it is unfortunate that we can not free ourselves from the clutches of scores of unnecessary executive and administrative agencies. We are destroying one by this bill, but only changing its form. It will still persist as a division or bureau in the Treasury Department.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to suggest a formal amendment in lines 22 and 23, page 3 of the bill. The language, with the amendments adopted, is as follows:

In legal form required to vest the legal or equitable title.

I think the word "such" should be restored before "legal" and the words "as is" inserted before the word "required," so that it would read "in such legal form as is required to vest legal or equitable title."

Mr. FERNALD. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which "such" was stricken out.

Mr. FERNALD. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays the unfinished business before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 10, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 9, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. MANN of Illinois assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our souls unto Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, from whom cometh all wisdom, strength, and purity. Teach us, we pray Thee, how to think consecutively and reach wise conclusions, that we may do our whole duty as it is revealed to us as individuals and as a people.

Generation after generation comes and goes. History repeats itself with dire consequences. Hence we pray for wisdom to guide us, strength to sustain us, that we may do our duty and avert evil to ourselves and mankind. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 7, 1920, was read and approved.

CONFERENCE—APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILITARY POSTS, ETC.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8819, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California if the item of $2,700,000, relating to the purchase of the Dayton aircraft plant, is embodied in any of the Senate amendments?

Mr. KAHN. I do not believe it is.

Mr. MADDEN. If it is, will the gentleman be willing to bring that item back for the consideration of the House?

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection whatever to doing that.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection, then.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this, I understand, is the bill that provided certain emergency sites?

Mr. KAHN. It is the bill to allow a continuation of work on some posts and aviation fields which was stopped under the provision that was put into the Army appropriation bill approved last July. This allows a continuation of that work. I want to say to the gentleman that there was a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs that went to nearly all of the various sites involved. That committee came back and made a report, and the Senate put some additional items on the bill.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. GARD. The subcommittee which made the report reported unanimously in favor of the Dayton-Wright project at Dayton, Ohio?

Mr. KAHN. I do not recall whether or not there was a unanimous report on that. I will frankly say to the gentleman that when the bill passed the House "the gentleman from California" was at home in California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there are several Senate amendments touching matters relative to which I think there is a very decided opinion on the part of the House. I have confidence that the House conferees will represent strenuously—and, I trust, successfully—the judgment of the House touching those matters.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. With the consent of the House, the present occupant of the chair will name the conferees. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following conferees were announced: Mr. KAHN, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. CRAGO, Mr. DENT, and Mr. FIELDS.

WOMAN-SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a telegram read relating to woman suffrage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to have read a telegram relating to woman suffrage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CARSON, NEV., February 7, 1920.

Hon. CHAS. R. EVANS,
Washington, D. C.:

Nevada Legislature ratified national suffrage amendment at 10 minutes past 12 o'clock to-day.

EMMET B. BOYLE, Governor.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE ON LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, on next Thursday we will celebrate throughout the Nation Lincoln's birthday, and I ask unanimous consent to address the House on the subject of Lincoln at that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to address the House on next Thursday, Lincoln's birthday, for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there not a previous order of the House in reference to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER] addressing the House on the same day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read for the information of the House the order heretofore entered.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. My request is to follow his address.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. FESS, by unanimous consent:

Ordered, That Mr. WEBSTER be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the life and character of Abraham Lincoln, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, Thursday, February 12, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on Thursday, following the address named in the order already entered. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming to this request and remind him that this matter of granting requests for future addresses on legislative days has been discussed in the House a number of times, and I remember having one of my colleagues desiring to ask unanimous consent for 20 minutes at some future date, and I suggested to him that he see the gentleman from Wyoming and try to arrange to let him be heard. But it is bad policy to undertake to agree now upon unanimous consent for debate at some future date, not knowing what will come up on that date. I merely call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming to it, because if this request is granted other requests will be made and it will be difficult for him to be consistent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and the House understand my position in regard to these matters. I have said on several occasions that I felt it to be my duty to object to unanimous-consent requests of this character under ordinary circumstances. I have felt, however, that I could not properly object to addresses that related to important anniversaries. And while any Member of the House has a right to object in a matter of this kind, on the anniversary of the birthday of a very great man I do not feel that I can make objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MONAHAN]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PRICE OF COMBED COTTON YARNS.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. TILSON. I wish to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 451.

Whereas the prices of combed cotton yarns have increased several hundred per cent during the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive, more than 100 per cent of which was during the last six months of the year 1919; and

Whereas this increase has been greatly in excess of the increase of the cost of the raw cotton and the labor entering into the manufacture of such yarns, and can not therefore be attributed to such increases: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby requested to inquire into the increase in the price of combed cotton yarns during the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive, and especially during the last six months of the year 1919; to ascertain the cause or necessity for and the reasonableness of such increase; to ascertain the difference between the increase in the price of the yarn on the one hand and the increase in the cost of raw cotton and the labor entering into the cost of the manufacture of such yarn; and to report to the House at the earliest practicable date the result of the investigation, together with such recommendations as the commission may deem advisable and proper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of the resolution and for its immediate consideration in the House.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, just a brief statement. I have spoken to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee in regard to this, and he informs me that owing to the pressure of the railroad-bill conference there has been no meeting of his committee since the introduction of this resolution. He himself has no objection to it whatever, and, so far as he could see, there was no objection to this request being made. I have also conferred with the Federal Trade Commission, and find that the commission is willing to make the investigation, and would have done it upon my request as a Member of Congress, except for the fact that the commission has so many requests of this kind. It seemed that the commission has heretofore tried to confine itself to requests made by departments of the Government or by one of the Houses of Congress.

Mr. RAYBURN. Did the gentleman consult with the minority members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. TILSON. I did not. I spoke to the chairman only.

Mr. RAYBURN. I object, Mr. Speaker, to the request.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request in reference to the observance of the birthday of Mr. Lincoln. It has been customary in the House for several years, after the reading of the Journal, to have Lincoln's address at Gettysburg read. My former colleague, Mr. Russell, of Missouri, inaugurated the custom, and he read the address every year during his service. I had the honor of reading it myself last year. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would be exceedingly appropriate for the House this year to request the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], immediately after the reading of the Journal on Lincoln's birthday, to read the Gettysburg address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri aska unanimous consent that on Thursday, before or after——

Mr. RUBEY. After the reading of the Journal——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal——

Mr. RUBEY. And before the speeches are made——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is requested to read the Lincoln Gettysburg address. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12272, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12272, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve it.

Mr. BLANTON. When the House adjourned Saturday evening I had made a point of order to two provisos in the paragraph beginning in line 9, page 27. The gentlemen from California, three of them, Mr. HERSMAN, Mr. BARBOUR, and Mr. LEA, desired to be heard on the merits of this paragraph, and in order that they may have 5 minutes each, the three gentlemen, I reserve the point of order for 15 minutes for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I stated the point of order last Saturday, but I will restate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desires to reserve his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it in order that the gentlemen may be heard on the merits of the paragraph.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MADDEN. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. It is this——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN] yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to know whether or not consent has been granted for the 15 minutes allowed to these three gentlemen. Is it done by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has reserved his point of order, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN]. There is no consent granted for specific debate. A motion for the regular order, I suppose, would bring either the withdrawal or the making of the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN] recognized for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, may we have it understood that at the end of 15 minutes the point of order will be disposed of?

Mr. BLANTON. I will state that I intend to make the point of order then.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask, then, for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MADDEN. I make it now. The gentleman can be taken off his feet on a point of order, can he not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman reserve his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. If it is to be reserved for 15 minutes and then made, I think it would be a saving of time to make it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order.

Mr. HERSMAN. I ask that the gentleman may withhold it in the hope that we may present this matter in such a way that the point of order will be withdrawn.

Mr. MADDEN. In view of the fact that one of the Members was heard for five minutes on this subject on Saturday, I am perfectly willing to withhold it for five minutes, to give the gentleman from California five minutes. I will not extend it beyond that.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is not to be taken out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I find myself in a most trying position. What I may say or fail to say may affect the destinies of many families, and I hope that I may have the indulgence of the gentleman who has made this point of order so that I may present the facts as they appear to me.

The Federal Government for 15 years has had under its control two tracts of land in California, of 20 acres each, in different sections of the State. They have been carrying on experiments on these vineyards for a period of 15 years. The Government has collected from every part of the world different varieties of grapes, and they have now assembled 700 different varieties, which are being cultivated and studied on these two tracts. The real value of these experiments of over 15 years can hardly be measured in dollars and cents. There are 180,000 acres devoted to the culture of wine grapes in California; there are 210,000 acres devoted to the culture of raisin grapes in California; and hundreds of thousands of acres devoted to the culture of table grapes. These experiments carried on by the Federal Government have sought to find the soils suitable to these different varieties of grapes and the kinds of grapes suited to the resistant roots that are so necessary to the successful cultivation of grapes in California. The passage of the eighteenth amendment has made it necessary for the owners to sell these two tracts, and without they are purchased the Federal Government will lose the largest and most valuable collection of grapes in the world.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If these grapes are worth several hundred million dollars, including the land on which they are grown, does the gentleman think that the business men of California, for the want of $27,000, will allow this experimentation work to be wiped out, when they can buy this land, or still lease it to the Government and allow the Government to continue the carrying on of the experiments, without buying the land?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BARBOUR. These experiments are being carried on for the benefit of the industry all over the United States. The State of California is not penurious in its expenses in that State, but these experiments are being carried on for the benefit of the industry wherever it exists in this country. It is not a local proposition.

Mr. HERSMAN. I must hasten along, as my time is limited. We all know the difficulty of collecting money from a large number of people for experimental work. Experimentation is the work of the State and Federal Governments.

We would not appeal to the Federal Government if it were possible to get the State of California to advance this money at the present time. But it is not possible, as the legislature of our State will not meet for a year and a half, and any legislation that we could get through at that time would be entirely too late to meet this emergency. We have only the Federal Government to appeal to to secure these tracts which are so valuable to our viticultural interests. The purchase of these two parcels, besides being sound economically and appealing to the good business judgment of every man, also appeals to the moral side of our nature. It seems to me there is an obligation resting upon the Federal Government at this time to interest itself in securing these tracts. Under the passage of the eighteenth amendment the income from 180,000 acres has been wiped out. Six thousand families found themselves in a day reduced from a position of security to poverty, their sole means of livelihood having been taken from them.

Mr. Chairman, I care not how we voted or how we thought as to the advisability of passing our prohibition laws, there is in every American heart a feeling of fair play and justice which would prompt every man to hope that in some way or by some means this vast amount of wealth could be saved, that a way could be found to utilize our wine grapes by discovering a method by which their sugar content could be extracted or by experimentation find the proper table grape to graft onto these old and mature vines. I can not believe there is a man in this Congress who has so little business sagacity that he would not be willing to appropriate a few thousand dollars in order to try to save millions of dollars to the economic resources of our Nation. By finding a way to utilize the wine grapes of California the saving in taxes to the Federal Government in one year from this property would far exceed the expenditure proposed by the Agricultural Committee for the purchase of these two tracts.

And, further, Mr. Chairman, I can hardly see how anyone who felt it his duty to vote for the prohibition amendment could so harden his heart that at this time he would not be willing to vote to appropriate a few thousand dollars in order to find a method of saving the property which he had thought it his duty to vote to destroy. In addition to the financial wisdom of purchasing this property and the moral obligation which seems to me to rest upon the Federal Government so far as it can to assist the vineyardists of our State, there is also the human compassion that will appeal to everyone to aid as far as possible those who through no fault of their own have been deprived of their property. The vineyardists of California a few years ago could not have looked forward to the sweeping enactment of the prohibition amendment, as the State and Federal Governments have continued to encourage them to plant and tend to their vines. They and their families face the future without hope of saving any of their long and hard fought for gains. If we can now step in and with the expenditure of a small sum of money point the way to a different use for their property, a use that is not in conflict with our laws, certainly we have done something, and not more than should be done by our Federal Government. And if we are successful in our efforts we can rejoice with them. It is hard to realize——

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Is your purpose in advocating that proposition due to the fact that you want to make the transition that is necessary on account of the Federal amendment from an economic expenditure and for the benefit of your people?

Mr. HERSMAN. We have 180,000 acres in wine grapes, and we do not know how to use those grapes. We are in hopes that a method will be discovered by which these grapes can be utilized, their sugar content extracted, or a suitable process discovered by which they can be manufactured into a nonintoxicating beverage; or they may be successfully grafted into the right kind of raisin grapes, perhaps. If these two experimental stations are wiped out the Federal Government will have absolutely nothing to start with. They have spent 15 years in experimenting on different varieties, and now we are up to a point where if the land is not secured the work of many years will be lost. It will take years to start over again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman and his statement of the case have been so illuminating that I think there is a great deal of merit to the item to which I made the reservation to the point of order, and in view of what the gentleman says and the fact that he has convinced me, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. LAYTON. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I still have my reservation.

Mr. LAYTON. I insist on the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. If the regular order is insisted on——

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

Mr. BLANTON. If the regular order is insisted on, which would prevent our colleague from California [Mr. LEA] being heard on the merits, it forces me to make the point of order, or waive it, and I make the point of order to the two provisos on page 27, in the paragraph which begins with line 9, providing for using $27,000 to purchase land in California. It is new legislation, unauthorized by law, and it is a bad policy for this Government to indulge in.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard a moment on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. LEA of California. I do. I am familiar with the circumstances in this particular case. The land in question is not in my district. One of these vineyards is in the district of my colleague [Mr. CURRY of California] and the other in the district of Mr. BARBOUR. The situation here is not purely one of purchasing land. The Government already has a partial title in this property. At the present time the title of the Government is a leasehold interest, which is going to expire. We determined that the only practical thing to do is to acquire this property by purchase. The Committee on Agriculture did a businesslike and commendable thing when they inserted this provision in the bill. It will be helpful to the grape industry in California, which is a great industry.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Has the Government any investment there in the shape of buildings, and so forth?

Mr. LEA of California. Not in the shape of buildings; but the Government has an investment of thousands of dollars that will be lost if this particular property is not retained.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the nature of that investment?

Mr. LEA of California. It consists of the experimental vines. The Government has there the greatest collection of vines on earth, assembled in these vineyards. These vines are attached to the soil and will be lost unless the Government retains this property.

There are two fundamental reasons why the Government ought to do this. The first reason is that there is at least $100,000,000 invested in vines in California. As a method of permanently improving them, this experimental vineyard is entirely consistent with businesslike principles and economy.

Second, and the pressing point is that prohibition has destroyed the value of at least $40,000,000 worth of vines in California that at the present time are of no practical value for any other purpose. Now, what we want to do in the immediate future is for the Government to solve the problem it is attempting to solve, of making these vines usable for food purposes, by grafting them into varities that will furnish a food product that can be lawfully supplied to the commerce of this country and the commerce of the world without violating the law. I appeal to the gentleman from Texas to consider this proposition, and ask him to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is it not a fact that we import annually into this country from France and the countries of southern Europe over $1,000,000 worth of Zante currants?

Mr LEA of California. Very much more than that.

Mr. BARBOUR. And the Department of Agriculture is already experimenting with the idea of producing these so-called currants in California, which are really small raisins, and the department believe from the experiments already made that these currants can be produced in California.

Mr. LEA of California. That is absolutely true. The experiments are now in progress.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will go with the gentleman to any reasonable extent to assist these wine growers in California in rehabilitating themselves and getting into a new business, but we can do that without buying land. The gentleman knows, and every other man here knows, that if we buy this land out in California it is going to mean the expenditure of thousands of dollars in the future, and it is a policy to which I am not going to be a party when it can be prevented by a proper point of order.

Mr. LEA of California. There is no other practical way of doing it, because this investment of the Government, representing thousands of dollars, is in these vines which are attached to the soil, a part of the realty, and the Government loses them the moment its lease expires. I believe the Committee on Agriculture deserve great praise for attempting to help this industry in California. It was a common-sense, businesslike thing to do. What they propose would be helpful to a great industry. If the gentleman wants to help these men rehabilitate themselvs, there is no better way to do it. In fact, it is a pressing problem. These men must either dig up $40,000,000 worth of vines or else have a hope that may induce them to go ahead to turn the product of their vines into a food product.

We have experimental stations over this country. It is not a new policy. It is simply continuing a policy that already exists, and this great industry can be materially increased and developed, even though the Government retains these experimental vineyards for a long period of years.

Mr. MILLER. Can not the Government do it more economically under the method provided in this bill than it could otherwise?

Mr. LEA of California. No business man on earth would abandon these vineyards. Nothing could be more absurd than to throw away the investment which the Government already has and allow somebody else to acquire the property.

Mr. RAKER. I should like to be heard for five minutes on the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May we have a ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. RAKER. I should like to be heard.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am going to make a motion in a moment that we permit the discussion of the question. I insist on a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. RAKER. Before the Chair rules on the point of order, let me say this to the Chair: It has been shown that the Government has appropriated money and has expended it in the vines that are on these two vineyards. The Government by its lease holds an interest in the real estate, a leasehold interest, to be sure. Now, while the point of order goes to the question of the right to change from a leasehold to a purchase, could not the Chair legitimately hold that this is simply changing from a leasehold estate, which the Government now has, to the obtaining of a title for a longer period of time in a thing that the Government already has an interest in?

That being the case, if technically it can not be maintained and the Chair technically has to rule upon the point of order, then I appeal to the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that this is not a discussion of the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. I have the five minutes, and the Chair will hear me, and then I am through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is discussing the point of order. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from California if the land provided for in this proviso adjoins any tract of land already owned by the Government?

Mr. RAKER. I understand it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 13, page 27, the figures "$110,200" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$80,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 27, line 13, strike out the figures "$110,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$80,000."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to cripple this service. We appropriated for the current year $83,200 under this item and provide that $20,000 of it may be used in connection with the investigation of grape culture. Now, the committee brings in a provision for the purchase of land that will cost $39,000.

I confess I have not been quite able to understand why in this critical situation of the grape industry of California we should be asked to buy land which without the critical condition we had no trouble in leasing.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman permit me right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will state a thing which is to the point, I will yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. Until the eighteenth amendment was adopted——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not the point.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am getting to the point as fast as I can, and the gentleman will see that it is to the point if he will permit me to state the proposition. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will if the gentleman will get to the point.

Mr. BARBOUR. These experiment stations are on the land of people who were in the business of producing wine grapes. The eighteenth amendment has wiped that industry out of existence. Had the industry continued, this agreement would have gone on without limit of time, but now these men who are no longer interested in the business of producing wine grapes are selling their lands. They are selling the lands on which these experiment stations are located.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, we are told repeatedly that the prohibition amendment has rendered the grape industry of California almost innocuous, in spite of the fact that grapes are selling for higher prices than ever before.

Mr. BARBOUR. This year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If this land could be leased while there was a profitable industry being carried on in growing wine grapes, and that industry has ceased, will somebody explain why the Government can not lease the land when the industry has been taken away?

Mr. BARBOUR. The lessor of the land is parting with the title to it, and the lease can not continue.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They can not use this land on the basis of $600 an acre for any purpose except raising grapes. That is nearly $1,000 an acre for this land.

Mr. BARBOUR. And a most reasonable price.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may be for raising grapes, but for nothing else.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is what the land is used for.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is all it is good for. They tell us that the industry is to be destroyed, and therefore they must have the land to raise the grapes on. If the industry is to be destroyed, what do they want to raise more grapes for? If the industry is to be continued and the land is to be worth $1,000 an acre to raise grapes on it, there is no reason why the Government should buy the land.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; I do not yield. Each of the gentleman has had time to explain to the House and neither one has. I am not opposing your investigations out there. I am perfectly willing to let you carry on your investigations. The land item has gone out of the bill, and there is no reason why we should make the appropriation to buy the land and then have the Government divert it to something else in no way connected with the raising of grapes. I am perfectly willing to give them $20,000, as they have this year, or more, if they need it, for the grape investigation. I do not think that we ought to say that we will put in a bill an item of $39,000 for the purchase of land, and then when the item goes out leave the total sum the same and encourage the department to use the money somewhere else in no way connected with the raising of grapes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. First, I would like to modify my amendment so as to insert the figures $83,200 instead of the other figures.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. The Clerk will report the proposed modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 13, strike out the figures "$110,200" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$83,200."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: He seeks to reduce the total sum in the value of these two tracts of land. That is all the amendment proposes?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is all. I seek to reduce the amount that was cut off for the purchase of these two tracts of land.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to answer the question that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has asked, Why are these vineyardists suffering if this land is worth $600 per acre? This land as a vineyard is worth nothing because it has 700 varieties of grapes on it. Who wants to buy a vineyard with 700 varieties of grapes? The value of that land is not in the grapes that are on it, but in the land itself, as it is in close proximity to Fresno and in the rich Napa Valley. It is worth $600 an acre without anything on it. The 700 varieties of grapes that the Government has put there are a menace to the land, to a private owner. No man wants to buy a vineyard or an orchard with 700 varieties of grapes or trees. What could he do with them? The only ones it is valuable to is to the Government of the United States and the people of the United States, because of the fact that for 15 years the Federal Government has collected and experimented on many varieties of grapes in order that the vineyardists of the whole United States may improve the quality of their table grapes and improve the quality of their raisin grapes and improve the quality of their wine grapes, and to find out what kind of grapes are congenial to the resistant stock and what soils are favorable to the different varieties of grapes. That is the value of this property. It is because the United States Government for 15 years has collected varieties of grapes from all over the world and has placed them there. This property is now going to be sold. The reason it is going to be sold is: The California Wine Association, the largest wine manufacturers in the United States, owns 600 acres in this one tract and 3,000 acres in another tract near by. When the eighteenth amendment went into effect their business was wiped out, and they are disposing of all of their property, all their vineyards. We find that this tract of 20 acres, which the Federal Government had as an experimental station, is a very valuable piece of property. It is worth $600 an acre without a grapevine on it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If this item is not decreased, if we keep the item as it is, would it help to carry on these vineyards? If the department can not carry on the vineyards anyway, I do not see why it should not go out. If this sum remains as it is now in the bill, does the gentleman understand that they could make some arrangement for further leasing to carry on these vineyards?

Mr. HERSMAN. We have tried in every way to get aid. The legislature of our State does not meet for a year and a half, and these vineyards are to be sold now. We are hoping to save to the grape industry of California and of this Nation this valuable collection and to preserve this station. The Federal Government has got to come to the rescue. If it does not, it is absolutely lost. It is illuminating to find that every man in this House realizes the wisdom, the good business sense, the moral obligation, and stirred by human compassion is anxious to purchase this tract with the one exception of this wart from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. I want to say this: I am mighty glad that all the rest of that splendid Texas delegation have hearts and souls and would not so bemean themselves as to deprive 6,000 families of a helping hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman is getting mad now. The gentleman from Texas can maintain his own position on this floor. He is big enough——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. And broad enough and strong enough to maintain his own position.

Mr. HERSMAN. You can be assured I will maintain mine.

The CHAIRMAN. Both gentlemen are out of order.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will not object, because I think he ought to revise them when he cools off.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Evidently the gentleman who has made the motion does not appreciate what this amendment means or what was in the original amendment. The Government owns these varieties of grapevines and they have cost a large sum of money. It has taken years to gather them together. They are valuable property not only to California but to the entire United States. They were gathered for the purpose of wine grapes alone, but it has been demonstrated in some grafting that has already been done that these 700 varieties, by proper grafting and pruning and handling, will increase the food products of this country by many millions of dollars.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. TINCHER. I am in favor of the purchase of the land, involving an expense of $27,000, and I have wondered if the gentleman could see that there was no use of carrying that amount of money?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman's statement is quite lucid. The point is, it is not for the purpose of continuing the growing of and experimentation with these various varieties of vines for wine. The amendment is in operation. The people understand the situation, and why should not this Government, with the expenditure of money already incurred, continue to improve and make valuable one of the staple crops of the country, whereby the people may receive more of the raisin grapes and grapes of the table variety that have been and are being produced in California? That is what this amendment amounts to. The purpose here is to add a fruit product and to provide that large amounts of it may be raised.

The country is acclimated to it. The people are familiar with it. From this two or three hundred varieties may be obtained and become more valuable to the owners and to the country by reason of grafting and regrafting and handling the varieties that have already been obtained. That is what the gentlemen from California [Mr. LEA and Mr. HERSMAN] are appealing to this House for at this time. That is what we are all appealing for, not to destroy your own property but to assist in building up an industry that, by virtue of the efforts of the Agricultural Department, has grown so valuable. It is unfortunate that legitimate, proper developments of the agriculture interests, where the climatic conditions are so advantageous, should be defeated. We hope that when the bill gets into the Senate the Senate will place this item back on it again, to the end that we will have it disposed of by the conferees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I did not oppose the original provision of the bill for the purchase of the land. I knew nothing about it. It might be that there was some good reason for it, and I made no opposition to it. But when the item of $27,000 for the purchase of the land goes out of the bill, the amount ought not to be left in the aggregate in this paragraph, because it will only encourage the department to spend the money uselessly somewhere else. They can not spend it for the purchase of the land unless there is specific authority given. I have simply proposed to reduce the appropriation to that of the current year, which covers the investigation, but does not provide for the purchase of land which can not be bought.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman understand that the $20,000 which was expended last year, or authorized for a specific purpose, can now be spent under this language as it stands without the insertion of the proviso carried in the bill last year?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was going to ask that question myself when this amendment was disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In the current appropriation law is this language:

Provided, That $20,000 of this amount may be used for investigation and developing new grape industries and methods of utilizing grapes heretofore used for the production of alcoholic beverages.

I would like to ask the committee whether it is perfectly confident that under the item for the investigation and improvement of fruits, and so forth, it will be possible to use any portion of the $80,000 for investigating the new grape industry?

Mr. HAUGEN. It will; yes. But to make it clear that the $20,000 be used for it, it was set aside to be available for that purpose. But I take it the department would use the amount. They need not use the amount if not given the authority, but if we indicate to the department it should be used for this, they can do so. The language will do no harm. It is not necessary either way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it not desirable to specify, so that we will know?

Mr. HAUGEN. The custom is to either specify in the act or in the report, and the department takes notice of what is set out in the report, where it is the intention that the amount should be used for a certain purpose. If set out in the report or the act itself, the department will take notice of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And this $20,000 was included in their estimate?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. There is no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I had not proposed it, but I had intended to do so. I have no desire to put anything in that is of no value.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am certain that the $20,000 will be available and will be used for that purpose, and that is the wish of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating, in cooperation with States or privately owned nurseries, methods of propagating fruit trees, ornamental and other plants, the study of stocks used in propagating such plants and methods of growing stocks for the purpose of providing American sources of stocks, cuttings, or other propagating materials, $20,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a little inquiry about this item. I do not know how much information was given before the Committee on Agriculture, but I just assume that this is a result of the plant-quarantine order. I would like to make an inquiry as to whether there has been any complaint made to the Committee on Agriculture in reference to the plant-quarantine order.

Mr. Chairman, on the 1st of last June, I believe—although I am not sure of the same—an order went into effect forbidding the importation into the United States of any plants, shrubs, or anything else from plant life that was growing, with the exception of tulip bulbs and some other bulbs, and plants coming to scientific institutions, and it was afterwards modified to permit plants coming for certain propagating purposes and certain classes of plants that are bought entirely for propagating purposes. I called the attention of the House to the situation a year ago and predicted that there would be a good deal of complaint about the order by the nurserymen and florists of the country. Since that time nearly every national association connected with plant growth, such as the nurserymen and florists, and special associations, have passed resolutions denouncing the plant-quarantine order, which I have been asked many times myself to denounce, but I never have done so. I am not sure yet whether it is a desirable thing or not. I have no complaint of it myself at this time. For a while it looked as though the whole country would be swept with the desire to set aside the plant-quarantine order. I do not know whether that agitation has continued so much or not. Here, for instance, is one of the things that was said, and I know this will be very interesting to the Members of the House, namely, that they could not import orchids any more. I have noticed the number of orchids that the Members of the House are frequently buying. But it has been discovered now that they can raise orchids with very great success in the United States, and one of the largest series of greenhouses in this country has now thrown off everything else, I believe, except orchids, and is engaged in propagating them. I do not know whether they will get any information out of this item or not. I would like to know just what the department says it wants of this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has reference to the order issued by the Federal Horticultural Board under the Department of Agriculture. There has been criticism of the order in the past.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Federal Horticultural Board, under an act of Congress, has jurisdiction of quarantine—quarantine within the State——

Mr. HAUGEN. It has the authority to make rules and regulations and to issue orders.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the rules and regulations they have power to quarantine. Now, of course, the law provided quarantine, apparently, under special circumstances, on special findings; but the Federal Horticultural Board has issued a general quarantine order. I do not say they are wrong. I do not know.

Mr. HAUGEN. There has been criticism in the past as to the order. This matter has been discussed for the last two or three years. It was discussed at length during the debate on the bill last year. My understanding is that the nursery people and others interested have taken the matter up with the department and that a better understanding has been reached. I am not advised as to just what took place.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The order has not been modified to any extent, so far as nurserymen are concerned.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand that it is satisfactory at the present time to those most concerned, and that little objection is now being raised to it.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was speaking with regard to the success of domestic nurserymen in propagating orchids. I understand that is being done a great deal in various hothouses throughout the country. I understand also that the stocks have to be renewed from abroad from various East India islands and parts of South America periodically, and if they are not renewed that business would go out of existence in this country. Is that true?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not true in the way the gentleman puts it. Of course, there are people engaged in that all the time, hunting for new orchids. We do not have those, but it is not necessary, so I am now informed, to import the stocks. They can propagate them here where they have them. Of course, under this plant-quarantine order, if they discover new varieties of orchids, they can be brought in for propagating purposes, being new and novel.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will turn to the Book of Estimates, to the language used there, he will find that the purpose is to establish and maintain mother forests. The committee struck out the language, and provided that it shall be done in cooperation with private nurserymen, not to establish new stations, but to carry on the work of encouraging the production of orchids through private enterprise.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I observe that this is entirely a new proposition. We are proposing to appropriate $20,000. Being new, my attention was attracted to it, and I reserved the point of order for the purpose of asking for an explanation of what it is for, because I think the gentleman will agree with me that every new proposition ought to be scrutinized somewhat closely.

The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regard to the foreign plant quarantine order and the cultivation of orchids are very interesting and illuminating, but whether they apply to this particular section or not I should like to find out.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will permit, the purpose of this item is simply to assist the industry in this country.

Mr. GARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GARD. To inquire whether this little colloquy over there is entirely localized or not?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire recognition?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would be glad if the gentleman would yield.

Mr. TILSON. I yield under the reservation that the gentleman may give the information desired.

Mr. ANDERSON. The purpose of this item is to enable the department to assist the industry in this country to produce the stocks and seedlings here which formerly they got from abroad, and which they can not now get by reason of the plant quarantine order to which the gentleman from Illinois referred.

Mr. TILSON. Can the gentleman state just how this aid is given?

Mr. ANDERSON. The department contemplated the establishment of so-called mother orchards in forest lands and the production of seedlings, with the idea that these seedlings shall be sent to nurseries in large quantities, so that they become commercialized. We did not approve of that proposition. We thought they might just as well assist and promote the propagation of these seedlings and stocks by the nurserymen themselves, without establishing the mother orchards out in the forests, with all the buildings and employees necessary under those circumstances.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman understand that specimens of plants, shrubs, or trees are to be furnished to private orchards and nurseries?

Mr. ANDERSON. In small quantities. The new ones always have been furnished, and will be in the future, until they can be produced by the nursery for commercial purposes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will understand that our nurserymen have always imported, for instance, large quantities of certain kinds of fruits and cherries and plums for budding or grafting. The stock has been imported. That is what they call the stock being imported. The plants themselves are of no value except to be budded or grafted. They have been raised in France or Holland or Belgium. Now that supply is cut off. They can raise them here; there is no great difficulty about that. The question is largely a matter of expense. When they could be imported there was no great ambition here to find out the method of handling them in the cheapest way. Probably that is one thing they want to do.

Take, for instance, the experimental plant, the azalea. Before the war the Christmas plant most in evidence was the blooming azalea. None of them were produced in this country. They were all imported. They were brought up in hothouses to bloom. The importation ceased under the quarantine order. It is quite possible that without much expense in connection with private industry, by directing attention to it, they may find methods of propagating azaleas so that they could profitably be used. You did not see any last Christmas, and you may not see any for some time until there is some method of propagating them cheaply.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not a fact that one of the purposes of this service is to find the localities where the climatic and other conditions are such that the stocks can be produced that were formerly produced on the other side? I will say this to the gentleman from Connecticut and to the Members of the House, that those of us who have any large nursery plants in their district have had their attention called to the desirability and necessity for the appropriation. I have such nurseries in my district, and I am satisfied that this item is of value and importance.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the superior wisdom of the committee that has recommended this appropriation, and I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation of the utilization of cacti and other dry-land plants; and to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds, $130,000: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $56,600 may be used for the purchase and distribution of such new and rare seeds.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ELSTON. I would like to know from the chairman of the committee why the additional amount of $56,600 is provided, when it appears that the appropriation of $130,000 covers the distribution as well as the tests and propagation of these new and rare seeds. Why should you have a double appropriation for the distribution?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is simply to indicate that $56,600 of the $130,000 may be used for this purpose.

Mr. ELSTON. Can the gentleman tell me what the distribution consists of, and to whom the seeds are distributed? Why is so large an appropriation recommended for that purpose?

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe the principal seed distributed under this item is alfalfa seed. A number of rare seeds are sent out throughout the country under this appropriation.

Mr. ELSTON. For how many years has the appropriation been carried on, and for how many years has the distribution been going forward?

Mr. HAUGEN. This item has been carried in the bill since 1914.

Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman believe that after we have employed five years in propagating and testing we have probably arrived at the possibilities in this line, so that it might be time now to cut this appropriation out and start on some new adventure?

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe they are making discoveries year after year. Recently some valuable alfalfa seed was discovered for use in North Dakota. It is fair to assume that under the investigations to be made new and valuable seeds will be discovered and introduced into this country. I believe that it is the most valuable seed item in the bill.

Mr. ELSTON. Is the distribution made only of new and rare seeds, recently discovered since the last appropriation, or is the distribution made of old seeds?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This has nothing to do with the Congressional distribution.

Mr. ELSTON. This seed is distributed through Congressmen, is it not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Once in a while, if you apply for them. They are not sent out freely by the department.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Members from certain sections of the country are allotted a certain number of packages of alfalfa seed, Sudan grass seed, and other seeds. The seeds most adaptable to the respective sections of country are allotted to the various sections.

Members from my section of the country are allotted a number of packages of alfalfa seed, sudan grass, and soy bean. Members from other sections are allotted seeds that are more adaptable to their sections of the country.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They do not allot anything to the city people. It is not a general allotment.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman wants any allotted for the city of Chicago, he can get them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have more agriculturalists in my district probably than the gentleman from Iowa has.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then the gentleman is entitled to the allotment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not say "farmers." I said "agriculturalists."

I think it was under one of these three items which are grouped together that the durum wheat was introduced into the United States. The value of durum wheat to the United States generally is many times the expenditure that the Government has ever made on all three of these items.

Mr. ELSTON. Then the gentleman from Illinois believes this is a proper activity?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think this is the one shining light in the Department of Agriculture. My only regret is that the items are usually so drawn that they permit the Department of Agriculture to make search for new and rare things all over the world outside of the United States, and do not permit them to do what they ought to be doing, go out here on the western plains and in the Rocky Mountains and discover natural plants which, if developed, would be of great value to the country. We permit them to go to Siberia and discover plants which grow under somewhat similar conditions, but if they went out here on the American plains to discover one and develop it they would not be permitted to do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $239,416. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, shall upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture, that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipts of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have a perfecting amendment to the text.

Mr. BLANTON. I have a perfecting amendment that will come before the gentleman's motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], a member of the committee, is entitled to make his motion to strike out the paragraph. The perfecting amendments will be voted upon first. Gentlemen who desire to offer them will be recognized.

Mr. LANGLEY. May I offer my amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] has been recognized.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. HAUGEN. To ask unanimous consent to limit debate.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I suggest 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. HAUGEN. This matter has been discussed often, and every Member knows exactly how he is going to vote on it. Would not 15 minutes on a side be sufficient?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I have requests which make it necessary for me to ask for 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour.

Mr. HAUGEN. Half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and half the time by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

Mr. BLANTON. I object. It is not fair to have all the time controlled on that side of the House.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. That arrangement is agreeable to me.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the request to limit debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto to one hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and one-half by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment which I propose to offer may be read for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. PURNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he proposes to offer may be read for the information of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment also be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his amendment be read for information. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LANGLEY: Page 30, line 9, strike out the figures "$239,416" and insert the figures "$358,980."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order on the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Texas for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 31, line 7, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be"; and, on page 31, line 8, strike out the words "addressed franked" and insert in lieu thereof "lists of constituents, all of such seeds to be mailed under frank of said department."

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not making this motion to strike out this paragraph for any idle purpose. I am in dead earnest.

This is the first opportunity, so far as this bill is concerned, to apply the acid test to those who preach economy and practice profligacy in the expenditure of the public money. [Applause.]

There are a great many items in this bill that can properly be scrutinized. The expenditure of a great deal of money appropriated by this bill can properly be questioned; but in my judgment this provision, or any other provision carrying an appropriation for a continuation of this pernicious practice of scattering throughout the country at the expense of the people seeds that are not wanted, not needed, not used, is indefensible.

I do not think I am violating any confidence when I say to the membership of the House that the members of the committee were not able to agree upon any amount.

I know this is an old subject, and that it has been discussed for years and years upon the floor of this House, but our committee was not able to agree upon an amount. A number of votes which were had to determine whether or not the bill should carry any amount at all resulted in a tie, and there was no decision. The bill carries $239,416, put in the bill by common consent in order that the matter might be brought before the House for consideration and final determination.

I was not a Member of this House when this practice was first started, but I am convinced in my own mind that it has ceased to serve the purpose for which it was begun. [Applause.] I am told that when appropriations were first made for sending out these free seeds broadcast over the country, it was done for the purpose of investigation and experiment, and I say to you that it has ceased to serve that purpose.

Gentlemen, there is one thing we can not lose sight of, and that is that we are to-day facing in this country a deficit. Nothing is quite so sure as death and taxes, and with a $3,000,000,000 deficit staring the already overburdened American taxpayer in the face, it is incumbent upon every Member of this House to cut, to prune every one of these appropriation bills to the very bone. I am not willing to cripple any branch of this or any other governmental service, but I am willing to resolve all doubts in favor of economy and cut until it hurts wherever cuts can be made.

If we are to have economy we must make a start; we must not pass an item because it seems small.

We can not come in here before this House and strike $3,000,000,000 from any one bill, but by taking off a few thousand here and a few hundred thousand there it is possible in the aggregate to cut $3,000,000,000 and save a bond issue.

I am not going to try to anticipate anybody's argument in connection with these seeds. I only want to state my own position. I do not believe in them. I do not believe this appropriation serves any good purpose. I do not say it does not serve any purpose, but I say that the purpose it does serve does not warrant the expenditure of this amount of money. It may encourage some of the boys and girls throughout this country to get a little closer to nature; it may serve to teach some boy or girl on the farm or in the city that farming is not the drudgery it has been painted; but I want to say to you that if you have that in your minds and if that is the purpose you want to accomplish you will find on page 74 of this bill an item of $1,500,000 for agricultural extension work.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MADDEN). The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. PURNELL. I believe I was recognized for 30 minutes, and I will ask the Chairman to call my attention when I have used 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do so.

Mr. PURNELL. There is carried in this bill an appropriation of $1,500,000 for agricultural extension work that really accomplishes something, that really does something. Through the agricultural colleges of the United States, through Federal assistance, boys' and girls' clubs and home economic clubs are organized, and those who have left the soil are inspired to return, while those who are on the soil are encouraged to stay. If this money is properly used and expended, as I believe it will be, all will be accomplished that the wildest advocate of this antiquated system can hope to accomplish. So that if you want to send garden seed broadcast throughout this country to encourage the youth of America to plant gardens, to raise beans, cabbages, and potatoes, you had better let it be done through some organized effort rather than scatter these seed broadcast, half of which will not grow when planted. The question is one of economy. The mere fact that we have established this practice and have followed it for years does not necessarily carry with it the implication that it ought to be continued. I sincerely hope that you will avail yourselves of this opportunity and agree to my amendment, thereby putting an end to a practice that is a relic of political barbarism. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that as a matter of economy of time at least this annual opéra bouffe, the dramatis personæ of which seem for the most part to be statesmen with a single-track mind, ought to be discontinued. The membership of this House has time and again shown their desire for a continuation of this congressional seed distribution. Most of those who in the past have sought to have the seed appropriation stricken out apparently rejoice in opposing the little things that contribute so much to the pleasure and enjoyment of the needy masses of the people.

Mr. SIMS. And the profit also.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes. And yet they want to send millions of our people's money to keep the needy of other lands. An analysis shows that the opponents of this appropriation belong either to that class or represent districts which do not even raise the proverbial cabbage patch. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] says that half the seeds that are sent out from the Agricultural Department do not grow. That is not true as to Kentucky. We have splendid soil down there and they all come up. It may be true in Indiana, and especially in the gentleman's district [laughter], because I have been told that there is some land in Indiana that will not even sprout peas. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman says that this seed distribution might help us to get back to nature a little bit. If that means a little more work on the farm, I think after looking at the gentleman's physique and at mine, all will agree that we both might very profitably do a little more work on the farm in the way of avoirdupois reduction. [Laughter.]

I have had occasion to investigate this question a little bit, and I undertake to say that the annual expenditure of the amount involved, which has never been as much as $400,000, does more real good in general to the agricultural people of this country than any expenditure of a like amount that could be made in any other direction. [Applause.] It will prevent profiteering in seeds also.

The Agricultural Department estimates that these packages, containing five packets each, cost only a little less than 4 cents, and they cost nearly five times that much if purchased from retail dealers. Not only that, but it is estimated that the number of vegetable seeds alone sent out under this distribution will plant 170,000 acres of gardens, and think of the enormous advantage that will be to the agricultural interests of this country, and especially at this time when the cost of living is so high and increased production so essential to its reduction.

Mr. QUIN. Does the gentleman know how much in money the garden seeds alone amount to?

Mr. LANGLEY. I think for last year it was about $327,000, but I am not absolutely sure of the accuracy of these figures. It is my purpose to offer at the proper time an amendment striking out the amount carried by the committee's bill and to insert the amount carried in last year's bill for the current fiscal year. I would like to see it more than that. I wish I could multiply the committee's figures by two, so that we would each have enough for all of our constituents.

Mr. QUIN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LANGLEY. At the same time we have to economize some, in view of the state of our finances, but let us not seek to practice a penny-wise and pound-foolish economy. I am not in favor of that. I am told that in a great many sections of the country, a year or two ago, the farmers were unable to get any garden seeds at all except those that they received through their Congressmen. I do not know whether that is the situation this year or not, but it is worthy of consideration in this connection.

I am in favor of continuing this distribution, but I want to tell you that these very gentlemen who are opposed to any appropriation for garden seed are not consistent enough to refuse to accept them. If they think it is wrong, why not give them to some one else who does not regard it as petty congressional graft, as it has been termed. To my mind the man who accepts graft believing it to be such is the most consummate grafter of them all. Without mentioning any names I will say that I have gone to a number of them who say they so regard it, and I have said, "I see that you are opposed to this appropriation for sending out garden seeds. Of course, you have plenty of them to your credit, and I need them down in Kentucky, for I do not now get as many as my constituents could use properly and profitably. Will you please lend me yours?" They invariably reply, "Oh, good Lord, John, I am trying to borrow some myself." [Laughter.] They will not let you have a single package. That is the truth about it.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] himself, who makes this motion, will use every package provided for in the bill for his district. He does not expect his amendment to carry. These antiseed men bob up untiringly every year and seek to strike out the appropriation. They know that the motion is not going to be adopted. They have been beaten every time, and they are going to be beaten again. After this is all over I am going to my friend from Indiana, and I am going to ask him if he wants to give me his quota, and I will bet $10 to 5 cents that he will not do it, because he wants to send them out to Indiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. PURNELL. Why, of course I would not give them to the gentleman. They belong to my district. If the Government pays the money for them, they belong there. I do not want the Government to waste the money. I would send out skunk oil if they would send it out free.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman prefers skunk oil to garden seeds for his district, I shall not object; but I want the people of the tenth district of Kentucky to get every dollar from the Federal Treasury they can use profitably and to which they are entitled, not only for seeds but for Federal buildings, river and harbor improvements, and the building of public highways, and anything else within my reach that will inure to their benefit. [Laughter and applause.] If the gentleman does not follow the same program, I am afraid that some fellow will succeed him in Congress before long. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In answer to the further suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, in view of the fact that he does send them out and that his people take them, is not that a further evidence that they want them?

Mr. LANGLEY. The deduction was so self-evident that I hesitated to make the point against my genial friend from Indiana.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Possibly the gentleman from Indiana might be induced to move an amendment to have his district stricken from the benefits of the distribution.

Mr. LANGLEY. I wish the gentleman from Virginia would make the motion and substitute skunk oil. [Laughter.]

Mr. PURNELL. I would say to the gentleman from Virginia that that hardly befits his usual dignity. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I hope those who are opposing this wasteful expenditure will be more successful to-day than they have been on former occasions. It would seem to me that this year, when a real effort is being made to save money on the various appropriation bills, we might muster up a better vote than heretofore.

I represent an agricultural district. There is not a city in my district with a population of more than 8,000 people. The people there are practically all farmers. I want to say to you that, so far as I know, there are no farmers in my district who believe this appropriation ought to be continued. It has been stated to me time and time again by those who receive these seeds that they are no better than can be purchased for a few cents at the corner grocery store. If we were sending out to the farmers a new variety of seed, a rare variety of seed, a kind of field seed that could not be bought at the corner grocery store or from regular seed dealers, then there might be some excuse for continuing this expenditure. The fact is that these seeds can be bought in any town or village. I want to say also that the people of the country are not being fooled at all. They understand what it means. I do not think it adds anything to the dignity of a Congressman to come here session after session and vote for such a proposition as this. There are very few people in the country now who do not understand that the seeds are being sent out largely as an advertising scheme, and it is not especially creditable to the membership of this House to continue the farce any longer. The statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] is a good, straight argument—a convincing argument for getting rid of this expenditure now for all time. If it ever did have any value to the country, that time has long since expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if there is any one thing particularly which has made Senators and Representatives ridiculous from New York to Galveston, from Norfolk to San Francisco, it is the free-gift garden-seed proposition. If we only knew exactly what our people thought about this subject and how much ridicule they and our newspapers heap upon us every time we spend the people's money on these measly little old packages of garden seed with our franks on them we would stop it. It is a useless expense.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I can not yield. I would yield if I had the time.

But if the people do want the seed, adopt my amendment and let them have it, but take the politics out of it. Take our names off the packages. Can not you render sufficient valuable service to your people here, if they elect you, without sending them this measly little package of garden seed? I propose a plan to eliminate the politics, to take our franks off of the packages, and let the Agricultural Department send them out. Then you would see how soon Congress would cut the appropriation. If you cut the frank off you will not make an appropriation. You will lose your interest in the farmers, as you call them.

Let me tell my good garden-seed friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] that his farmers down there would rather that the taxes be cut down, so that they could buy their own garden seed, than to have us tax them this enormous sum of money every year to send them a little 10-cent package. I want to cut it off. I am going to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] to cut them out entirely, but if we do not do that, then let us take politics out of it by adopting my amendment, and let us put seed mailing in the Agricultural Department, where it belongs, and let the Agricultural Department send the seed out. We could furnish the lists. You say they do not know to whom to send them. We can furnish them the lists of our constituents. Let the people understand that it is their money that is being spent so freely. It is not a present that their Congressmen and Senators and Delegates send them every year. It is bought with their own money. It is foolishness and ought to be stopped.

I will tell you how much I think about it. I have not even yet sent the names to the Agricultural Department for my allotment. I have been too busy trying to do something more valuable for my people than sending this garden seed out. I have not even sent the names in yet. I have not had time to begin addressing the franks. My people have not bothered me about them.

I want to tell you right now that if we mean economy we could save this $300,000 this year and we can take that much off of the taxes. Are you going to do it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Gentlemen, I hope I will not be accused of playing politics when I tell you that I am for both of these amendments. I shall vote first for the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY]. If that fails, or if it carries, I shall then vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] to strike out the whole proposition. In my honest opinion it is a first-class nuisance to have a Congressman called upon to send out garden seed over the country. [Applause.]

I represent purely an agricultural district. There is not a town in that district with 10,000 inhabitants. My people are devoting their time to the raising of cotton and rice and agricultural products of all kinds, and especially in the growing of truck in the coast region of Texas, and I assure you there is no better country on the face of the earth for truck growing than in that coast section.

As the garden-seed business is at present, I consider it a nuisance, as I have told you. In the past three years I have received an average of one package for every five families in my district. I either want sufficient for all of them or I want none. Those who can not get them are as much entitled as those who receive them. And inasmuch as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is to be voted upon first, I shall support that amendment, and, whether it is carried or not, I shall then vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] to strike the thing from the books altogether. If there ever was a time when this was necessary, in my judgment that time has passed. I do not believe the people of this country desire to have this expense saddled upon the taxpayers at this time. We have all the burdens of taxation we can afford, and I think it is the time to commence curtailment and apply the pruning shears on expenditures. But if the Congress proposes to continue the system, then we ought to increase the appropriation, as the amount stated in the bill will be entirely insufficient. Why should we appropriate an amount sufficient to supply less than one-third of the people? How can we justify our conduct in voting to give the seeds to one constituent and denying them to two or three others? I want them for all or for none.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if any member of this committee would insist that this is necessary legislation. At least there might be some difference of opinion as to whether it is wise legislation at this particular time. I doubt very much whether there will be a single additional garden seed planted just because we distribute these seeds. [Applause.] I doubt very much whether there will be any considerable increase, even noticeable increase, in the total production of agriculture in this country because we have seen fit to spend nearly a quarter of a million of dollars for the distribution of seeds. To a great many men this whole matter is a matter of ridicule. I would not say that it has no value, for that would be wide of the mark. Extravagant statements of that kind seldom appeal or convince. But that it has a value equal to the amount of money that is expended is a very doubtful question.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. If a package of these seeds should get into the hands of a poor laboring man or a poor widow and enable him to raise a garden, would it not be of some value there?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly it would be of some value there; but a poor laboring man or a poor laboring woman who has secured a garden and is able to have it plowed and has the time and is able to secure the tools for its cultivation would not necessarily be deprived of that garden because he did not receive a 15-cent package of seed.

I think we beg the question sometimes. I am not saying that this seed distribution has no value; but we have dealt in large sums here to such an extent that we think it insignificant to save to the Treasury nearly a quarter of a million dollars of money that is absolutely needed. There are a great many people who look upon this seed distribution as a useless expenditure. So far as the distribution is concerned, my own idea is that the seeds belong to the people and not to Republicans or to Democrats. But it is an annoyance, a nuisance, a difficult thing to secure an equitable distribution of the seed, and I this year got mine out of the way as quickly as possible by sending the seed to the newspapers in my district, both Democratic and Republican, and asking them to advertise the fact that they had received the seed and that the people who really wanted them might call for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, when I first came to Congress I was as rantankerous against the congressional distribution of garden seed as my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] seems to be now. I learned in the early stages of my experience here that in order to rank as a statesman you had to take a position against the congressional distribution of garden seeds. [Laughter.] However, I endeavored to find out what my people in the district desired with respect to this matter, and to that end I sent out at my own expense 54,000 letters of inquiry with a return card, on which a 2-cent stamp could be placed, and in answer to those letters I received 22,500 replies, to the effect that the seeds were wanted by the writers. My friend a moment ago said that he sent his quota out to the newspapers of his district. Most Members of the House who oppose the free distribution of seeds send them out that way if they send them out at all. It takes some time and work for a Congressman to send the seed out to the right persons—that is, to the persons who can use them. It requires attention and care and considerable expense to do the job right, and I take it that when this custom was first started that it was intended by Congress that since the Member had an acquaintance with his district, he would send them out to those who needed them. If you send them out to the newspapers or to the post office and let them be distributed in that manner, in nine cases out of ten the newspaper men or the postmaster wants to get rid of them as soon as he can. Arm loads are carried out by those who can not use many of them. Many of them, no doubt, find their way to the gutter. The farmer is not going to drive to town and go to the newspaper to get a package of garden seed, and only a few of the deserving garden raisers of the cities and towns will do so, but they usually appreciate and make good use of a package that comes to them through the mail.

I recall a speech our present President made somewhere in Ohio, as I remember it, where he estimated that the increased raising of gardens in 1918 saved something like $500,000,000 worth of food, which we were enabled to furnish to our soldiers and our Allies, and he spoke with highest praise of the people's efforts to increase garden products. One of the ways to decrease the cost of living is to encourage and stimulate production of garden materials. According to the estimates I have heard made here to-day it only costs about $75 to furnish my district with about 20,000 packages of garden seed. I am sending out about 23,000 packages. My allotment is not that large, and necessarily I have to obtain the difference from some of these statesmen who are opposed to sending them out, or, rather, I hope to get them from the Agricultural Department, which is enabled to furnish them by reason of the disinclination of some Members to send them out. Now, I can assure you that it costs me much more than the value of the seeds to find out who wants them and send them to them. As far as I am personally concerned, I feel like a great many others feel, that it is an expense and a great amount of work that could be taken from a Member of Congress by failing to make an appropriation for the Agricultural Department to buy them, but I want to say that the results in my district from the distribution of seeds are good. It was worth the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. You say they did you some good? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes; it did me good, and it did my district good in increasing garden products; and it will do your district some good, Mr. WILLIAMS, if you will send yours out in that way. I am satisfied that most of the opposition to the appropriation for garden seeds comes from the men who do not want to shoulder the responsibility of sending them out in the proper way, and I am willing to concede if they are merely dumped in a few places in the district they will not make a very good showing. The gentleman from Texas said that he would not even send his list over to the Secretary of Agriculture. I venture to say he has no list. If he had a list of those who had expressed themselves as desiring garden seed and would spend his time in franking them the Government packages of seeds, I have no doubt but what the results would have been much better than for him to spend so much time making points of no quorum in the House. You send men out through the country at high salaries to vaccinate hogs for hog cholera, to teach the people how to make cottage cheese, and a hundred other things. You employ 750 messengers in the Agricultural Department alone. None of your statesmen-economists rave very much about this expense, but when it comes to the proposition of furnishing free of charge to every person in the district who desires and ought to have a package of seeds to stimulate production, then you raise the cry about economy and say in defense of your position that Congress is being ridiculed about the distribution of garden seeds. Of course, if you send them out to your general list and some go to a man who lives in an apartment house and has no garden, he will immediately say that the distribution of garden seed is a failure, and he will probably write you or tell you of what a small business you are engaged in. He would not consider that there are thousands of people in your district who can and will use them profitably, and in so doing stimulate production, increase varieties, and reduce the cost of living. It seems to me that it is a poor time to discontinue the distribution of seeds. I believe I have given it a fair test in my district. I know I have hundreds of influential men who do not believe in it, but in most instances they have no occasion for planting seeds; but I am quite sure that they are not opposed to the judicious and economical distribution of them among those who really will use them. I regret very much that it is not possible for me to send to my constituents other varieties of seeds than those contracted for by the department. I have a great number of calls for tobacco seed, different varieties of beans, different kinds of corn. I believe the Government could be helpful to the people in determining what character of seed would thrive best in the different communities, and if these seeds were furnished it is reasonable to suppose that good would result from it. Of course, this kind of distribution would be very expensive and probably impracticable to handle on a large scale, but I have heard no argument here to-day that will justify a discontinuance of the judicious distribution by Members of Congress of select varieties of garden seed. I have heard arguments which convinced me conclusively that the functions to be performed by Members of Congress in connection with their distribution have been sadly neglected in a great many districts. It seems that the fault is with us and not with the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of striking out the item altogether; it has, in my opinion, been carried too long. The Department of Agriculture, using money supplied by Congress, is doing remarkably good work in many lines, but some of its activities, forced upon it by Congress, are attracting unfavorable attention. They draw adverse criticism, not because they are not well done, but because they should never have been undertaken. Some of these activities are wrong in principle, in that they involve the performing of labor for the people that the people ought to do and are abundantly able to do for themselves; they involve the giving and supplying to the people things the people ought to provide for themselves.

These activities of doubtful propriety sometimes start with the department, due to the enthusiasm of bureau chiefs—very commendable enthusiasm if along right lines and within reasonable limits. The Constitution and decent regard for its limitations upon the duty and the authority of the Congress and the departments restrain enthusiasm to some extent; a scanty Treasury must now exert a vigorous restraint. But the Congress is itself largely at fault for starting improper lines of work and is altogether to blame for continuing them. The idea of distributing seeds began not so many years ago with an appropriation of $1,000 for the importation and distribution of foreign seeds found to be suitable for growing in this country. Out of this worthy object and this modest appropriation the present debauch has grown. In time of food scarcity, as in time of war, a wide distribution of seeds may be proper, but during time of peace and normal production it is neither necessary nor justifiable. I question no man's motive, but a Member who believes the people need or very much wish free seeds—and for that reason only he votes this immense sum of money—should support the pending amendment which provides for sending out the seeds direct from the department and not under the Members' franks. But that amendment will not be adopted, showing plainly that those who oppose it wish their own names connected with the gift enterprise. I wish as much as anyone to please the people, certainly to supply their every need, but at this time of immense necessary expenditure, burdensome taxation, and certain deficit I can not vote, nor should the Congress vote, a quarter of a million dollars for an unnecessary if not an improper purpose.

I can see how men can vote for an appropriation of this kind who do not wish to economize in public expenditures. I can see how men can vote for this appropriation who feel no sense of responsibility for appropriations, but I can see no reason, nor is there a semblance of excuse, for such a vote by anyone who wishes to economize, especially by one who feels, or ought to feel, responsibility for what the Government is doing.

I trust the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] to strike out this item will prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand the viewpoint of the gentlemen who grow so parsimonious and economical when it is proposed that the poor people and the farmers of this country shall have a little consideration shown to them in the bill. [Applause.] They are here talking pretendedly for economy and saving a little dab of $150,000 or $200,000 that we formerly appropriated for the purpose of increasing our production of the vegetables that go on the table of the people of this country, and yet the gentlemen who vote to cut out such appropriations and to economize jump up here and howl in favor of spending a billion and a half dollars for conscription and universal military training in times of peace, and howl in favor of spending millions of dollars for dockyards. Some Members have gotten up and bellowed at every item which has been presented in which the poor people of this country are respected by Congress, as in this case of a small appropriation for garden seeds for planting by the people in order that their children may have good wholesome vegetable food on the tables every day in the year.

These gentlemen come up with a howl for economy. Where is it that you propose to economize? Do you propose to take bread out of the mouths of the poor, to take vegetables out of the mouths of the little children in the towns and in the factory places? [Applause.] They plant gardens. The farmers plant gardens, and they want these fine seed from the Government. All you people like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who is so busy in making points of no quorum and talking against the poor people of this country, waste so much time in that way that you can not find time to send out your garden seed. You are the people who are opposed to this appropriation. The poor people throughout the country certainly desire the seed from this Government to be sent to them directly by their Congressmen. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the remarks of gentlemen who have spoken here, who claim that the people throughout the country do not want the seeds, and who assert that those who do get them say they will not grow. My young friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] also inveighed against this proposition of sending out free garden seed. In one good long breath he wanted to abolish the seed distribution on the ground of economy, and in another good long breath he wanted the seed distribution to be made from the Department of Agriculture, and all in the name of economy. From that logic we could not decide whether he was outside trying to get in or inside trying to get out. [Laughter.]

But one thing I am sure of, and that is that the farmers of his district and the farmers of my district and the farmers of other districts would rather get a package of garden seeds from us than a speech. [Laughter.] At least I have had them send to me for garden seeds, but I have never had them send for a speech, and I am sure that that is the experience of the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.]

Now, I will say to my young friend from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] that I was here when there was only one Republican on the floor of this House from Indiana; now all are Republicans, and seed have been going out every year. I am delighted to see him here, and I know he is going to stay, and when he has been here longer he will know more than he does now on the subject of these seeds. [Laughter.] It will not be long until he will be around trying to get some of my quota of seeds to send to the people in his district. And I will say to my good friend from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] that when they get the wild and wooly Black Hills region of his State rolled down smooth enough so that things can be planted and grown there, there will come a demand for these seeds from that part of his State also. [Applause.]

My zeal in the interest of free seed is not that the rich cotton planter needs or may have them, nor that the owners of the vast wheat fields of the West need them, but that the owners of the countless modest homes in the towns and villages and countryside with attached gardens may have some share in the benefactions of our great Government, and it is my experience that nothing we have to send from here could be more beneficial to the folks of modest means than these seeds, nor could we do anything that will more greatly increase the yield of things that sustain human life, and which are more appreciated.

Therefore, in the presence of the fact that time more valuable twenty times over is weekly frittered away on this floor in attempted grand-stand displays and mediocre declamation for consumption at home than these seed will cost, I prefer to go on record for seed and the good people who want them as against the vocal unwindings that prove only a voice and suggest Hamlet's rebuke of Sage Polonius, "Words, words, words." [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, in listening to this argument I have come to the conclusion that I have one of the best districts in the United States, because there does not seem to be anybody out there poor enough up to this time to ask me to vote to appropriate money to buy garden seeds.

I have been against this garden-seed proposition ever since I have been in Congress, because I came to the conclusion that it was a useless waste of money. I have taken these garden seeds which have been assigned to me and have tried to do the best I could with them, because they were forced on me, and they belong to my district. The first year I advertised in all the newspapers in the district that I would send garden seeds to anybody who asked for them. Those advertisements were copied in Ohio, Kentucky, and Illinois, and after being copied into all those papers I received less than 1,800 inquiries for garden seeds. Those requests I supplied. I then tried the proposition of sending out garden seeds to the newspapers. I did not get anywhere with that, and this year I thought I would try the other route, and I have mailed them to everybody in my district whose name I could get, and so far I have not received any particular praise or commendation for doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. I yield two minutes to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] who has made a miscalculation in his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana yields two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW]. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Department of Agriculture, of course, was organized to encourage every phase of agricultural effort. And it is as clear as a cloudless sunrise that its organization and development have meant, indeed, not merely the sunrise but the sunburst of a new day in the rural life of America.

Having traveled rather widely in platform-lecture work before coming to Congress, I have had opportunity to see much of the farm-demonstration work going on, and I never meet these enterprising evangels of agricultural education and inspiration but that I feel something of the same thrill that stirs me when I go among the departments here in Washington and see this great Government with all of its symmetrical ramifications of wonder-working activity—it makes me a truer American and a better patriot.

The Department of Agriculture is doing a wonderful work under its financial limitations—mark my words, financial limitations—for it is a startling cause for contemplation that, with an annual governmental expense account of over $3,000,000,000, this Agricultural bill carries only about $30,000,000, and one-third of this amount, bless you, goes to other objects than agriculture—forestry, roads, and so forth—causes highly necessary in themselves and tremendously worthy, but not an actual part of agricultural activities. In other words, only $20,000,000 a year to encourage, to lead, and develop the most important industry—the foundation industry of all America.

And yet in face of this fact we find it necessary to vote for the Langley amendment to get the same amount for the distribution of seeds that we had last year, for the committee appropriation under the lash of the cry of retrenchment has been cut to only $239,000 for the gardens and flower yards all over the Nation.

I recognize the fact that we must buckle on our armor, put our hands in our pockets like a brave, grateful people, and pay our war debt, and that therefore retrenchment is necessary in certain directions, but let us not begin at the gardens and even the very tables of the people. [Applause.]

I confess with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] that before I came to Congress I used to laugh at the sending of garden and flower seeds as a part of a Congressman's duty. "Send me some garden seeds," said some of my supporting friends as I started away to Washington. And it was said as a laughing joke. But since I came here and began to feel the pulse of the people—call it a desire to please the "dear people" and come back, if you will—my mail reveals the fact that there is a widespread interest among the masses in this garden and flower seed business.

I am still laughing away down inside of me about that remark of my witty and brilliant friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], when he declared that "our constituents are more anxious for these seeds than they are for our speeches." I have a confession to make. It punctures my pride, but here goes: Since I crawled off of bed where I stayed about seven years as the result of an accident while I was hauling wood as a farmer boy, I have been selling "hot air" for a living [laughter], and to tell the truth about it, I enjoy my speeches even if nobody else does. [Laughter and applause.] But I make here the distressing confession that I have received a hundred times more requests for garden and flower seeds than I have for my speeches. [Laughter and applause.]

Only a few days ago I sent 50 packages of seeds to one man, a superintendent of a factory, who said he wanted to encourage his employees to plant gardens in the burnt district of Atlanta and to make their homes more attractive by beautifying their yards with flowers.

This, gentlemen, is not politics, as has been suggested; it is patriotism; it is common sense; it is production; it is a part cure for the high cost of housekeeping; it is personal and national economy; it is encouragement to the people at the very foundation of things.

BEECHER AND GRADY ON FLOWERS AND HOMES.

Henry Ward Beecher used to say that if he were traveling through a strange country and were looking for a place to stay all night he would keep on going until he found a house with flowers in the yard, for he knew that refinement and love must reign in the home where beautiful flowers smiled outside.

God smiled and the flowers bloomed,
Some poet grandly said,
And woman was the fairest flower
That raised her sun-crowned head.

Henry Grady declared in his great speech at the University of Virginia: "Teach a man that his sovereignty lies beneath his hat, link him to a spot of earth, and his loyalty will save the Republic when the drum tap is futile and the barracks are forever deserted."

And I love to think of the happy home of the plain, everyday citizen, the home that is his haven of rest and love and hope, surrounded by flowers of beauty and fragrance, all the more beautiful to him because of the deft and delicate touch of the noble little woman who is the wife of his bosom and the mother of his children—I love to think of him, I say, loyal defender of the flag that lifts its protecting folds above that happy home, coming home at nightfall and finding his wife standing with their laughing children amid the flowers that bloom about their home like the very smile of God, ready to give him the kiss of welcome that drives away "the cares that infest the day," and making him feel that for such a home he is ready to work and to live, and if need be to die. [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the House, I want this Government to do everything possible to link itself to the faith and the affections of that home. And if the flowers in that yard and the vegetables in that garden came largely from governmental help and encouragement it serves to make better patriots out of the boys and girls who planted them and feast upon them, and likewise of the father and mother who enjoy their beauty and their bounty. Every time a school boy or girl writes me for seed for the yard or the garden I send a letter seeking to encourage them in their worthy efforts. I thank God that I was reared by a father who taught me the wholesome doctrine that "every boy ought to know how a tired man feels"; and I know of nothing except the holy inspiration of a family altar that is more needed for the building of a steady stamina among the boys and girls of to-day than to encourage them to work—to work some every day—to beautify their home, to fructify their gardens, and to look with eager pride upon everything that brings happiness and prosperity to their parents, their home, their community, and their country.

HOME INDEPENDENCE A FOUNDATION NECESSITY.

And this thought is close akin to that other thought which is a foundation necessity in every home, and more especially in every farmer's home. I can never get over the feeling produced in my boyish heart by the incongruous picture of seeing some of our neighbors hauling hay and corn and meat by my father's home, which they had bought from some merchant in Marietta, Powder Springs, or Atlanta, who had agreed to "run" them with supplies to make their crop. And while farm demonstration and the farm-loan bank have done a great deal to help change this condition of dependence among the farmers, I still feel constrained, for the sake of those who have not yet become emancipated, to call all the farmers in the land before me, especially those in my own district, and issue to them this one ringing injunction "Live at home! Live at home! Live at home! Tax your genius and your industry to raise everything that the family needs at home, and your surplus will spell your financial independence!" Such a course will go a long way toward helping to solve many of the problems that confront and confound this Nation to-day. And as an encouragement to this good end I believe that the Department of Agriculture ought to be voted by this Congress a hundred millions instead of twenty millions a year. This Government can no longer afford to be "small" in its handclasp of encouragement to the man who feeds and clothes the world. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, every day you will hear economy preached on the floor of this House, particularly by the Members on the other side. At the same time the majority of those who are preaching economy vote for every tomfool, unnecessary appropriation that comes before the House. I do not blame our Democratic friends for doing that, because when they vote for all these appropriations the expenditures of the Government are increased, and next fall they will go out in their campaign and criticize the "extravagant Republican Congress."

The facts are that the seed houses from which the Government secures these seeds send us those left from their sales of a year or two prior.

In the face of all that some of the Republicans on this side permit the wool to be pulled over their eyes.

Talk about the farmer wanting these seeds! I have a district that is a farming district. I have never received 10 requests from the farmers of my district. They do not want the seeds. The fact of the matter is that the people are very much mistaken as to the quality of these seeds. Seventy-five per cent of them will not grow. They are not fertile. The people believe that the Government has a great big farm where these seeds are produced. They think the seeds are absolutely all right because the Government raises them. That is absolutely untrue.

Mr. LANGLEY. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has five minutes remaining.

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield five minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], the Member from the Tombigbee district. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I really did not intend to participate in this discussion, and would not do so now but for the universal requests on both sides of the House, by both Democrats and Republicans that I do so, as they say it will be impossible to pass this provision presented by our committee in our bill now pending unless I submit my views on this great and important question. [Applause and laughter.]

You will always notice that this motion to strike out this and similar provisions is always made by some distinguished gentleman who is seeking to get into the class of statesmen, and who is serving his first term. They never make the motion after they serve more than one term in this House. So this motion as usual comes from a one-termer. But the scales will drop from his eyes before his first term is out, and in the next Congress you will not hear a word from him on this subject, because he will hear from the people in the meantime, and somehow or other first-termers as well as long-termers will listen to the people when they speak, and ought at all times to do so. The voice of the people is mighty and should always prevail. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] said this was a pernicious practice. When did it become pernicious? He said the people do not want these seeds, although the requests for them come every day to every Member from all over the country. I dare say the gentleman from Indiana receives such requests himself practically every day. I picked up indiscriminately this morning this great bunch of requests I hold now in my hand that came to me to-day. They come in great numbers every day. The last one I happened to pick up, and here it is, says: "I am a little girl only 11 years old; I would thank you very much if you would send me some flower seeds."

These requests come from gentlemen and from ladies, from boys and from girls, and I ask you, my friend from Indiana, as I look into your face, handsome and intelligent as you are, can you turn a deaf ear to the voices of the little girls throughout the United States of America who want to plant these seeds, who are writing to you and to me and to others requesting us to send them? I do not believe you are so hard-hearted. If you, my dear friend, have any doubt as to what you should do, ask your courteous, chivalrous, handsome, and brilliant little son Fritz Purnell and he will tell you to vote for these little girls. He would vote for them if he was here and I now prophesy he will be here some day and have the opportunity to do so. [Applause.] The gentleman from Indiana said we were appropriating $1,500,000 in this bill for farm extension. Yes, and under that appropriation the boys' and girls' clubs throughout the country are encouraged and largely formed, and they want these seeds and they utilize them, and they write to the Members of Congress for them. If you want to make this farm extension work popular and effective, there is no better way to do so than to send some of these seeds to the boys and girls composing these clubs. A lot of these seed can be utilized in that way. If you will calculate you will find that if this appropriation was paid for by the farmers themselves it would not cost as much as 1 cent apiece to the farmers throughout the country, and when it will be paid, not by the farmers alone, but by all the people, the cost is so infinitesimal it is impossible of calculation.

Will you take the little package of seed away from the gentlemen, ladies, boys, and girls who write for it when it is the only direct communication that they receive from the Government of the United States that goes to them individually and personally? [Applause.]

You talk about economy, and you want to economize by taking a small package of seed from the farmers of America. If that is the character and extent of the economy which you propose to practice you will not get very far with it. You had better go to work and save hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars in the large, and in some instances extravagant, appropriations, in which effort to save money I will join you, rather than to begin your economy by saving a few cents by taking these seeds from the farmers of the land.

The school gardens are places where you can accomplish great good by the distribution of seeds. It is estimated by the Department of Agriculture that the value of the products that come from the school gardens in the United States of America amounts to millions of dollars each year. They further estimate that the value of the products grown from these seeds distributed by Congress amount to millions each year. So when you get down to the actual value of this investment the results mount up into millions. Therefore I say it should be continued and the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] to strike out the provision in the bill making this appropriation should be defeated, and I hope it will be. So long as my constituents, gentlemen, ladies, boys, and girls, want these seeds and show their desires by writing for them I want to send them to them. I am their servant here, and my earnest purpose, intention, and desire is at all times and in everything to represent the views of my constituents and respond to their requests on all occasions, and I believe my constituents will agree that I do so. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of striking out this paragraph. This bill appropriates between thirty and forty millions of dollars for the legitimate interests of the farmer. This appropriation of $250,000 is in the nature of a prize or grab-bag business, a gratuity to people who have no serious need for it whatever. I believe that if we are in earnest in striking out needless appropriations and wasteful expenditures, we can best begin with this item. This seed distribution does some good; but the good that it does is nowhere commensurate with the $250,000 that we spend each year for the purpose. Some one has said here that the people like to have the seeds. Of course they do. They like to have anything they get free. If we should announce here that each constituent would be entitled to a dollar bill from his Congressman, there would be a general scramble for the gift, and all of them would be disappointed if we did not continue the practice. I am in favor of cutting out this item.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I realize that anything I may say in conclusion will not influence a single vote. There has been a great deal of facetious discussion in connection with this amendment, but the fact remains that to continue this appropriation for the distribution of congressional seeds is nothing more or less than cheap, legalized, congressional graft. I repeat this is the first opportunity we have had during the consideration of this bill to apply the acid test to those lip economists who preach economy but practice profligacy with the people's money. God have mercy upon your political souls; the people should not. I hope the amendment striking out the section will be agreed to and that we may start off with a new set of books in this hour of the Nation's financial crisis.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have had read for the information of the committee a proposed amendment. I now offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 9, strike out the figures "$239,462" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$358,980."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It is unauthorized by law and is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment simply increases the amount contained in the paragraph. No point of order having been made to the paragraph, a point of order does not now lie, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, is there another amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has offered an amendment for the information of the committee, which the Chair understands he intends to offer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON and Mr. PURNELL) there were—ayes 87, noes 99.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. LANGLEY and Mr. PURNELL to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 7, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be." On page 31, line 8, strike out the words "addressed franks" and insert in lieu thereof "list of constituents, all of such seed to be mailed under frank of said department."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proposed amendment would change existing law, which now provides the method of sending out these seeds. It would be new legislation on an appropriation bill, which is in contravention of the rules.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the present bill is an appropriation bill, and it seeks as has been done in some other appropriation bills to provide that seeds, as heretofore, shall be sent under congressional franks. That is not law. It is merely a provision on an appropriation bill. There is nothing on the previous appropriation bills to indicate that it was intended by Congress that this should become permanent law. Therefore, it is clearly a temporary provision on an appropriation bill which dies at the end of the year for which that appropriation bill was passed. In any event, it does not change fundamental law. It merely provides the means by which the Agricultural Department shall go about the distribution of public seeds. To say that because in a previous appropriation bill the Congress has seen fit to permit Representatives and Senators to send seeds out under their frank that therefore Congress has not the same right in a subsequent appropriation bill to provide for a different manner of distribution would be ridiculous. It is not a change of law. It merely provides the means whereby the distribution of the seeds may be made.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that it would change existing law, as it proposes to have the distribution made in a certain way, when existing law provides a different way. That is obviously new legislation and subject to the point of order. It seems to me that argument on the point is superfluous.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this provision is not permanent law. This provision does not seek to change the purpose and intent of the bill or the purpose and intent of the section. The purpose and intent of this section is the distribution of garden seeds by the Agricultural Department, not the distribution of garden seeds by the Members of Congress. This is an appropriation bill, a bill which applies particularly and specifically to the Agricultural Department. Surely the Chair will not hold that a provision providing that the Agricultural Department itself will distribute the seeds that naturally would come from that department is new legislation on an appropriation bill, the particular subject before the committee being the distribution of garden seed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, all of this part of the paragraph at least is legislation. It provides that five-sixths of all the seeds shall be allotted for distribution in the respective districts. It provides that Members of Congress shall furnish franked slips to the department for the department to send out the seeds. That is legislation of itself. It certainly is in order to provide that instead of Members of Congress sending franked slips to the Department of Agriculture they shall send lists to the Department of Agriculture. In fact I fail to see any substantial difference between the proposition in the bill and the proposition of the gentleman from Texas. In the one case the Department of Agriculture is furnished franked slips by the Members of Congress and pastes franked slips on the packages of seeds and mails them, and in the other case, as proposed by the gentleman from Texas, a Member of Congress furnishes a list of names, notifies his constituent that he has given the name of the constituent to the Department of Agriculture to receive a package of seeds, and the Department of Agriculture writes a franked slip and pastes it on the seed package and mails it. It is quite within the power of Congress to determine in a bill which of these methods shall prevail, and this being all legislation in the bill, it certainly is subject to an amendment to change the method of transacting this business from tweedledum to tweedledee.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit an inquiry?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. On May 19, 1902, Congress passed a resolution which provided that the Public Printer should furnish the Department of Agriculture such franks as the Secretary might require for sending out seeds on congressional orders, the franks to have printed thereon the facsimile of the signatures of the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, and also the names of their respective States or Territories and such other printed matter as the Secretary may direct, the franks to be of such size, and so forth.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas provides that the seed shall be mailed under the frank of the Department of Agriculture. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the amendment does not change the purpose and intent of the joint resolution of May 19, 1902, which provides for the printing of these slips with the Members' franks on them?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think so at all, Mr. Chairman. We provide by law for the printing of ordinary frank slips. We mail farmers' bulletins under frank slips. No one would contend that we would have to make an appropriation to print farmers' bulletins. No one will contend that because of that law providing for the printing of frank slips for sending out seed we have got to make appropriation for the seed at all. That is only a law covering a case when it arises, but if we do not authorize the sending of these seeds under Members' franks, of course, the law has no application. That is true, but there is nothing obligatory on Congress to say that seeds have to be sent that way. That is only in case a provision arises where Members send out the seeds themselves.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to this phase of the situation. Rule XXI, section 2, provides that no legislation on an appropriation bill shall be in order which increases the amount of the appropriation or which on its face does not indicate a reduction in the amount to be appropriated. And I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the imposition of the work of addressing the slips and sending out the seeds, provided for in this section of the pending bill, will add materially to the expense of the Agricultural Department and thereby brings the amendment outside the rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would all have to be done under this appropriation by reducing the number of seed sent out, and I do not see how it would increase the expense of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MADDEN. It might increase the expense by compelling them to employ additional clerks, and then they would come to the Committee on Appropriations of the House for a deficiency.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They would have to meet all the expense out of the appropriation for this item.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not sure whether they would or not. My colleague would not deny that they would have the power to create a deficiency?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They would not have the power to create a deficiency.

Mr. MADDEN. If they did, then what?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If they created it, I do not know then what. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I just want the Chairman to take that into consideration in his decision.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As I understand, the matter read by the Chair provides certain specific legislation in reference to this seed distribution. It must be perfectly apparent that no amendment offered on the floor can repeal that law. If it changes it in any degree, that modifies the legislation, and on an appropriation bill it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] offers an amendment which, if adopted, will make the language in lines 7, 8, and 9, page 31, read as follows:

For distribution among their constituents, to be mailed by the department upon the receipt of their list of constituents, all of such seed to be mailed under the frank of said department in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine.

The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that that amendment is new legislation and changes existing law. The Chair has already called attention to the fact that on May 19, 1902, Congress passed a joint resolution, as follows:

That the Public Printer shall furnish to the Department of Agriculture such franks as the Secretary of Agriculture may require for sending out seeds on congressional orders, the franks to have printed thereon the facsimile signatures of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, also the names of their respective States or Territories, and the words "United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional Seed Distribution," or such other printed matter as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct; the franks to be of such size and style as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; the expense of printing the said franks to be charged to the allotment for printing and binding for the two Houses of Congress.

That is found in 32 United States Statutes at Large, Public resolution 23.

It is true, as the gentleman from Illinois contends, that the language to which the amendment is offered provides for legislation, but it provides for legislation, in the view of the Chair, which is authorized under that resolution, namely, to provide for the sending out of the seeds, the franks for which are authorized to be printed upon requisiton of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The amendment of the gentleman from Texas seeks to change the method of sending these seeds out under the addressed franks of the Members of Congress and Delegates, so that they shall be sent out under the frank of the said department. If the legislation to which the amendment is offered were subject to a point of order, and no point of order was lodged against it, any germane amendment would be in order to perfect it even though it might possibly repeal or modify the existing law. But, in the view of the Chair, the language of the bill is legislation which is authorized by existing law and is such legislation as would not be subject to a point of order, while the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is such as to amend, modify, and change what seems to the Chair to be the plain meaning and intent of the resolution which the Chair has read, and which is existing law, and would not be in order to this paragraph of the bill. That is to say it is new legislation, its effect being to change existing law in a manner which is hardly within the requirements of the rules of the House, relating to legislation on a general appropriation bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 130.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the pending bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MANN of Illinois having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President had, on February 7, 1920, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 5348. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas McGovern; and

H. R. 8953. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Forest Service: One forester, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief of office of accounts and fiscal agent, $2,500; 1 inspector of records, $2,400; 7 district fiscal agents, at $2,120 each; 1 forest supervisor, $3,240; 1 forest supervisor, $2,880; 8 forest supervisors, at $2,500 each; 16 forest supervisors, at $2,380 each; 44 forest supervisors, at $2,180 each; 60 forest supervisors, at $1,980 each; 5 forest supervisors, at $1,780 each; 1 deputy forest supervisor, $1,980; 4 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,880 each; 25 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,780 each; 28 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,680 each; 15 deputy forest supervisors, at $1,580 each; 11 forest rangers, at $1,620 each; 23 forest rangers, at $1,520 each; 78 forest rangers, at $1,420 each; 288 forest rangers, at $1,320 each; 590 forest rangers, at $1,220 each; 1 clerk, $2,100; 4 clerks, at $2,000 each; 19 clerks, at $1,800 each; 21 clerks, at $1,600 each; 9 clerks, at $1,500 each; 23 clerks, at $1,400 each; 9 clerks, at $1,300 each; 138 clerks, at $1,200 each; 95 clerks, at $1,100 each; 54 clerks, at $1,020 each; 30 clerks, at $960 each; 122 clerks, at $900 each; 2 clerks, at $840 each; 1 clerk, $600; 1 clerk or proof reader, $1,400; 1 clerk or translator, $1,400; 1 compiler, $1,800; 1 draftsman, $2,000; 2 draftsmen or surveyors, at $1,800 each; 3 draftsmen, at $1,600 each; 1 clerk or compositor, $1,600; 3 draftsmen or surveyors, at $1,660 each; 16 draftsmen or surveyors, at $1,500 each; 6 draftsmen or surveyors, at $1,400 each; 2 draftsmen, at $1,500 each; 9 draftsmen, at $1,400 each; 4 draftsmen, at $1,300 each; 16 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 2 draftsmen, at $1,100 each; 3 draftsmen, at $1,020 each; 1 draftsman, $1,000; 1 draftsman, $960; 12 draftsmen or map colorists, at $900 each; 1 draftsman or artist, $1,200; 1 draftsman or negative cutter, $1,200; 1 artist, $1,600; 1 artist, $1,000; 1 photographer, $1,600; 1 photographer, $1,400; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 photographer, $1,100; 1 lithographer or photographer, $1,200; 1 lithographer's helper, $780; 1 blue printer, $900; 1 blue printer, $720; 2 telephone operators, at $600 each; 1 machinist, $1,260; 2 carpenters, at $1,200 each; 3 carpenters, at $1,000 each; 1 carpenter, $960; 1 electrician, $1,020; 1 laboratory aid and engineer, $1,000; 9 laboratory aids and engineers, at $900 each; 2 laboratory aids and engineers, at $800 each; 1 laboratory helper, $720; 1 laboratory helper, $600; 1 packer, $1,000; 1 packer, $780; 4 watchmen, at $840 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $960 each; 3 messengers or laborers, at $900 each; 4 messengers or laborers, at $840 each; 3 messengers or laborers, at $780 each; 5 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 6 messengers or laborers, at $660 each; 5 messenger boys, at $600 each; 2 messenger boys, at $540 each; 3 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $420 each; 13 messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 charwoman, $540; 1 charwoman, $480; 1 charwoman, $300; 11 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $2,488,180.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 34, line 15, after the word "each," strike out the balance of the line, and all of lines 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and down to and including the second "each" on line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Ten messenger boys at $600 a year."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, for the present, I object. I want to hear what the gentleman has to say, first.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to my good friend from Minnesota that I am still working on this useless messenger service. Saturday, when I offered amendments to cut down the messenger service in this bill from 743 messengers to 22, there followed a debate in which almost every participant admitted that there were too many messengers. And yet when the vote came we could get only 10 votes mustered in favor of retrenchment. I want to show my colleague from Minnesota what some of these gentlemen said.

Mr. MONDELL said:

It is no doubt true there are too many. Those of us who visit these departments believe there is an unnecessary number of clerks and probably an unnecessary number of messengers in many of them.

Then Mr. MANN of Illinois, the great leader on that side of the House, said:

Now, I am inclined to agree very largely with some of the suggestions made by the gentleman from Texas. I have no doubt there are too many messengers in the Agricultural Department and in every other department of the Government. The Committee on Agriculture has more important duties to perform than finding out what each one of the 700 messengers in the department is doing. I am inclined to think that it would not hurt anybody in the end if we very materially reduced the number of messengers, who are now so thick that they fall over each other in every department. [Applause.]

You will note that he received applause.

This is what Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, a member of the Committee on Agriculture, said:

There are too many employees. [Applause.] Why does the bill still provide for too many? Because the Committee on Agriculture was unable to get assistance or suggestions from heads of bureaus as to where cuts could properly be made in the bill, cuts that the majority of the committee said were necessary. * * * We could not eliminate the excess; we could not tell which clerk, which watchman, which messenger should be refused, and we received no suggestion from anyone connected with the department as to which of them could be eliminated. * * * And another thing that makes the number of employees in that department larger than it ought to be is that every one of them is under civil service, and time after time the heads of the bureau, in answer to inquiries, have told us that there are clerks and other employees on the rolls who are incompetent. We asked why incompetents are not dismissed, and the answer was that they are under civil service; that if one is to be gotten rid of there must be charges and a trial, so the bureau hesitates, and that is one of the reasons they do not proceed against anyone.

Now, from Mr. MADDEN, the majority sage on departmental affairs—I will read what he says on pages 2611 and 2612 of the RECORD:

I think that it will be admitted by every man here that if there ever was a time when we should pare to the bone that time is now. It is conceded by every impartial observer that in all the branches of the Government service in the District of Columbia we have more than 40,000 people who are not needed, but you can not get the cooperation of any man in the Government service to eliminate them from the pay roll. * * * And I am perfectly willing to enter upon a campaign now to assist in the elimination of every unnecessary employee.

Mr. BLANTON. Then vote for my amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I will. I intend to vote for the gentleman's amendment. * * * We had about 30,000 people on the pay roll in Washington when the war came on, and to-day we have 110,000. Does anyone believe that 110,000 clerks are needed here in these days of peace? Not at all.

Now, let us see what was said by Mr. HAUGEN, the chairman of this committee. Here is what he says on page 2612 of the RECORD:

It was suggested to a representative of the department that he might indicate what cuts could best be made in the bill. He indicated that he would like to accommodate the committee, but I inferred that it would be embarrassing to him to suggest a cut in one bureau and not in another. * * * The committee can not go to the departments to find out how many messengers they must employ and how many they need. We must take their word for it. * * * We may have more messengers here than we ought to have, and I think they have more in the departments than they ought to have.

Contrary to what has been done in most other cases, this particular item has been increased and the number of employees as well in a considerable number of instances. This item in 1918 carried $418,000 plus; in 1919 it carried $440,000 plus; in 1920, the current law, it carries $491,000 plus, a jump of $50,000; and now in this bill there is another jump of over $35,000 in this one item. If we ever intend to get back to normal, to anything like where we were before the war, it is necessary not only to not increase but to cut wherever possible.

Mr. Chairman, despite all of the above lip-expressions of economy, I say when we went to vote on the matter, when we got down to a vote, one would be inclined to think, from all of these statements of these big leaders on this Republican economy side, that that amendment for retrenchment would carry. Yet when it came to a vote, so that these messengers could be reduced in this bill, there were only 10 votes for it in the committee. Not a single leader asked that these 367 absent Members be brought in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more, because this is important.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman used up all of his time in reading matter that was already in the RECORD, and therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. NOLAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to continue for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to continue for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, why do they object? Because these employees are civil-service employees of this Government, and whenever you go to take one off you have got the organization of that gentleman who prevented me from extending my remarks [Mr. NOLAN] coming up here and bulldozing Congress. That is why you see in the paper this morning the pronunciamento of his organizations, who say to the country that they are going to elect every Congressman to do their bidding, as the gentleman from California does so frequently in their behalf. That is the greatest menace that was ever sounded to the danger of this great Republic.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am glad to have seen Mr. Gompers's hand, because it is going to wake up the people of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and whenever Samuel Gompers puts his hand on a Representative and says, "Elect him," the people are going to keep him at home. That will be the result of this great pronunciamento from the man who wants free speech, the man who wants free press. He is the gentleman who objects to Members of Congress going to the American people with these things that are of the utmost importance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HAUGEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire recognition?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. The bill carries 36 messengers here, but the service is divided into eight districts and 151 national forest units. It would seem that the 36 messengers are not an unusually large number of messengers. When you take into consideration the amount of money expended and the receipts of the service, I think the gentleman will agree that the number asked for is a reasonable number.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I objected to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to extend his remarks. I do not object to anybody getting up on the floor of this House and talking about matters that are pertinent to the subject before the House, but I am going to object to any Member of this House taking up page after page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with extensions of remarks——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. NOLAN (continuing). Especially when it is hypocrisy and demagogy.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from California may have five minutes. The gentleman from Texas had five minutes. I did not make a point of order on the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I shall not object unless the gentleman is too contrary. In that connection I ask that I be permitted to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. NOLAN. I will agree to that, unless the gentleman's remarks are not in connection with the subject that I objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am sorry that the gentleman from Texas objects, because he himself has just spoken for five minutes out of order. I did think of making a point of order against him when he was speaking. I do not think he ought to object to the gentleman replying to him—the gentleman whom he attacked.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from California spoke on precisely the same subject as the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] is not discussing the amendment he proposed. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be permitted to speak five minutes out of order, and that I be permitted to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division of the request.

Mr. BLANTON. I am perfectly willing for the request to be divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The House can not intelligently act on requests for unanimous consent until they are stated by the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to modify my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will wait until the Chair states the original request. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] be permitted to proceed for five minutes out of order, and that the gentleman from Texas himself be permitted to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for a division of the request.

Mr. BLANTON. And as it is modified, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from California be permitted to address the House out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks to modify his request as submitted, so that it will provide that the gentleman from California be permitted to address the House out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. NOLAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether the gentleman is going to revise and extend his remarks——

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects. The gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is as fair as we get.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take the time of the House in trying to answer the references made by the gentleman from Texas to myself. I have been here since 1913, and my record is well known to the workers of the country and well known to the Members of Congress and to people generally who take notice of the proceedings in the House and who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. What I object to is the action of the gentleman from Texas or any other Member in abusing the privileges of the House by revising and extending remarks as a Member of Congress. I do not object so much to the extension of remarks, even when he goes to the newspapers and the magazines and inserts material and communications from his constituents and others. But I do object to the method adopted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], not once but on many occasions, in attacking myself and others through the grant of the privilege of extension of remarks, by putting stuff into the RECORD that he does not utter on the floor of this House. That is why I intend to object whenever I am in this House when the gentleman from Texas asks permission to revise and extend his remarks. Last summer he attacked the Committee on Labor and he attacked the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACCRATE] and myself through an extension of remarks of 32 pages, which I attempted to answer and did answer under date of September 16 by putting into the RECORD, over the protest of the gentleman from Texas, communications that I and other Members of this House had received. Now, I am an advocate of free speech, but I want it to be free speech and I want a man when he attacks anybody to attack him to his face and not steal into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD like a thief in the night behind his back.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman directed that appellation to me, I ask that his words be taken down.

Mr. NOLAN. I take it there is no question as to whom I referred to.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I ask that the words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will indicate the words that he desires to have taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. The words about coming into the RECORD like a thief in the night.

The CHAIRMAN. The words will be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. I think I am pretty open-mouthed in what I say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will suspend. The Official Reporters will write out the words, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

I want a man when he attacks anybody to attack him to his face and not steal into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, like a thief in the night, behind his back.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise and report the words to the House.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12272, the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] having the floor, uttered words which, upon the demand of Mr. BLANTON, were taken down; and said words having been taken down and reported to the committee, he reported the words to the House for its action.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the words be expunged from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the words be expunged from the RECORD.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CRISP), there were—ayes 17, noes 72.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members——

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, to save the time of the House, may I be permitted to withdraw the remark which I made?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California requests that he be permitted to withdraw the words.

Mr. HICKS. I make the point of order that the Chair has announced that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Chair has already announced the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman said he would withdraw the words.

Mr. HICKS. But the Chair has announced that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The Chair had announced it. The Chair thinks it is too late, after the announcement that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 186, answered "present" 27, not voting 145, as follows:

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. MOORE of Virginia.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. OGDEN with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska with Mr. RAINEY of Alabama.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. MORIN with Mr. RANDALL of California.

Mr. MCFADDEN with Mr. ROUSE.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to strike out the words is not agreed to. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12272), with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up any more time. I rose and got five minutes out of order for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the reasons why I objected to an extension of remarks by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. If this little performance here for the last three-quarters of an hour does nothing else than tend to correct that sort of an abuse, I am satisfied with my part in it. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, we have heard to-day references to organized labor in politics, that the members of labor unions are going to combine to support their friends or alleged friends, regardless of political party affiliations. While this is nothing new in this country, if it means the subordination of vital political principles to class solidarity it is to be regretted. Class hatred should be minimized and avoided. Representative government is founded on mutual regard and confidence. All people, whether they work with hands or brain, are useful and necessary to the happiness of all. Nor should any movement be founded upon the idea that one class owns the property and another does the work. The working people own more of the funds deposited in savings institutions, banks, trust and insurance companies than any other class. To destroy the institution of private property would not increase the well-being of those who labor, but would injure them.

I commend to all thinking people these words of Abraham Lincoln:

LINCOLN ON PROPERTY.

Property is the fruit of labor; property is desirable; is a positive good in the world. That some should be rich shows that others may become rich, and hence is just encouragement to industry and enterprise. Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him work diligently and build one for himself, thus by example assuring that his own shall be safe from violence when built.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BLAND of Indiana, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Mr. FAIRFIELD, Mr. PURNELL, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, and Mr. STEENERSON were given leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 34, line 15, after the word "each," strike out the balance of the line and all of lines 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, down to and including the second "each" in line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "10 messenger boys at $600 each."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

General expenses, Forest Service: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigation and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $1,000: Provided further, That hereafter the charge for grazing permits upon each of the national forests shall be not less than the appraised value of pasturage upon such national forests as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time, but at least every five years, beginning with the calendar year 1921, upon the basis of the commercial rates charged for pasturage upon lands of similar character, taking into account the advantages and disadvantages of the respective areas: And provided also, That the Secretary of Agriculture may allow free of charge the grazing of milch, work, or other animals used for domestic purposes not exceeding a total of 10 head owned and in use by bona fide settlers residing in or near a national forest; or animals in actual use by prospectors, campers, and travelers; or saddle, pack, and work animals actually used in connection with permitted operations on the national forests. To pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests, including the payment of rewards under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture for information leading to the arrest and conviction for violation of the laws and regulations relating to fires in or near national forests, or for the unlawful taking of, or injury to, Government property; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forests products cut or removed from the national forests to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase necessary supplies, apparatus, office fixtures, law books, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington, and for medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for immediate relief of artisans, laborers, and other employees engaged in any hazardous work under the Forest Service; to pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses, including traveling expenses for legal and fiscal officers while performing Forest Service work; and for rent outside of the District of Columbia, as follows:

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso beginning with line 13, page 35, and ending with the word "areas," in line 21, page 35.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve a point of order on the balance of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona reserves a point of order on the second proviso, on page 35, lines 13 to 21, inclusive, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves a point of order on the balance of the paragraph.

Mr. FRENCH. I reserve a point of order on the words in line 18, page 35, "beginning with the calendar year 1921."

The CHAIRMAN. They are included in the reservation of the point of order of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. FRENCH. It is conceivable that the point of order I have made may apply to those words, while the points of order made by others may not apply to the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. In that event the gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. HAYDEN. I want to inquire of the committee why it is that they attempt, as they state in their report, to double the grazing fees on the national forests, beginning with the year 1921, by the enactment of this proviso, when it was set forth in the hearings by the Chief of the Forest Service that there are now in existence on most of the national forests a series of five-year permits which began with the year 1919 and will not expire until the year 1923? To enact such legislation at this time is unfair and unjust to a large number of stockmen who, acting upon the announced policy of the Secretary of Agriculture, accepted a doubling of the grazing fees for the year 1919 with the distinct understanding that they could obtain five-year permits, which they have since obtained. On page 127 of the hearings appears a letter dated November 23, 1918, addressed to the Secretary of the National Live Stock Association, in Denver, by the Secretary of Agriculture, which reads in part:

> On a considerable portion of the national forests we have reached the point where permits for a period of five years can be put into effect without difficulty. * * * Therefore I am authorizing the forester to issue five-year grazing permits, beginning with the season of 1919, where the conditions warrant such action and it is desired by the permittees.

It is set forth in the testimony of Mr. A. F. Potter, the associate forester, that there are now in existence a large number of such five-year permits. Certainly it is unfair and unjust to the cattle growers and sheep raisers on the national forests to attempt now, in the light of the existing understanding, by legislation, to arbitrarily double the grazing fees they will have to pay. I want to know what it was that induced the committee to recommend such radical action.

Mr. ANDERSON. The language of the item is such that if we had not put that in they would have had to begin immediately, and we thought we would be more lenient than otherwise by making it 1921 instead of right away.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman is well aware, as were other members of the committee, of the existence of this five-year agreement respecting grazing fees on the national forests. Why not wait to apply the raise until 1923, as suggested by Mr. Potter?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has the floor. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman desires an answer to his question?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have a copy here of the blank form of permits, and if the gentleman will examine it he will find that they reserve the right to terminate the lease at any time.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true of every grazing permit that was ever issued on any national forest reserve. That is the reason why forest-reserve grazing permits are not as valuable as leases obtained on private grazing lands. The stockman can not afford to pay as much for a privilege which is revocable at any time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well, then. You have no five-year permit, because the Government reserves the right to revoke it.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will let me give the history of this matter, I am sure that he will agree with my statement of the facts. In the years 1916 and 1917 the Forest Service made an investigation of the charges for grazing on private and Indian lands adjacent to the national forests, and decided that the rates charged on the forest reserves were not high enough. The Secretary of Agriculture in 1917 proposed to double the grazing fees. The stockmen were heard on the question, and they said that they would not object to doubling the fees provided that they were given five-year permits instead of the then prevailing permits which ran from year to year. It was with that distinct understanding that the raise in rates was made. In 1918 there was a 25 per cent increase, and last year, 1919, the Secretary of Agriculture enforced a 100 per cent increase. Over $880,000 in increased collections was paid into the Treasury by virtue of that increase. Now, in the middle of the term of the existing five-year agreements, the committee proposes by legislation to redouble the grazing fees on the national forests and increase the collections from the stockmen by $2,500,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, we have a statement from the Chief Forester stating that no obligation has been incurred on the part of the Government as to the tenure of the permit. The gentleman has referred to the fees charged. If the gentleman will turn to the hearings, he will find that we turned over 155,000,000 acres of land to the department with forest, grazing, and water-power privileges included. Yet the expenditures for the Forest Service are $9,285,611 and the receipts only $4,358,414, leaving a deficit of $4,927,196. It seems to me that it is time that we were giving more consideration to the question of receipts from the forests. The grazing fees last year were for the entire year on an average $1.20 per head of cattle; sheep, 25 per cent less; horses, 25 per cent increase. The average fees received for cattle were 72 cents per head.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman compare the fees charged for cattle and the different kinds of stock upon our national forests with those charged in Canada? Is it not a fact that we charge almost double what they do, and in some cases two and a half times and three times as much?

Mr. HAUGEN. We may charge less than Canada, but we charge only half in the forests that they charge outside the forests under similar conditions. It is time to look into this matter and to charge a reasonable fee.

Mr. SINNOTT. Has the gentleman the figures to answer my question?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have the figures charged by the department and the figures charged outside of the forests.

Mr. SINNOTT. The figures I have from the department show that we charge two and a half and sometimes three times as much as they charge across the line.

Mr. HAUGEN. In Canada?

Mr. SINNOTT. For the same kind of grazing.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am not concerned over the fees in Canada, but I am concerned over the fees in this country.

Mr. SINNOTT. It affords a pretty good comparison.

Mr. HAUGEN. And I am concerned about the condition of the Treasury at this time.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have here a letter from the Acting Forester, Mr. A. F. Potter, in which he states that the total receipts for grazing on the national forests last year were $2,609,000, and that the total expenditures of all kinds, including payments to the States, were $1,576,000, leaving a clear profit on the grazing of $1,032,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I suggest to the gentleman that they confine themselves to the point of order. The merits of the proposition are not in issue at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona reserved the point of order for the purpose of securing information. He proceeded under the five-minute rule, which is permissible until the regular order is demanded.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman from Michigan is anxious for action, and inasmuch as the hour of adjournment is close at hand, I make the point of order that this proviso is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that the language, beginning with the words "Provided further," in line 13, down to and including the word "areas," in line 21, is new legislation. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. It would seem that if the Forest Service has jurisdiction over grazing and Congress has jurisdiction over the Forest Service, that Congress has also the right to prescribe how the permits shall be made and how the amount of the fees shall be reached. The courts have determined that the Forest Service has the power to fix the fees.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the point of order which I make is that under existing law the Secretary of Agriculture has authority to fix the grazing fees on the national forests, and that this proposed legislation is a change of existing law, directing the manner in which such fees shall be collected. It is also an attempt to raise revenue on an appropriation bill, and does not carry any reduction of expenditures. The precedents are very clear. Only a few days ago—on the 26th of January, to be exact—a decision in point was rendered when the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill was under consideration. An amendment was offered to increase the fees for passports from $1 to $5. The Speaker at that time held:

> By the terms of the amendment it is provided that an additional fee—in other words, additional revenue—shall be provided, which shall be put into the same fund from which this appropriation is drawn, and which increases that fund by the amount derived from the tax.
> * * * * * * *
> It is a novel suggestion that new taxes are economy or lead necessarily to a reduction of expenses.

The point of order was sustained.

A ruling to the same effect was made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, who said:

> It must be apparent to the members of the committee that there is nothing on the face of this amendment to indicate a reduction in the amount of the appropriation. Of course, it is true that if the amendment should be adopted it would raise revenue, but the revenue would go into the Treasury, to the credit of the general fund; and there is nobody here wise enough to say what that revenue would be appropriated for. It might not be appropriated for the payment of the expenses of the State Department at all; and on the face of the facts, as the Chair sees them, he can not see any possibility of the reduction of the amount of the appropriation on its face resulting from the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, nor can it be said that it will even increase the amount covered into the Treasury. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

There can be no question but that this proviso attempts to change existing law by legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore violates the terms of clause 2 of rule 21, which prohibits that very thing from being done.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say only a word. There is authority of law for the Secretary making the charge for the use of the national forests for grazing and for other purposes. He has been pursuing one plan under that general authority. This is a suggestion or a direction to him to use another plan. It seems to me that this is not subject to the point of order.

It is his duty to make some charge, and he has been pursuing one plan and we are suggesting to him to use another.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. Undoubtedly the Congress has the right to regulate charges for grazing, and it has exercised that right by giving the Secretary certain discretion in law, but that was a matter of general law. That discretion can not obtain on legislation on an appropriation bill. If the committee would bring in special legislation changing that, undoubtedly it would be in order for the committee to make such changes, but it is not in order to report legislative changes in an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arizona has made a point of order on the proviso beginning in line 13, page 35. I reserve a point of order on the balance. I desire, in connection with the point of order made by the gentleman from Arizona, as it is practically a part of it, to make a point of order on the proviso beginning on line 21, page 35, down to and including the word "forests," lines 3 and 4, page 36, and let it all go together. I do not think there can be any argument as to whether or not it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the point of order made by the gentleman from Arizona covers language to which the point of order offered by myself was directed.

It seems to me that either point of order must be sustained under our rules, and I have in mind especially section 2 of Rule XXI, which provides that no change may be made upon appropriation bills of existing law, except as is germane to the subject matter of the bill and shall retrench expenditures. To my mind the provision included in the bill as reported by the committee, that attempts to define a policy for the fixing of grazing-permit charges and providing that this policy shall begin with the calendar year 1921, is clearly out of order, and it has been repeatedly decided by the Chair that language much less constructive than this is not in order.

Now let me refer for just a few minutes to the merits of the committee proposition. The committee proposes that hereafter charges for grazing permits upon each national forest shall be not less than approved value of pasturage upon such forests as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time, and at least every five years, beginning with the calendar year 1921, upon the basis of commercial rates charged for pasturage upon lands of similar character, taking into account the advantages and disadvantages of the respective areas.

In a general way the language of the proposed measure recites a policy that the department desires to follow.

Prior to 1906 no charge was made for grazing live stock upon the national forests. Although the number of each kind of stock was restricted and only limited numbers permitted to graze, the grazing privilege was allowed free in accordance with the prevailing custom upon the public lands.

The policy of charging for grazing permits was put into effect on January 1, 1906, and the rates first established were from 35 to 50 cents per head for grazing cattle and horses during the entire year and from 20 to 35 cents per head for the regular summer grazing season. The charge for sheep and goats was from 5 to 8 cents per head for the regular summer grazing season, no year-long grazing of these kinds of stock being allowed at that time.

The rates initiated in 1906 were readjusted and gradually increased during the first 10 years, with the result that on January 1, 1916, the charge for grazing cattle during the entire year had been increased from 40 cents to $1.50 per head in accordance with the advantages of the locality, and these rates were used as the basis for rates on other kinds of stock and for grazing periods of less than one year. The charge for horses was fixed at 25 per cent more than for cattle and the charge for sheep and goats at 25 per cent of the cattle rate. The charge for periods of less than one year was generally one-tenth of the annual rate per month.

Under these different schedules the average amount paid by the stockmen for their grazing permits was increased approximately 50 per cent between 1906 and 1916 and considerably more up to the last year, or 1919.

Under these different schedules and policies the total receipts from grazing on the national forests have increased from $513,000 in 1906, with an area of 94,159,492 acres, to $1,210,214 in 1916, with an area of 156,706,008 acres, and to $2,609,169 in 1919, with approximately the same acreage. There has been, proportionate with the area, an increase of about 50 per cent in the number of stock grazed.

In connection with the final increase the announcement was made that five-year permits would be issued, which would not be subject to reduction except to stop damage to the forest. Such permits have been issued for about two-thirds of the stock grazed upon the forests, and with the understanding that the present rates would apply until the end of the five-year period, in 1923. This action was taken to stabilize the live-stock industry and encourage expansion and improvement by small owners, who hesitated to borrow money for the purchase of additional stock or better animals without assurance regarding the future obligations they would have to meet. A change in the rates, applicable prior to the calendar year 1924, would necessitate a readjustment in these permits.

Those to whom these permits have been issued have made their business arrangements on the assumption that the leases have been issued in good faith. Under them men have acquired by purchase or by lease lands for winter use. They have constructed buildings. They have purchased breeding stock and shaped and modified their herds and flocks upon the basis, not of one year, or an uncertain period, but on the basis of five years.

These permits are necessarily part of the basis for the establishment of credit, and you can see what it would mean to those who hold them to tear them in two as a mere scrap of paper, and to say to those who hold them, "We shall renew your leases provided you will enter into a new lease upon the basis of 50 per cent or 100 per cent increase in rates to the Government." Gentlemen, a proposition of that kind can not be defended, and those who hold leases from the Government on forest reserves have the right to expect that, excepting for the most urgent reason, their leases shall be held sacred for the period of time recited in the lease. The reason why it appeared advisable to fix a period of five years was in order to encourage the stock industry on the forest reserves. Men would not go into the stock business and then be dispossessed at an uncertain time. It is to the interest of the Government to encourage a policy that will mean permanent industry, and it is to the interest of those who engage in the business to know definitely the time for which their leases shall apply.

The provision of the bill suggested by the Committee on Agriculture should be eliminated, for the Secretary of Agriculture has all the authority that it confers, but if not eliminated it should be made to apply upon the expiration of permits that are outstanding and not be made to terminate current permits regardless of the responsibility assumed by those who are engaged in the stock business by virtue of these contracts or permits made by the Government.

I want to insert in my remarks at this point a table prepared by the Forest Service that will show the permits that are outstanding (1919) for grazing upon the forest reserves.

State.	Cattle, horses, and swine.				Sheep and goats.
	Permits issued.	Number of stock grazed.			Permits issued.	Number of stock grazed.

SOME OBJECTIONS.

Time will not permit a full answer to every criticism that has been made.

One gentleman says that the average cost of grazing in the forest reserves is 72 cents per head of cattle for a season and one-fourth of that for sheep. And then he says that in Kansas and Iowa for the same use of pasture owners of stock are glad to pay $14 per head of cattle. Another Member declares that the rates on the forest reserves are one-tenth what they ought to be while others would pass immediately an act multiplying the rates charged by 300 per cent.

Gentlemen forget that the Kansas and Iowa lands of which they speak will sell for $50 to $100 per acre, while the forest-reserve lands that carry the most stock would not sell probably for $5 an acre if offered to the highest bidder.

Again, gentlemen forget that Kansas and Iowa lands are close to market, that on stock shipped from there there is little shrinkage in shipment, that stock may be shipped at almost any time and thus be able to meet the top-notch price, that fields are fenced, that water is abundant, and that herds do not require the constant attention of the cowboys and the sheep herders. Gentlemen forget that all these items add greatly to the expenses of the stockmen in the Western States.

Gentlemen forget that a generation ago for the most part predatory animals were killed off in the Middle States, while here is a problem that means annual loss to the stockmen who depend on the forest range.

But after all the chief reason why the committee proposition should not pass is because it annuls existing permits. The Government's word should be good. Agreements should be kept and men to whom have been granted permits for a definite period should not be disturbed in rights that exist under them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, it may not reduce the expenditures, but it will increase the receipts. It will really increase them by more than $2,000,000. It means more than $900,000 in revenue for the States and it means $1,000,000 revenue for the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona makes the point of order to the second proviso of this paragraph, in that it changes existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill. Clearly the language of the proviso is in the form of permanent legislation, and as the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] suggested, it seeks to provide specifically what is now by law given to the Secretary of Agriculture as a discretionary power. And the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I made a point of order in connection with the point of order of the gentleman from Arizona. It is all a part of the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order, beginning on line 21, page 34, down to and including the word "forests" in lines 4 and 5, page 36. The same reasons on which the previous ruling was based apply to this, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. I want to call attention, if I may, to the time, and say that it is the intention of the Democrats to hold a caucus in this room after Congress adjourns, and we hoped to get through before dinner to-night. I notice the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] have each an amendment to offer.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. When does the gentleman wish us to adjourn?

Mr. GARNER. We want to begin now, at 4 o'clock. We gave notice to that effect.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12272, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WEBSTER (at request of Mr. SUMMERS of Washington), for one day, on account of illness.

To Mr. CULLEN, until further notice, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 20. Joint resolution giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 10.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,500 copies of the national banking act, as amended to date, for the use of the Senate and to be distributed through the Senate document room—to the Committee on Printing.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, February 10, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 10, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, with Thee are the issues of life and death. We stand before Thee to give an account here of our stewardship. We must stand at last before Thee to render an account of the deeds done in the body. Thou dost call us by Thy providence to serve Thee. Thou hast sent us forth to be as an evangel of God, to give Thy will and Thy law to many men. Help us in Thy fear and with Thy favor and under Thy guidance to discharge the duties that are upon us. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11368) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to dispose of Senate amendments numbered 114 and 115 in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement to said amendments and had agreed to the same.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurreat resolution. The House did recede, and it is so shown in the printed report, but in the typewritten copy from which the report was made the figures "114" and "115" were left out.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 20) giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a petition, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1920.

"To the President, the Senate of the United States, and the American people:

"It is with deep satisfaction that this conference committee, representing 27 national organizations, reassembles in Washington on the day that the treaty of peace again comes before the Senate. We come back to the National Capital, following our conference of January 13, with the strong hope that the treaty is soon to be ratified. The President of the United States, in his letter to Senator HITCHCOCK, has said definitely that he will accept reservations. Agreement on the fact that there are to be reservations has been reached, leaving only the matter of their final form to be determined. Authoritative intimations come from England and from France that the form of the reservations is wholly secondary to the compelling importance and necessity of having America a member of the League of Nations.

"We again invoke the fundamental democratic right of petition in the name of over 50,000,000 Americans belonging to the organizations we represent, urging that, without further delay, the reservations be cast in a final form.

"All the reservations now under consideration are the result of a long series of compromises. The original position of the Republicans that the treaty should be adopted only with amendments, and that of the President that it should be adopted without reservations, have both been abandoned. Conferences of the bipartisan committee of the Senate have resulted in practical agreement on all reservations except those on article 10 and on the Monroe doctrine. In regard to the latter there has not been any doubt that the doctrine should be preserved, differences now being confined to the method of expressing that opinion without offense to friendly nations both in Europe and America.

"As regards article 10 the difference between the reservation presented by Senator LODGE and that submitted to the President by Senator HITCHCOCK seems to consist in the fact that the former declares that we assume no obligation under the article without the approval of Congress in each specific case, and the latter that we assume no obligation to take action under the article without the approval of Congress in each specific case. The real nature of this difference is for us hard to understand, and we believe it will be wholly incomprehensible to the American people. In any event the difference is insignificant in comparison to the importance of the treaty and covenant itself. We believe that it is not only for the interests of the country but for those of the President, the Senate, and each of the great political parties, to ratify this treaty without further delay.

"We are confident also that when the United States takes its seat in the League of Nations it will not be a silent partner in the league but will exert an influence for humanity and justice proportionate to its resources, its population, its ideals, and its traditions.

"For the conference of national organizations favoring ratification of the peace treaty,

Mr. MCKELLAR. I present two telegrams, one on the subject of grain and the other on the subject of the National Guard, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KNOXVILLE, TENN., February 9, 1920.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The passage of the Gronna bill at this time, terminating the wheat guaranty and appropriation thereunder, as recommended by the Senate Agricultural Committee, would mean an immense loss to every farmer still holding wheat, as well as serious embarrassment or bankruptcy of every grain dealer, miller, and baker in the United States; also of many jobbers. The loss to the farmers would be enormous, as there is still 200,000,000 bushels of wheat back on the farms, and with the collapse in foreign exchange wheat prices have already declined 30 to 40 cents a bushel because of inability to export. With the Government's guaranty taken from the farmers, bakers, grain dealers, jobbers, and millers there is no reason why further and disastrous declines should not occur. Practically all dealers, millers, bakers, and jobbers entered into a signed contract with the United States Grain Corporation protecting them under the wheat guaranty bill, and it certainly can not be the purpose of the Congress to now void this solemn obligation when it will have the effect of ruining not only the signers of the agreement but seriously crippling every farmer who still holds part of the 200,000,000 bushels of wheat that has as yet been unshipped. We earnestly urge that you use your best efforts to defeat this bill, and ask the Senate and House Agricultural Committees to hold public hearings, where farmers, dealers, bakers, and millers can present their side of the case.

J. ALLEN SMITH & Co.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., February 4, 1920.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The enactment of the Wadsworth bill would wipe out the National Guard. The members of the Missouri National Guard cordially indorse your stand.

H. C. CLARKE, Adjutant General.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, requesting the passage of legislation which will place on a common basis for pension purposes the veterans of the Civil War and those of the Indian wars and of their widows now receiving pensions, whether by virtue of general laws on the subject or in pursuance of special acts. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon in legislative session assembled, respectfully represent:

That the early pioneers on the Pacific coast, in order to maintain American government, were compelled to engage in wars with the Indians of that region, particularly the Cayuse War of 1848, the Yakima War of 1856, and the Rogue River War of the same year. Service more arduous and difficult than theirs is not recorded in the history of the country. Common justice would dictate that these older veterans, whose ranks are now more than decimated and who are now extremely few in number, should receive the same bounty at the hands of the General Government that is given those who served in the Civil War. Their widows, too, merit equal consideration with other widows on the pension list.

We therefore respectfully memorialize your honorable body to enact such legislation as will place on a common basis for pension purposes the veterans of the Civil War and those of the Indian wars, and their widows, now receiving pensions, whether by virtue of general laws on the subject or in pursuance of special acts: It is therefore

Resolved jointly by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon, That the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress be, and they are earnestly urged to, enact proper legislation to accomplish the result above indicated; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the State of Oregon be requested to transmit a copy of this memorial to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States Congress.

Adopted by the house January 16, 1920.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 15, 1920.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Indorsed: Senate joint memorial No. 3, by Senator Lachmund.

J. W. COCHRAN,
Chief Clerk.

Filed January 16, 1920.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of the Senate joint memorial No. 3 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon at the special session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, January 12 to 17, 1920, and filed in the office of the secretary of state January 16, 1920, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the Capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 31st day of January, A. D. 1920

[SEAL.]

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also present a resolution unanimously adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Eugene, Oreg., respectfully urging Congress to give special and immediate attention to the enactment of pending legislation relative to national highway construction and the creation of a system of national highways. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution unanimously adopted by the Eugene Chamber of Commerce January 26, 1920.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

The Eugene Chamber of Commerce, of Eugene, Oreg., in regular session, respectfully represents that—

Whereas the American Association of Highway Officials, in convention assembled at Louisville, Ky., on December 11, 1919, adopted a series of resolutions, copies of which resolutions were transmitted to the House of Representatives and the United States Senate, in which resolutions there were, among other matters urged upon the attention and consideration of the United States Congress, the following facts:

That the States within whose boundaries are included large national forest reserves have expended during the last five years millions of dollars in the improvement of State and county highway systems.

That the majority of these States have issued bonds in large amounts in order to finance modern highway construction.

That there are within the boundaries of these States approximately 150,000,000 acres of national forest reserves.

That State and county highways of national importance traverse these reservations through areas involving the most difficult highway construction in the West.

That the forests in these various States are great national assets which should be preserved, and the construction of roads and highways traversing the said forests facilitate the control of forest fires, which have in the past caused tremendous losses;

That the appropriations heretofore made by Congress have been inadequate to permit of sufficient road construction within such national forests to keep pace with State and county highway systems and construction or to provide for a standard of construction equaling that of the several States and counties.

That the withdrawal of large areas by the Government has decreased the taxable resources of the States and counties wherein such withdrawals have been made, thereby reducing the bonding capacity of said States and counties.

That it is the duty of the National Government to provide sufficient funds to develop its national resources to the same extent and standards as that of the States and counties similarly situated; and

Whereas the facts and conditions heretofore stated apply with equal force, as emphasized by said American Association of Highway Officials, to Indian and other Federal reservations, and to unappropriated lands of the United States; and

Whereas the said American Association of Highway Officials, by said series of resolutions, have urged upon the Congress of the United States the necessity of appropriating at least $10,000,000 per year for the next 10 years, of which appropriation no less than 75 per cent should be expended in the construction of primary State and county highways within and adjacent to national forests, and have urged upon said Congress the necessity of appropriating at least $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and $5,000,000 per year thereafter for the next 9 years, for the purpose of constructing highways through Indian and other Federal reservations or unappropriated lands of the United States; and

Whereas the said American Association of Highway Officials did, by said resolution, urge upon the United States Congress the appropriation of the following sums of money: $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924; and

Whereas there is pending before Congress proposed legislation having for its aim the creation and construction of a system of national highways, which legislation has received the indorsement of the American Association of Highway Officials; and

Whereas the said American Association of Highway Officials has in said resolutions urged and recommended that the said system of national highways shall be selected by the various States in cooperation with the bureau of public roads; and

Whereas the Eugene Chamber of Commerce unanimously indorse the facts set out in the resolutions adopted by the said American Association of Highway Officials, and we respectfully urge upon the United States Congress the further fact that the State of Oregon occupies a peculiar and special position with reference to national forests and other national and Federal reserves, and therefore is in a peculiar and special need of adequate highway construction: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Eugene Chamber of Commerce, of Eugene, Oreg., in regular session, That we do hereby most respectfully urge and request that the Congress of the United States of America give special and immediate attention to the passage of pending legislation relative to national highway construction and the creation of a system of national highways and to such other legislation as will be in harmony with the resolutions of the said American Association of Highway Officials; and we further urge that the said Congress of the United States of America appropriate for highway construction the amounts and appropriations herein designated and such other and additional amounts as will be necessary to most effectively promote highway construction; and we urge that such appropriations be made in such manner and in such amounts as will most effectively and adequately enable the bureau of public roads to continue its present cooperation with the various States in the construction of highways: Be it further

Resolved, That our Representatives and Senators in Congress be urged to use all reasonable means to bring about the results in this resolution set forth, and that the secretary is hereby authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to every member of our delegation in Congress.

EUGENE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By F. L. CHAMBUS, President.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have here quite a number of telegrams relating to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. GRONNA], which is intended to do away with the present grain-control law. The senders of the telegrams are against the proposition. I feel, however, that I should file them, but in doing so I want to say that I think my colleague is correct in his conclusion and that the telegrams express a fear which is not justified. I ask that the telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in accordance with the instructions of the Senate yesterday I report back from the Committee on Foreign Relations the treaty of peace with Germany with the reservations and the resolution of ratification. I desire to give notice that I shall ask to have the treaty taken up for consideration on Monday next immediately after the routine morning business. I put it over until that time because so many Senators are absent, and I think it is important to have as full an attendance as possible.

There are some 25 Senators on both sides, about equally divided, who are now absent. Others are going away to keep engagements on the Lincoln anniversary on Thursday. There are also several Senators ill and it is impossible for them to be here and others at distant points on business of the Senate who can not be here. Therefore it is all the more important that we should secure the attendance of the Senators who can be here next Monday. I think we should make no progress in the interval with the treaty, and it is very important that we should have all Senators here when the treaty is taken up for continuous discussion. I therefore give notice that I shall call it up next Monday immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are in executive session.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate return to legislative session.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator withhold the motion?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I withhold it.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY EXCHANGE COMMISSION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read Senate joint resolution No. 19.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The Reading Clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 19) authorizing the appointment of an international monetary exchange commission, introduced by Mr. THOMAS May 23, 1919, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a commission consisting of seven members, not less than two of whom shall be Members of the Senate and two of the House of Representatives, and known as the international monetary exchange commission, shall be appointed by the President of the United States.

This commission shall be authorized and instructed to inquire into and ascertain what methods and legislation are essential to the establishment and continuance of a fixed ratio of currency exchange between and among the nations, to confer and cooperate with commissions which may be created by Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and other countries, and charged with the same or similar duties, and to report the results of their inquiries and investigations to the President and the Congress not later than the first Monday of December, A. D. 1919.

For the purpose of defraying the expenses of said commission necessarily incurred in the discharge of its duties, the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be paid out upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the commission.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on August 7, 1914, during the early stages of the Great War, and long before the United States became involved in it, I ventured a prophecy that with its close would come the reestablishment of the ancient ratio between silver and gold. This was my language:

[From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 63d Cong., 3d sess., vol. 51, pt. 13, p. 13437.]

I think, Mr. President, that the price of silver has at present reached its extreme ebb tide. Its demonetization was concocted and its doom determined amid the echoes of the great contest between France and Germany. It was overthrown in the dust and thunder of that terrible strife, and monetary degradation declared that the burden upon conquered France might be doubled and its defeat made the more disastrous.

I predict, Mr. President, that out of this kindred tragedy, more extended and more extensive, involving every civilized country except the United States, Japan, and the South American Republics, this metal will be again exalted. That it will be redeemed, rejuvenated, and remonetized by the exigencies of the hour, by the logic of this awful conflict, and by the supreme requirements of an exhausted and bleeding civilization.

Hence, although the day may now be dark, although the immediate prospect may be so gloomy as to justify prevailing apprehensions of disaster, it is but that darkest hour before the dawn of silver's restoration to the mints of the world—that in the near future the now despised metal will command not only the market price of the past few years but continue to rise as individual and national demands shall increase until it reaches and maintains its ancient ratio; that it will ultimately give back to industry, to commerce, and to manufacture that universal prosperity which it once enjoyed and breathe new life into the silver-mining industry everywhere; that by the common voice of mankind, enlightened by sacrifice and chastened by disaster, it will be restored to the high position and clothed again with its ancient prerogatives, of which it was cruelly deprived by unequal, unjust, and unfortunate legislation.

I based this forecast upon the enormous expenditures entailed by the war upon the principal nations of the Old World, necessitating the expansion of their credit, increasing their demand for material from silver-using nations, and burdening the gold supply of the world with a mass of obligations far beyond its power to discharge. It was also apparent that as the war progressed European stocks of gold would be constantly drawn upon to liquidate debts to neutral nations, incurred for supplies of every character, the exchange of commodities for commodities being impossible under war conditions. The United States as the greatest and wealthiest of all the noncombatants would secure by far the larger share of the outward flowing current and doubtless become the creditor of the world. Her past experience of the effect of falling and fluctuating exchange with oriental countries, upon her export trade, would warn her of the danger of a similar situation in Europe inevitably resulting from an over-inflated currency, and prompt her to initiate or accept an international concert to prevent or remove it. Europe on the other hand, bereft of her gold, confronted with enormous debts, obliged to reestablish and in many directions to reconstruct her international trade, would probably welcome any system of international change promising relief without endangering the financial structure of commerce or of credit. Signs like these pointed as I thought to the certain appreciation of silver, and through its rise in value to the establishment of international bimetallism. Events have justified my forecast thus far, and the time has come when America should take the initiative and renew its proposal of 1897 for the establishment of a parity between the ancient monetary metals, whose relative values now oscillate between 15½ to 15 to 1.

In estimating the effect of the war upon silver, I manifested no superior wisdom. I merely voiced what every thinking man must have perceived. Many others, notably the senior Senator from Utah, expressed the same view. And those most unwilling or most reluctant to accept it must have perceived in the slow but steadily accelerating rise of silver values throughout the war, in spite of prodigious efforts to prevent it, that the recurrence of the historic equilibrium between gold and silver was as certain as the tides. That equilibrium has been reached and passed. The scale now tips in the other direction. Gold is to-day the cheaper metal. It, rather than silver, needs the steadying influence of an international agreement that will prevent its further or future depreciation.

Mr. President, I have neither the wish nor the need to revive the old free-silver controversy which disturbed the political and financial chronometers from 1873 to 1900 and which became the paramount issue of the campaign of 1896. Its fundamental premise disappeared when silver touched 1.2929 in the markets of last November. It reversed itself when the price passed that figure. Gold then became the defendant in the world's financial courts. There it can say nothing in its behalf. Its advocates foreclosed its cause by their arguments and assertions in the days when silver, arraigned at the same bar, plead for justice and then begged for toleration. I could easily turn to the discussions of 1893 in this Chamber, take the speeches of gold-standard advocates, substitute gold for silver and silver for gold, wherever these terms occur, and demonstrate that because it is the cheaper metal gold to-day is discredited, dishonored, and demonetized; that it is without stability and altogether unsound; that the world of commerce has penalized and rejected it; that it is a commodity unworthy of the monetary function; that it is the creature of the market and exposed to every fluctuation of the law of supply and demand; that it can not measure values because it has no unchanging value of its own; that its coinage represents dishonest or short-legged dollars; and that no Nation jealous of its good name and the honor of its people should now use it as money of ultimate redemption.

But I could not do this fairly without also reversing my own attitude and abandoning all my convictions regarding the subject. Hence nothing could be gained by such a course beyond illustrating the absurdity to which the whirligig of time has reduced the logic of able, conscientious, and honest men. I content myself, therefore, with the reflection that events have confirmed the wisdom of bimetallism, justified the arguments of its defenders, confounded the contentions of gold-standard permanency, and demonstrated the great truth that the material composing money of redemption, whatever it may be, must yield to the inexorable pressure of demand and supply, and rest its fixity of values upon the fiat of human laws and customs. If any illustration were needed to emphasize this fundamental truth, it can be found in the career of the American silver dollar which has through all the years passed current at 100 cents, while silver in the market has fluctuated from 46 cents to 134 cents the ounce. Bold, indeed, is the man who will to-day contend that the leading commercial nations may not agree upon and enforce a fixed ratio of exchange between the metals and thereby steady the markets of the world, increase the volume of standard money, quicken the currents of trade, and establish the world's commerce upon a permanent and enduring money basis.

It may not be amiss to remind the Senate that the demonetization of silver followed the Franco-Prussian treaty of 1871, which imposed upon France the enormous indemnity of five thousand millions of francs. To make the burden unbearable Germany promptly adopted the gold standard and demanded her pound of flesh in money of the realm. Until then the Latin Union had successfully maintained the double standard of 15½ to 1 against the British single-standard system.

The United States, by a piece of ill-considered legislation, followed the German lead in 1873, albeit the silver dollar was at the time worth 102 cents in gold. Except those of India, all mints were thereupon closed to the free coinage of silver. In 1878 the Bland bill was enacted, whereunder a forced monthly coinage of 2,000,000 silver dollars was required. In 1890 the Sherman law was enacted, whereunder the Government was required to purchase 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion and to coin 2,000,000 silver dollars per month until July 1, 1891. Both these laws were compromises; neither contained the principle of free coinage. They were grudgingly complied with by administrations hostile to bimetallism, and did much to confirm a public opinion unfavorable to the remonetization of the white metal by confounding free coinage with compulsory governmental purchases of silver bullion. They made the Government a competitive bidder for silver in the markets, thus forcing prices downward, and thereby increasing the gap between its commodity value and its coinage value. This condition thus deliberately created was then utilized as a potent and conclusive argument against the demand for free coinage. It was also reflected in a falling exchange with silver-using countries, which, acting as a bounty upon their exports, stimulated their manufacturing interests, to the corresponding detriment of our own.

In 1893 the British Government closed the Indian mints to the further coinage of silver. This precipitated a financial panic of world-wide dimensions. Its disturbing effects were intensified and prolonged in the United States by the repeal of the purchasing clauses of the Sherman Act in November of that year, and made the free-coinage issue of 1896 inevitable. Immediately following the defeat of Mr. Bryan in that campaign Senator Wolcott, conformably with the pledge of the Republican platform of that year, introduced a resolution in the Senate providing in substance that whenever after March 4, 1897, the President should determine that the United States should be represented at any international conference called by the United States or any other country with a view to securing by international agreement a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money by means of a common ratio between these metals, with free mintage at such ratio, he was authorized to appoint five or more commissioners to such international conference, and the President was further authorized to call such conference, in his discretion, in the name of the Government of the United States, to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon. This resolution, although unpalatable to the advocates of national bimetallism, ultimately received their reluctant support. It was vigorously championed by such men as Senators Hoar, LODGE, Chandler, and Allison, and was finally passed shortly after Mr. McKinley's accession to the Presidency.

Senator Wolcott was appointed as the head of the commission thus created. He at once proceeded to Paris, where he was most cordially received. He speedily obtained assurances of the cooperation of the French Government in securing the desired international understanding, and the French ambassador to the Court of St. James was instructed to so inform the British Government, then represented by Lord Salisbury.

That Government was also cordial and seemingly responsive. In an evil moment, however, it was decided to submit the proposal to the Indian Government and await its answer before reaching a final decision. This step was unusual, if not extraordinary, but it was taken. The Indian Government rejected the plan in toto. Among the reasons assigned for this action was the statement that "if the ratio adopted were 15½ to 1, it would be a rise from about 16 pence to about 23 pence the rupee. Such a rise is enough to kill our export trade."

That trade depending for its vigor upon a depreciated rupee, or its equivalent, a low exchange, was preferable to a stable rupee sustained by an Anglo-French-American alliance. The British Government, unwilling to act counter to the view of the government of its great dependency, declined to proceed with the negotiations, and the greatest opportunity ever offered to the world to again stabilize its monetary systems passed away.

In reporting his failure to the Senate Mr. Wolcott said: "In the summer of 1897 there was not a member of the English ministry who did not believe our labors would result in an international agreement. The answer of Sir James Westland was as much a surprise to them as to us, but, following the traditions of the India office, they declined to interrupt the policy which the governor general in council recommended. Mr. President, the experiment now about to be tried by the Government of India will not only in the opinion of the bimetallists of the world, but of nine-tenths of the gold monometallists of London, result in utter and abject failure. It will be impossible to impose upon the people of India this gold standard."

Mr. Meline, the French prime minister, commenting upon the debacle to the Chamber of Deputies, said: "We did not demand of Great Britain the free coinage of silver, which does not seem to be indispensable, but we asked for a concert of measures calculated to establish the fixed relation, and thus to terminate the monetary anarchy which now reigns in the world and which convulses international trade. I do not hesitate to say that we have failed. I do not, however, regret the step; it was a wise step and its results will show hereafter. For I am convinced that the day is near when the force of circumstances will compel the nations of Europe to face the problem and solve it. I hope that until that day dawns humanity will not have suffered from the vacillations which continually postpone the decision of so important a question."

Certain British statesmen, particularly Mr. Balfour, were quite as emphatic in their expressions of chagrin over the collapse of the Wolcott mission.

Indeed, Mr. Balfour was indirectly responsible for the resolution whose passage authorized the commission. Senator Hoar, himself an ardent international bimetallist, visited England in the summer of 1896. While there he was induced by Mr. Frewen to approach Mr. Balfour upon the subject, and received the assurance of that statesman that he would, if addressed in writing by Senator Hoar, respond favorably to the suggestion that Great Britain contribute to the desired object by reopening the Indian mints to silver coinage. In his very interesting reminiscences, Senator Hoar informs the world of his ready compliance with the suggestion, and of Mr. Balfour's failure to respond as agreed because of the suddenly developed opposition of a single member of the British Cabinet; an incident which served to wreck in its beginning a proposal to which Senator Hoar had secured the moral support of the French ministers of finance.

Although the plan miscarried, Senator Hoar was so encouraged by the prospect that he cabled his colleague, Senator LODGE, then in attendance upon the Republican national convention at St. Louis, suggesting the desirability of a platform declaration favoring international bimetallism, a suggestion which was duly heeded and which assumed this form: "We are opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote."

It will also be recalled that three years earlier Congress had repealed the compulsory purchase clause of the Sherman Act, but that the repealing law carried a proviso still upon our statute books, pledging the Nation to international bimetallism, and to efforts for its establishment. The Wolcott resolution, therefore, had tradition, law, and party pledge behind it, plus the active encouragement of France and the tacit approval of Great Britain. The Senator's defeat was under the circumstances as unexpected as it was unfortunate. He did not hesitate upon his return to publicly accuse the then Treasury officials of the United States of secretly but effectually utilizing their powers and their positions against the success of his mission.

The gold standard for India to which Senator Wolcott alluded in his report, and then contemplated by the British Government, was made operative in 1899. Every prediction of its miscarriage has been verified by the experiences of the past 21 years. The story of its ghastly failure is the story of India, social, industrial, and political. It is too long for rehearsal here, and I shall content myself with appending at the close of my remarks an article upon the subject from the facile pen of Mr. Moreton Frewen, easily the foremost living British authority upon financial economics, and one of the most brilliant of living British publicists.

Mr. President, at this juncture I ask leave to insert as an appendix to my remarks the article of Mr. Frewen, to which I have just referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. It is pertinent, however, to say that this crass attempt to transform the financial system of an ancient and multitudinous people has taught them to hoard gold as for centuries they have hoarded silver. India has for ages been a vast reservoir for this metal. It is known as the "sink of silver." But the denial of that metal to the right of coinage and the substitution of gold for it as money has converted India into a "sink of gold." Two hundred and seventy-three millions of sovereigns, equivalent to one billion three hundred and sixty-five million American dollars, have passed from the British Isles to India in response to the gold-standard demands of that community since 1899, and have disappeared as completely from the world as though cast into the center of the sea. And the gluttonous appetite for the yellow metal is insatiable. Such a drain would have severely taxed England's gold resources had the World War never occurred. But weighted with the awful burden of the obligations which that war has imposed upon her, she can not longer endure it. Sir James Meston, Indian finance minister, also complains of the disappearance as well during this period of 1,200,000,000 silver rupees, "jostled," to quote from Frewen, "into the myriad hordes of India by masses of shinplaster notes redeemable in gold." It is not extreme to assert that England's colossal gold contribution to India's gold-standard demands, which would have been wholly unnecessary had the Wolcott proposal been accepted, would have tided her over many a dangerous financial shoal between 1914 and 1918. Nor would she have encountered the Indian crisis of April, 1918, from whose perils she was rescued by the powerful aid of the United States, an aid which even this mighty Nation could not have given but for the reservoirs of silver which she had garnered under the operation of the Bland and Sherman laws. The story of that crisis is a brief one, but it held within its arms the fate of Christendom. It is told in a letter to me from Mr. Albert Strauss, of the Federal Reserve Board, bearing date June 12, 1919, which I read:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
WASHINGTON, June 12, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Complying with the request contained in your letter of the 12th, I give you below a brief statement of the circumstances surrounding the passage of the act of April 26, 1918, providing for the melting of silver dollars.

When, in September, 1917, the embargo was placed on the export of gold it naturally became difficult for the United States to pay for commodities in various countries which then had large trade balances in their favor. Among other countries so placed were China and India, and from India in particular the Government departments were importing commodities essential to the prosecution of the war, such as jute and burlap, and also shellac. Inasmuch as there is always a demand for silver in the oriental countries, it became clear that the situation in respect of India and China could be much relieved if silver, in addition to the current output, could be secured for shipment to those countries. It was accordingly suggested that the silver dollars held in the Treasury against outstanding silver certificates might be made available through the retirement of the silver certificates and the melt and shipment of the corresponding silver dollars. It was obviously inadvisable to complicate a plan to meet a war necessity by connecting it with the question of any permanent change in our currency, and it was therefore suggested that any such use of the silver dollars should be strictly temporary and be coupled with the condition that the silver be in due time replaced through purchases at a fixed price and, when repurchased, should be recoined into silver dollars. It was evident that some provision must concurrently be made to prevent contraction by supplying a substitute for the silver certificates thus retired, most of which were outstanding in small denominations. The subject was accordingly taken up for discussion with the Senators and Representatives from the States most largely interested in the mining of silver, and the plan finally embodied in the act of April 26, 1918, received the assent of all these parties. A bill embodying these provisions was introduced by Senator PITTMAN.

While matters were in this position the British ambassador brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury an acute situation which had developed in India and which made it imperative for the successful conduct of the war that the British Government be able to at once secure for the Indian Government a large amount of silver. The situation thus described was the steady presentation for redemption of rupee currency in India, which threatened to bring about a situation where the convertibility of rupee currency into metal might have to be suspended. The consequence of the suspension of convertibility of rupee currency were represented by the British ambassador as very threatening, involving the prestige of the British Government in India, Egypt, and all Mohammedan lands. It was also pointed out that German agents were active in India, attempting to undermine the authority of the British Government, and that the suspension of convertibility might have important adverse effects on the Mesopotamia expedition, on recruiting in India, and on the stability of British rule in the Orient. It was pointed out that the Indian Government maintains some 300 redemption agencies in India, and in order that each of these agencies might be supplied with sufficient metallic reserve to permit prompt redemptions a comparatively large total reserve was required. In December, 1917, the metallic reserve had been about 45 per cent. In April, 1918, it had sunk to 34 per cent, and before the tide was turned with our assistance it actually fell as low as 31 per cent. In fact, so low did the reserve fall at some redemption agencies that the Indian Government felt suspension to be a matter of a few days only, and in the effort to avert it was compelled to pay out gold in the redemption of rupee notes, a measure which it was very reluctant to take, fearing that the paying out of gold might lead to the reestablishment of the appetite for gold in place of silver. During this period some 60,000,000 rupees (say, $20,000,000) of gold was actually paid out in the redemption of rupee notes.

The Secretary of the Treasury at once submitted to the proper committees of Congress the representations thus made by the British ambassador, and the act of April 26, 1918, was passed by Congress without delay.

Under this act a sale of 200,000,000 ounces of silver was made to the Indian Government, and this sale, the Secretary of the Treasury has been assured, was the means of averting the suspension of convertibility of rupee notes and thus saved what threatened to be a situation of real menace in the Orient at a critical point in the war.

The arrangement for the sale of silver to the British Government stipulated that rupee exchange for all purposes directly or indirectly connected with the war should be furnished to us by the British Government, and in this way the silver was made to serve our own requirements while at the same time relieving the serious situation set forth above.

Trusting that this letter gives you the information you desire, I remain,

Very sincerely, yours, ALBERT STRAUSS.

Mr. President, American and British financiers vied with each other from 1878 to 1893 in denouncing and ridiculing compulsory Government purchases of silver bullion under the Bland and Sherman Acts, neither of which were proposed or desired by bimetallists. The closure of the Indian mints was openly charged at the time to have been due to our accumulations. It may have been a policy of unwisdom, as it certainly was destructive of national bimetallism; yet it may be solemnly affirmed that but for these laws and their continued operation for 16 years the financial structure of the British Empire would have collapsed in the somber spring of 1918, the whole burden of the allied war expense would have fallen upon the shoulders of America, and Germany's chances for immediate and overwhelming military success increased a hundredfold. In the language of Senator OWEN, "the world faced a crisis of the first magnitude." America responded to the call of her great ally. Our silver was mobilized to meet the demands of India; the bullion gathered under the requirements of the Bland and Sherman laws defeated Germany and saved the world. Surely Britain will now welcome another Wolcott commission armed with similar authority, committed to the same purpose, and strengthened by the same support France then so generously extended.

If it be true, as many have heretofore charged, that England's constant refusal to join past efforts for the establishment of an international parity between the metals was due to her ability to bear the bullion market, buy cheap silver, and coin it into rupees at a huge coinage profit, the ground for such refusal no longer exists. It has been swept aside by the inexorable tide of events. As matters now stand, she can not coin silver rupees except at a loss. We can not coin silver dollars except at a loss, and that will be true as well of our fractional currency if silver advances much further in value. Under such conditions coinage not only ceases but the coins disappear. They go to the melting pot as rapidly as they can be secured.

A famine in rupees and in fractional currency the world over is just before us unless the ratio be adjusted by international agreement. Thus only can the bullion and the coinage values be kept the same. We have failed to do it heretofore because silver was too cheap. Shall we fail now because it is too dear? If so, we may be sure that it will rise so high as to compel a readjustment at a higher ratio if we are to use silver as money at all. Mexico has just embargoed her silver bullion. Other nations will inevitably hoard it while the world needs it in the currents of its exchanges more sorely than ever before.

In 1888 the British royal commission on gold and silver reached the unanimous conclusion that "undoubtedly the date which forms the dividing line between an area of approximate fixity in the relative value of gold and silver and one of marked instability is the year when the bimetallic system which had previously been in force in the Latin Union ceased to be in full operation. And we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that the operation of that system, established as it was in countries the population and commerce of which were considerable, exerted a material influence upon the relative value of the two metals. So long as the system was in force, we think that, notwithstanding the changes in the production and use of the precious metals, it kept the market price of silver approximately steady at the ratio fixed by law between them, namely, 15½ to 1."

This was the deliberate judgment of Britain's greatest financiers and statesmen, composing that famous commission, pronounced upon a long and exhaustive investigation of the subject. It never was and never can be gainsaid. And her Parliament would have acted upon it but for the pressure of the financial powers of the realm, fearful of change and controlling the exchanges of the world.

We have then the experiences of the period when the French ratio steadied the values between gold and silver, notwithstanding fluctuations in their proportionate production, and the official declaration of a British commission that instability of values synchronized with the period when the system of the Latin Union "ceased to be in full operation." Is it rash to assert that with a ratio fixed and supported by the United States, Great Britain, and France this stability will not only return but "be and abide with us forever"?

The gold-standard experiment with India can not continue. It would suck England dry of her remaining gold. Her effort to supply the special needs of India and draw upon the reservoirs of other lands to fill her own would not fail only but initiate a panic through falling prices of world-wide dimensions. Gold would be hoarded as never before. But India must have her standard; and if not gold, she must return to her ancient one. That, too, will impose a task of immeasurable difficulty, unless a ratio be established with gold by international understanding. For silver is no longer plentiful. Its production discloses constantly decreasing quantities. No abundant stores of silver remain unmined. The prospector stimulated by the rise in values may discover other deposits, but until then we must reckon only with what we have and what we may reasonably anticipate from the level of present production. The table here inserted gives the yield in gold and silver in the United States and in the world for the years 1913 to 1917, inclusive:

	United States.		The world.
	Gold.	Silver.	Gold.	Silver.
1913	$88,884,400	$10,348,100	$459,939,900	$289,497,000
1914	94,531,800	40,067,700	439,078,260	207,678,038
1915	101,035,700	37,397,300	468,721,918	231,241,050
1916	92,590,300	48,953,000	454,176,500	208,391,628
1917	83,750,700	59,078,100	423,590,200	212,030,915

Mr. Frewen makes the following forecast of the probable world's annual demand for silver for the years 1920–1950, with silver at $1.30 the ounce:

	Ounces.
New silver to liquidate India's annual balance of trade $350,000,000, or 2 rupees per capita	250,000,000
New silver for the currency requirements of the Nigerias, Wst Africa, German and British East Africa	100,000,000
World's silversmiths' demand on the prewar scale	120,000,000
For subsidiary currencies European and American	70,000,000
For China, Hongkong, Malaysia, the Philippines	50,000,000
For reimbursing the Federal Treasury under the Pittman Act for, say, eight years	30,000,000
Total demand	620,000,000
Present annual output	157,000,000
Deficit	463,000,000

It will be observed that this estimate takes no note of the probable increasing demand for silver in the arts and industries, a circumstance likely to add very materially to it. Nor is that for China, in my opinion, sufficiently large. I am unable to make any estimate of China's silver supply. I know it is inadequate to her growing needs, for she is constantly reaching out for it. I may say in passing, Mr. President, that we are, and for some time have been, under the Pittman Act melting silver dollars and exporting the bullion to China.

The British minister has recently urged China to establish a uniform dollar currency and the discontinuance of the use of "sycee" silver in her trade, which suggestion she evidently regards with favor if the following cable to the New York Times on December 25 last is authentic:

CHINA TO ESTABLISH A UNIFORM DOLLAR—DEPRECIATION OF ITS SUBSIDIARY COINAGE AND OTHER EVILS ARE TO BE REMEDIED—SYCEE SILVER TO BE ENDED—CENTRAL GOVERNMENT MINT TO BE OPENED FOR THE COINAGE OF DOLLARS AT SHANGHAI.

Discontinuance of the use of sycee silver (pure uncoined bullion used as currency), the establishment of a uniform dollar currency, with subsidiary silver and copper coins, the opening of a mint at Shanghai for the free coinage of dollars, and the placing of other mints under efficient control in order to secure uniformity of standards are recommended in a note presented by the British minister to the Chinese Government. The note refers to the disadvantages resulting from depreciation of the subsidiary coinage and the discredited status of Chinese bank notes.

It is understood that the Chinese Government is sympathetic to the proposal and considers the moment favorable for replacing the sycee by a uniform dollar, and that a scheme will be announced early in the New Year under which a central Government mint, with the necessary foreign assistance, will be established at Shanghai for the free coinage of silver.

There is a double significance to this cablegram. China will establish a uniform dollar currency, which must be silver, since, like India, she can operate under no other standard, and she will do this by the recommendation of the British Government, an act which prior to the war and after 1893 would have been unthinkable. This, I think, clearly reveals the trend of British purpose in the Orient, and with China coining her own dollars under a new and modern currency system, England having urged it, will lend a willing ear to America's renewed suggestion of an international ratio. There can be no greater stimulus to increased production than a steady and universal market operating under the same rate of exchange the world over, and without increased production the demands of commerce will inevitably invade the world's already insufficient supplies, to the disturbance of values and the destruction of markets.

I have referred to the economic aspects of a low exchange. That it stimulates exports from countries burdened with the cheaper money and repels imports to them is well known. The textile manufactories of Mexico, India, and Japan, the textile and metal manufactories of China, testify to the fact. These were the outgrowth of a falling silver exchange from 1873 to the beginning of the war. In 1908 Senator Teller thus stated the proposition:

> When formerly China sold us her products for our gold money $5 gold or 1 sovereign used to return her 3 taels, and 3 taels formerly paid a day's wages to 21 Chinese mill hands; while to-day 5 gold dollars return to China not 3 but 8 taels, and 8 taels pays a day's wage to 60 Chinese mill hands.

Hence the inevitable tendency to a vigorous export trade from low-exchange countries accompanied by increasing manufacture of goods formerly imported. The same conditions will confront America in Europe once the recently warring countries are settled and industry resumes its normal stride.

That sentence, Mr. President, was penned prior to the remarkable and disastrous fall in exchange which has punctuated the course of commercial affairs during the last 10 days; and the conditions now confronting us because of that change are the most sinister conditions which the world has confronted since the days of the armistice.

The problem of ratios has therefore broadened. It no longer concerns our relations with the Orient and South America. Great Britain faces a probable further decline in the exchange value of her pound sterling. But it brings her no compensation, for she is the world's great importer. She depends on other lands for the bulk of her raw material. These she must secure under adverse exchanges; a handicap which not even England can carry as an added burden. Foreign exchange has indeed become the sinister international problem within the past six months. It must be adjusted in some fashion soon or commercial chaos will overwhelm international trade. What better beginning can be made than a renewal of the commission of 1897? The seat of the difficulty in Europe is not inherently different from that in Asia. Each is largely due to the abnormal volume of paper currency as compared with the virtually stationary volume of specie.

A recent authority declares that at the commencement of the war the paper currency of 30 principal countries of the world aggregated a little over $7,000,000,000. At the end of the war, in November, 1918, it was about $40,000,000,000, and in December, 1919, $51,000,000,000, exclusive of Russia.

In 1914 the gold reserves of these 30 countries aggregated a little less than $5,000,000,000, in 1917 a little over $7,000,000,000, and in 1919 not quite so much. The ratio of gold reserve to outstanding notes in these countries was, in 1914, 70 per cent; in 1917, 18.4 per cent; in December, 1919, 13.7 per cent.

On the 6th day of this month I received from the statistician of the Federal Reserve Board in answer to an inquiry a statement showing the amounts of currency in circulation in the allied countries and Germany prior to the war and those existing upon the first of the year. I ask leave to insert them at this point in my remarks without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
Washington, February 6, 1920.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In compliance with your recent request for information regarding the amount of money in circulation in the principal European countries, I have the honor to hand you inclosed herewith statement showing the information desired for Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy.

The figures given relate either to the close of 1913 or the middle of 1914 and to the most recent available date; that is to say, the end of 1919 or the beginning of 1920.

Respectfully, M. JACOBSON, Statistician.

GREAT BRITAIN.

On July 29, 1914, there were in circulation $184,566,000 of Bank of England notes, as against $444,555,000 on December 31, 1919. On the latter date there were in addition outstanding $1,742,947,000 of currency notes, issued by the treasury, secured by $138,695,000 of gold held by the exchequer (£8,500,000). Gold holdings of the Bank of England on July 29, 1914, were $185,567,000, compared with $444,516,597 (£91,342,155) held at the end of 1919.

Against the total amount of bank notes issued by the end of 1919, viz, $529,223,000 (£108,748,260), the issue department of the Bank of England held $439,436,000 (£90,298,260) in gold, so that the fiduciary note issue was only $89,787,000 (£18,450,000). The same amount of fiduciary note issues was reported on July 29, 1914. There are no reliable data as to the metallic circulation of Great Britain. The Cunliffe committee report (see p. 1182 of December, 1918, Federal Reserve Bulletin) estimated the gold held by the banks (outside of the Bank of England) and in public circulation on June 30, 1914, at $598,580,000 (£123,000,000), and on July 10, 1918, at $194,660,000 (£40,000,000).

According to the United States Director of the Mint, the monetary stock of Great Britain at the close of 1918 was made up as follows (Annual Report Director of the Mint, 1919, p. 282):

Metal stock unclassified	$3,003,000
Gold stock in banks and public treasuries	595,462,000
Paper circulation	2,188,134,000

At the end of 1913 (Annual Report Director of the Mint, 1915, p. 63):

Gold stock in banks and public treasuries	$494,300,000
Gold stock in circulation	335,800,000
Silver stock, limited tender	126,500,000
Uncovered paper	116,500,000

In addition there were outstanding during the month ending October 4, 1919, about $270,062,000 (£55,494,000) of notes of the Scotch and Irish banks, secured by $244,478,000 (£50,237,000) of gold and silver, as against a circulation of about $80,565,000 (£16,555,000) secured by $56,651,000 (£11,641,000) during the month ending August 14, 1914.

FRANCE.

On July 30, 1914, the Bank of France held in its vaults $799,279,000 of gold and $120,689,000 of silver. Its note circulation on that date was $1,289,885,000.

On January 2 of the present year the bank held in vault:

Gold	$694,930,000

while its note circulation had increased to $7,268,485,000.

The United States Director of the Mint estimates that about the end of 1913 France had a total stock of gold of about $1,200,000,000, of which $682,800,000 was held in the banks and public treasuries and $517,200,000 was in circulation. The country's stock of silver was estimated at $347,400,000 full tender coins and $63,700,000 limited tender coins, while the uncovered paper circulation of the country is given by the director as $325,800,000, presumably of Bank of France notes. As at the close of 1918 the same authoritative source gives $664,017,000 of gold held in banks and public treasuries; no gold in circulation; a silver stock of $61,432,000; and a total paper circulation of $5,838,173,000.

GERMANY.

On December 31, 1913, the Reichsbank held in its vaults $278,453,000 of gold, and $65,886,000 of silver. Its note circulation was $617,240,000.

There was also the "imperial war chest," which on December 31, 1913, contained 120,000,000 marks, $28,584,000 in gold, and which, at the outbreak of the war, was promptly delivered to the Reichsbank for the credit of the Empire.

On September 30, 1919, the bank held in vault:

Gold	$261,203,000

while its note circulation had increased to $7,094,573,000.

The four other banks of issue, the Bank of Bavaria, the Bank of Saxony, the Bank of Wurttemberg, and the Bank of Baden, held on December 31, 1913, metallic reserves to the amount of $35,674,000, and had a note circulation of $37,930,000. On September 30, 1919, these banks held in vault metallic reserve to the amount of $19,407,000, while their note circulation had increased to $62,685,000.

In addition to the note circulation of the Reichsbank and the four other banks of issue there was also in circulation on September 30, 1919, notes of the war-loan banks to the amount of $2,842,941,000, and treasury notes to the amount of $83,370,000. The condition of the metallic reserves and the note circulation in Germany on September 30, 1919, may be represented by the following table:

Reichsbank:
Gold	$261,203,000
Silver	4,600,000
Metallic reserves	265,803,000
Other banks of issue, metallic reserve	19,407,000
Total metallic reserve	285,210,000
Reichsbank, note circulation	7,094,573,000
Other banks of issue, note circulation	62,685,000
Notes of the war-loan banks	2,842,941,000
Treasury notes	83,370,000
Total circulation	10,083,569,000

ITALY.

On December 31, 1913, the Bank of Italy held in its vaults $213,844,000 (1,108,000,000 lire) of gold, and $18,335,000 of silver. Besides the gold held by the Bank of Italy the other two banks of issue, the Bank of Naples and the Bank of Sicily, held on the same date, $51,531,000, and the Government held $22,581,000, making a total of $287,956,000 in gold.

On the same date the Bank of Italy had a note circulation of $340,536,000, the Banks of Naples and of Sicily together had $100,182,000, making a total for the three banks of issue of $440,718,000. The State also had a note circulation of $96,321,000, making a grand total of $537,039,000.

On September 30, 1919, the Bank of Italy held $155,365,000 in gold; the Banks of Naples and of Sicily together held $44,757,000, making a total for the three banks of issue of $200,122,000. The Government held $31,478,000, making the total gold as of that date $231,600,000.

On September 30, 1919, the note circulation of the Bank of Italy was $2,129,832,000, of the Banks of Naples and of Sicily, $569,254,000, making for the three banks of issue a total of $2,699,086,000. The note circulation of the State was $457,661,000, making a total circulation altogether of $3,156,747,000.

Mr. THOMAS. These figures disclose that the volume of paper currency had increased over 500 per cent from 1914 to 1918, and nearly 200 per cent between November, 1918, and January, 1920. Taken as a group, the Allies began the war with $3,763,000,000 of gold and $4,900,000,000 of paper. At its termination they had $5,217,000,000 of gold and $25,000,000,000 of paper. At present they have $5,071,000,000 of gold and $29,600,000,000 of paper. The ratio of gold to notes was, at the beginning of the war, 76.6 per cent; at the armistice, 20.9 per cent; and at present, 17.1 per cent; the significance of the last figure being that notwithstanding the war virtually closed more than 14 months ago, the tendency to an increase of paper circulation has not been in any degree checked, but is finding expression in constantly renewed issues, which not only add to the enormity of this problem but make the necessity of broadening the metallic basis of the world's currency the more necessary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator is overlooking the fact that steps have been taken in Great Britain and in France to make a considerable reduction in their paper currency. One hundred millions are to be reduced from the circulation of Great Britain, and France is now issuing bonds for the purpose of reducing her bank currency.

Mr. THOMAS. I am aware of that; but the reduction of one hundred millions in the one country and the substitution of a bond issue for currency in the other will only serve, I think, to reveal the acuteness of the problem and the difficulty of meeting it in that way. Of course, fundamentally, currency deflation upon a large scale must necessarily affect exchanges, and affect them favorably, but deflation is always attended by conditions which in some instances are more sinister, more oppressive, and provoke more discontent and resentment toward governmental, social, and economic conditions than inflation, and the difficulty of the problem lies in carrying out a system of deflation without producing those terrible consequences which inevitably attend it when it progresses too rapidly. My belief is that the establishment by international arrangement of a fixity of ratio between gold and silver whereby fifteen or sixteen billions of silver, constituting the world's stock, can be placed under these issues with gold as a metallic basis will not only promote and largely effectuate the course of deflation, but will at the same time arrest the tendency to falling exchange and save the export trade of countries like the United States.

Many of these countries considered separately would present a still more unsatisfactory situation. More than enough is revealed in the figures quoted to indicate the impossibiliy of the redemption of these vast volumes of paper money with the gold upon which they are supposed to rest. Deflation is essential and must come sooner or later. But deflation has its train of miseries quite as oppressive and as terrible as these now besetting a harried world, and while they can not be avoided, they may be greatly mitigated by broadening the base on which all monetary systems ultimately rest.

Yesterday, Mr. President, Mr. Moreton Frewen was good enough to send me a letter, not addressed to me, however, written to him by a member of the Australian Parliament, Mr. Edmund Jowett. I understand Mr. Jowett to be one of the largest live-stock raisers of the world. Perhaps, to paraphrase one of the famous expressions of the Senate, he is, in Australia at least, considered the greatest shepherd since Abraham. This gentleman says:

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

AUSTRALIA HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MY DEAR SIR: I write to you specially just now to send to you the latest authoritative information regarding the currency in Australia and to ask you to give me any information that you may have easily accessible regarding the currency increases of other countries of the world.

I beg to quote for you an extract from pages 19 and 20 of the budget speech of our acting treasurer, Mr. Alexander Poynton. This shows that the Australian Commonwealth note issue (the sole note issue permitted in Australia) has increased from £9,854,923 before the war (Aug. 3, 1914) to £54,582,090 on August 11, 1919. The increase is £44,727,167, or nearly fivefold.

Curiously enough our treasurer deprecates the view that the increase in the Australian note issue is responsible for the high prices prevailing for commodities. But does he recognize that if many other important countries in the world have also increased their bank-note issues fivefold the probable result would be a great increase of prices of commodities all over the world?

I would like, if possible, to obtain equally authoritative figures for the rest of the world.

I notice that the price of silver has so seriously advanced that it has not only reached the old American 16 to 1 and the old Latin Union 15½ to 1 ratios, but that it has actually exceeded them.

If I remember rightly (see Jevons on Money, p. 137), when standard silver sells at 60¾ per ounce it is at the equilibrium of 15½ ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold.

This point occurs to me: Is not the present a most favorable opportunity for the introduction, or rather the restoration, of international bimetallism at 15½ to 1 or if preferred by America at 16 to 1?

If so, it would mean that the leading mints of the world should be opened to the unrestricted coinage of silver and gold at 15½ to 1, the resultant coins, both silver and gold, to be unlimited legal tender.

This would be not the slightest hardship to anyone at present, because the paper currencies of the world seem to be so depreciated that apparently few people want to have their gold or silver coined.

But the moment the world begins to return to specie payments then the benefit of international bimetallism (i. e., unrestricted coinage at the mints of the world of both silver and gold at 15½ to 1) would be felt.

Such unrestricted coinage would help enormously to stabilize the currency and also tend to stabilize prices. Sooner or later the world will probably come back to specie payments and then the trouble—in the shape of an appalling fall in prices—will probably commence unless we first establish international bimetallism.

Representing as I do a large agrarian constituency in the Federal Parliament of Australia, I am very deeply concerned about the future value of agricultural and grazing products throughout the world.

I should therefore be exceedingly interested to hear your views upon the whole question. Also to be placed in communication with others holding similar views to mine with a view to concerted action being promptly taken.

I remain, yours, sincerely, EDMUND JOWETT.

Relatively speaking, America has an abundance of gold. It is needed elsewhere far more than here, yet we shrink from the thought of parting with it. It is still the fetish it ever was and ever will be so long as it is the sole arbiter of value. The tendency to cling to it can be defended neither by reason nor interest, but it is there, and its delusion, like other forms of fear, yields but to force. We may, doubtless we must, lend our credit to those whose trade we need. We may accept their securities and extend the maturity of their obligations. We may invest in their industrial activities, we may otherwise extend timely and continued assistance, but we can not, save by mutual agreement for the fixity of exchanges whereby both gold and silver, the money of all the nations, may possess a permanent relative value each with the other, remove the gambling element from international trade, stimulate international confidence in modern currency systems, make the progress of deflation comparatively easy, and reestablish the régime of a saner and more dependable monetary medium.

APPENDIX.

INDIAN GOLD STANDARD—SIR JAMES MESTON AND "THE ROMANCE" OF INDIAN FINANCE.

Sir, the story of "India Under the Gold Standard" does, indeed, merit the word "Romance," which India's finance minister (Sir James Meston) applies to the appalling series of experiments persevered in for the last 21 years and which have drained off to those hoards the gold reserves which would otherwise be in our banks operating our exchanges and which are the very lifeblood in the city arteries.

What now remains of the utterly crazy scheme which Sir James Meston advanced so rapturously in his budget speech of April, 1910, and which was to so "saturate" India with our gold, not a sovereign of which we could spare? This precious scheme to give India a gold currency has now so utterly collapsed that the Indian Government has in the last 10 years been forced to issue inconceivable masses of paper, its convertibility on demand into silver rupees having been solemnly pledged by that Government. It has now come to this pass: That as fast as the Government of India forces an 18-penny note into circulation any holder of that note, who naturally believes these notes will eventually go to protest, transposes it for a metal rupee and leaves the note in the currency until the next holder of the note catches at yet another rupee. And so, as Sir James Meston tells us in his budget speech last month, "twelve hundred million silver rupees" have been abstracted from the currency in four years, "and we may be forced to reconsider the whole basis of our currency and exchange policy."

Just a foreword as to this "currency and exchange policy" inaugurated in 1893 and now in its death throes after this "romantic" fashion and which from first to last, in the immortal phrase of Sir James Meston's predecessor, Sir Guy Wilson, has been "a gambling in rain," and whenever the rains fail, then a colossal gamble in human lives. With whom did this very romantic gamble originate? To tell the story shortly, it originated in a proposal addressed by the Indian Government to the home government in 1879 to drop her silver standard and to adopt England's gold standard. This revolutionary suggestion the home government submitted to a very distinguished commission, consisting of Mr. A. J. Balfour, Sir Louis Mallet, Mr. Edward Stanhope, Sir T. Seccombe, Sir Thomas Farrer, Sir R. Welby, and Sir Robert Giffen. The report of this commission was unanimously adverse, and when forwarding the report (Nov. 24, 1879) to the Government of India the lords of the treasury included this remarkable reflection on the moral nature of the proposal made:

"It appears, too, that the Government of India, in making the present proposal, lay themselves open to the same criticisms as are made upon Governments which have depreciated their currencies. * * * The Government scheme may relieve the Indian Government and others who desire to remit money to England, but this relief will be given at the expense of the Indian taxpayer, and with the effect of increasing every debt due by ryots to money lenders."

Now, observe that this objection is a moral objection, not merely an economic objection. It holds good not for 1879 but for all time. Next the general feeling in the bazaars of alarm and insecurity generated by the appointment of the 1879 commission having been very real, the Government of India, after receiving its report, thought it better to instruct Mr. Barclay Chapman, their financial secretary, to announce that the Indian mints should never thereafter be closed to the free coinage of rupees. This binding pledge was violated in 1893, with the result that every native who, relying on the pledge, had melted down his savings, found these savings enormously depreciated—indeed, largely confiscated.

Thirteen years later the Government of India again asked permission to change its silver standard. This time a committee was appointed, which (v. 155, 156, 157) reported that it did not feel justified in advising the home Government to "override the proposals for the closing of the mints" which the Government of India had again advanced, but the commissioners add "nothing should be done prematurely or without full deliberation." This report is dated at the India office, May 31, 1893, and 26 days later, such was the period allowed for mature reflection and "full deliberation," the Indian mints were closed fast—a closure followed by a panic which ran round the universe, and which next forced upon an American Congress, the majority in which had just been elected pledged to the free coinage of silver, the repeal of the Bland-Sherman Act.

It is important to show the effect of this tampering with the Indian currency, on the proportions in which the "drain" of the two precious metals to defray trade balances reached that country:

Period.	Per cent of gold.	Per cent of silver.
1886–1890	24.18	75.82
1891–1895	1.54	98.46
1896–1900	47.44	52.56
1901–1905	66.01	33.99
1906–1910	61.22	38.78
1911	73.58	26.42
1912	87.70	12.30

Just contrast England's attitude between 1910–1914, as revealed by that short table, with the attitude of Germany. While we here were driving £100,000,000 of gold pell mell into India's hoards, Germany was in the market cautiously buying gold at a premium as an essential prerequisite for "The Day." And yet, in full view of what Germany was doing and of this colossal hemorrhage of our gold to India's hoards, the Royal Commission of 1913 on the Indian currency reports (67):

"With the argument that India should be encouraged to absorb gold for the benefit of the world in general, we do not propose to deal. The extent to which India should use gold must, in our opinion, be decided solely in accordance with India's own needs and wishes."

Here is a "gold standard" avowedly and unblushingly forced upon India by a handful of white merchants connected with export trades and officials concerned to remit rupees with no reference to India's wishes, and the first effect which so "my lords" of the treasury declare must needs be "to add to the burden of every debt due by ryots to money lenders," the proportion of ryots to money lenders being about in the ratio of 100 to 1.

A truly terrible condition of industrial slavery in the Bombay cotton mills is put on record in a report by Mr. Mirams, surveyor general to the Government of Bombay, for Sir Thomas Holland's Industrial Commission, at this time sitting. The report deserves the closest scrutiny at this time of Indian unrest. Mr. Mirams estimates the income of the average family employed in the mills at Rs. 26 per month (or, at two workers per family, at Rs. 13 per worker). Of this amount Rs. 14 is spent on food, Rs. 6 on rent and "pan and biddis." Thus there remains a nominal surplus of Rs. 6 a month to "go shopping with." But wait a moment. "Eighty per cent of the employees are in debt," and the average debt per worker is Rs. 111—say, eight months' wages. The average rate of interest exacted by the Marwari is 1 anna per rupee per month, which rate of interest, collected in advance, is Rs. 7 per month, or 75 p. c. p. a. Such is the position of the cotton operative in that highly industrialized community.

And these shocking figures of usury in India are amply borne out by the evidence of the Government witnesses before the Chamberlain commission of 1913. When giving evidence before that commission, I declared that any such usury rates were utterly unknown in the days before the mints were closed in 1893, and that I had when in India in 1888 and 1889 looked carefully into this all-important problem of Indian usury, and had never come across a case which would stand examination where the rate of interest was higher than 2 per cent per month. But it is really a waste of time to argue a point so evident. It stands to reason that would-be borrowers who are able to convert their silver bullion at will into coined rupees by taking it to the nearest mint, that this open mint inevitably keeps within some bounds the voracity of shroffs and bunyas. Silver bullion in India before 1893 with the Indian mints open to free coinage was exactly the same "gilt-edged" security that gold bullion is here to-day—neither any better nor any worse. The closing of the mints has, by destroying this security, handed over the myriad-people East—"80 per cent" of them in debt for eight months' wages, the interest on the debt, 75 per cent—has handed them over to be fleeced by the most merciless usurers in the world!

And the remedy we are now assured for such an economic agony is—a democratic constitution!

If such is the exceeding bitter cry of urban India, driven to madness by usurers, what of its cultivator class? When this tampering with their currency was being urged by the Government of India in 1892 on the home Government, the great Industrial Association of Western India, with, it would seem, a premonition of the Mirams Report quarter of a century later, forwarded the following protest, which can be read in the evidence of the Herschell Commission:

"The heavy inherited immemorial burden of the ancestral debt of the Indian peasant cultivators is another and older feature concerning, as it does, over 90 per cent of the taxpaying population. Your memorialists observe that the large volume of the gold obligations of the Government is advanced to justify a departure from free trade in rupees. But they humbly suggest that the silver obligations of the peasantry are twenty-fold greater and more important than the gold obligations of the Government, so that while removing a minor evil a greater one will be substituted."

If we would realize to the full what the value of that security was, which, with a light heart, the Government annihilated when it closed its mints to the free coinage of silver in 1893, read the evidence of Mr. Mackenzie before the silver commission of 1876:

"In every large village there is a silversmith, and as soon as a man has got a few rupees he employs a silversmith to come to his house and make the ornaments. Although the peasantry of India have poor houses, yet the amount of ornaments they have would exceed in value the furniture and utensils of the same class of peasants in England."

Let every white Sahib of the I. C. S. ponder on that!

It is indeed high time; for every additional note issued adds fuel to the fire of the hoarder's anxiety to hoard, and a speech such as that of Sir James Meston last month is of itself enough to create a panic from the Khyber to Colombo. Could there be any reasonable doubt but that a man bent on hoarding a rupee would hoard the metallic rupee, which is forever 180 grains of silver, rather than hoard the promise to pay that 180 grains, of which promise Sir James warns every noteholder in his budget speech that only a year since "it seemed from week to week an utter impossibility that the Government of India could possibly escape from the suspension of specie payments." And this is the precious system for 30 crores of human beings, of which Sir James Meston's distinguished predecessor, Sir Clinton Dawkins, prophesied in 1899, when introducing the bill to make the sovereign a legal tender, "a stringency of loanable capital," said Sir Clinton, "might occur, but never a currency stringency."

Replying to a question in the House of Commons asked by Mr. Rupert Gwynne (Feb. 14, 1918), at the very moment, had Mr. Gwynne known it, that this crisis was at its worst, the Secretary of State said "the Government of India's sole undertaking is to cash notes in rupees." Recall that though their ultimate redemption is guaranteed there is no undertaking here "to cash" £1 notes in sovereigns. The failure of this "undertaking" would be an admission to 300,000,000 illiterate people that the Sirkar is unable any longer to honor its own checks! It is little wonder that Sir Robert Giffen should have asked 20 years ago, when this sinister experiment of "a gold standard without a gold currency" was inaugurated, whether the Indian Government "can go on long with its present ideas regarding money without the gravest complications in the Government of India."

Says Sir James Meston: "Our old friend Sir James Brunyate fought our battle at Washington," and that is—if you believe Sir James—how the honor of the Indian Government was saved by the skin of its teeth. Let me emphatically deny that. The offer at Washington advanced by Sir James Brunyate and Lord Reading was to buy the United States Treasury silver dollars at 86 cents an ounce. This offer was point-blank refused. It was the proposal that this writer advanced here to pay 115 cents for these "Bland" dollars, which was next considered, and which Gov. Emmet Boyle, of Nevada, compromised for "dollar silver"—that was the settlement by which, to the disappointment of Sir James Brunyate, the Government of India was enabled to protect its notes from going to protest. And now that we know from Sir James Meston all we do know how frantic the need of the Indian Government was, we see that it was perhaps a misfortune for the whole white world of workers that Gov. Boyle did not "stand pat" on my proposal to fix the price of silver at $1.15 and not $1. In a very few months silver will be much higher than $1.15.

Truly, sir, time has its revenges. Sir James Meston, in that same budget speech of 1910, from which you quoted yesterday, said of some then recent and rather acrid criticisms of mine:

"I come to an inveterate sniper, Mr. Moreton Frewen. In a long series of attacks which he has scattered over the press of three continents he has accused our currency policy, among other gentle arts, of the following: Abolishing the decalogue, famines, drunkenness, thieving, wholesale manslaughter."

Well, if I did, and on the threshold of another famine, do again affirm the vital importance of mints open to coin free for every bearer, ornaments and bullion, still I never said of that "romance" of closed mints anything more severe than Sir James himself said a month since—that but for the clemency of a foreign Government in melting and selling its currency to save Indian finance the silver certificates issued by the Indian Government must have been dishonored wherever presented at a bank or a treasury.

And why does Sir James Meston single out this writer, of all people, as an extremist among "snipers"? Let me put on record Mr. (now Sir David) Yule, chairman of the Bank of Calcutta. When addressing his shareholders in 1897 he said:

"It is this desperate ambition to have a 16-penny exchange at any sacrifice that has wrought the failure of the currency legislation of 1893 and has brought the people to the verge of ruin and discontent. How long will the money lenders suffer repayment of their advances to fall into arrear? The agricultural population of this country display great, even dogged, patience at their toil, but the money lenders have the doggedness without the patience. The village grogshop harbors the result—a dissolute and heartbroken peasant, once a thriving ryot."

If such is the opinion of a leading banker after four years of closed mints, what is the leisured opinion of the finance minister, the very man who had closed the mints? Sir David Barbour writes to me, I being in America (Sept. 16, 1897):

"The present policy gives no par of exchange at all until the gold standard has been made effective. * * * The rate of exchange is being artificially held up (a) by reduced drawings by the secretary of state, (b) by a total cessation of those drawings for the present, and (c) by a remittance of 10,000,000 rupees by the secretary of state to India. The rate of exchange must fall heavily as soon as this artificial support is withdrawn. * * * Under such conditions, to talk of the present policy as producing a stable or reliable par of exchange is absurd."

Could the city in dealing with a problem of exchange have found a wiser leader than the late Lord Aldenham? Lord Aldenham, with the late Lord Goschen, represented Great Britain at the monetary conference in Paris in 1878. Since 1853 Lord Aldenham had been a director of the Bank of England, and, in his turn, its governor. As principal in the great house of Antony Gibbs & Sons, Lord Aldenham had an unrivaled experience of fluctuating exchanges, particularly in the case of half a dozen South American countries. With an acute silver famine to-day, with our gold currency leached away by wholesale to India's hoards, it is time to recall the evidence which Lord Aldenham gave before the Herschell Commission of 1892. Question 12,875:

"Do you consider the consent of the French Government essential to an agreement of that kind?"

"I do not."

"You think that America and India together would form a broad enough basis?"

"I should say America alone, the Indian mints being opened to silver. I do not say America and India together, because it would involve putting India upon a bimetallic system, which I do not desire. What I mean is that the United States could do it alone, because France for 80 years almost alone maintained the ratio of 15½ to 1."

Lord Aldenham went on to compare the vast wealth, commerce, and population of the United States in 1892 with that of France before 1873. My own evidence before the Royal Commission of 1913 contains the following statement:

"The error of the Bimetallic Party was in our failure to recognize until too late that Great Britain before 1873 had done fully as much to secure a fixed ratio of exchange for silver and gold as France herself had. True, France until 1873 was the world's money changer. France gave on demand an ounce of gold for any 15½ ounces of silver, equally to the merchant of Lyons or the merchant of London. But France did not necessarily give her own gold, and this because she had at all times through her bill market access to the gold reserve of the Bank of England. Any 15½ ounces of French silver currency, when melted and exported to Bombay and there exchanged against wheat or rice sold to London, was a sight draft on the Bank of England for 1 ounce of gold, so long as, and only so long as, the Indian mints remained open. Thus it was the open mint in India and the free gold market of London that until 1873 maintained the exchange parity. All that Great Britain should ever have been asked to agree to at the various money conferences was to maintain those conditions which were still in being when the last conference at Brussels adjourned, and the action of which had during the preceding century secured fixed exchange. (Vol. II, p. 35.)

Let me put on record here the unimaginable breadth of the indignation which has been awakened by England's money-lender tricks in thus demonetizing silver in India—"silver," as Walter Bagehot had declared only a few years before, "the normal money of mankind." In 1896 we had the Venezuela message of President Cleveland and England's reply, the dispatch of a large fleet of warships into the Atlantic, which occasioned a panic on the New York Stock Exchange, and good American citizens paid fully $1,000,000,000 because of the hectoring tone of their Democratic President's message. Whereupon I wrote to a friend in the Senate, the leading "gold" Senator, a Senator presently destined to be the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and I expressed mild surprise as to these presidential lightnings and to the expulsion of the British ambassador. My friend replies that we owe this anti-British explosion to England's treatment of silver. This letter I next showed to a ministerial friend, presently to be our prime minister, who writes me that as to the cause he quite agrees with my American Senator, that our relations with these near relations have been poisoned by all this tampering and tinkering with silver in India and elsewhere. Two years earlier (1894) a letter had been addressed to me carrying the signatures of 33 Senators, 20 Republicans and 13 Democrats, and signed by both the Senators from Pennsylvania, both the Senators from New Hampshire, by the chairman of the Democratic national committee, by the ex-chairman of the Republican national committee, a letter ominous in every line of the storm of anti-English feeling gathering in the West. Will anyone write over his own signature to any organ of public opinion here and advance any single name which carries any authority whatsoever—the name of one who has approved of these flagitious experiments in India which, ever since 1893, have been matter for a tragic derision wherever students of economics have happened to assemble? That is my defense to Sir James Meston's strictures.

Will the Government of India never deign to learn the lesson? Will no Dawkins, no Westland, no Brunyate, no Meston, no Fleetwood Wilson ever sit down and try to reply to the question put to me nine years ago by Senator Teller, the nestor of the National Monetary Commission at Washington, when I was a witness before that commission? Had there been a reply which would have protected the honor of the Government of India, with what delight I would have advanced it then and to-day. Senator Teller's question was this:

"In the great Bombay famine of 1877 were not vast masses of silver ornaments brought to the Bombay mints for recoinage into rupees, and was it this recoining of their ornaments which enabled masses of natives to buy food; and did not the official reports declare that the coinage of silver ornaments, increasing as the famine increased, 'indicate with a certain accuracy the commencement, progress, and severity of the present famine'? Now, suppose, as was the case in India, that our people here, instead of keeping their gold in the banks in coin, melted down the coin and shackled it on their limbs for safe-keeping. Suppose we had a famine and the Government here closed its mints to the free coinage of gold, and sold a coined gold dollar, not for its weight in gold, but for twice its weight in gold, and that our people proceeded to die from the artificial price exacted by our officials for the coins with which they bought their food. Is this exactly what the Government of India has done by its citizens?"

That is, in the judgment of any independent critics, what the Indian Government certainly did when it closed its mints. It created a money famine in order to advance its exchange; it "abolished the Decalogue"; its people died, and will again die, like flies at any famine time. The case of the village chief, read out in the United States Senate, has been told a score of times. It will stand telling once again. This headman came in from a famine-stricken village in 1897 to Allahabad, bringing 2,000 tolas of silver ornaments and bullion, which, had the mints been open, would have sent him back to his village with Rs. 2,000. As it was, the mints being closed, he found himself forced to accept the best and, indeed, only offer—that of a local shroff for Rs. 600. Reduce this shameful recorded incident—one in ten thousand, did we know it—to a mathematical formula. The late Mr. Handasyde Dick, whose opportunities of observation in early life in India had been unrivaled, estimated that with rice no higher than 11 seers per rupee—and rice never was higher than 14 seers per rupee in the famine of 1897—the people can be pulled through a famine for one anna per capita per day. So that when that headman went to Allahabad and lost 8 annas per each of 2,000 tolas, he lost also one week of life for each of his 2,500 villagers. The Indian death rate for the year 1897 was 37 per thousand. The rate for the previous eight normal years was 30 per thousand. Thus 2,000,000 people died of that famine, which was far less a food than a "money famine," and privation left the seeds of disease and early death with uncounted millions more. How many souls then were taken off by what Mr. David Yule (chairman of the Bank of Calcutta) fitly stigmatized as "that famine breeding gold standard"? Is it wonderful that since the closing of her mints India has developed this astonishing unrest? Was it not a "money famine" when Mr. Vicary Gibbs declared in the House of Commons in 1897 that rupees were being borrowed in Bombay at 2 per cent per month on the security of gold bars? Such is the working out of "the gold exchange standard" in India. It is little wonder China will not touch such a "standard" with a pair of tongs. That any Briton can put on record such a story without a grievous sense of responsibility is inconceivable. But if through currency reform, if by the reopening of India's mints to silver, before it is quite too late, we can head off a revolution in India, then indeed shout the tale of Allahabad from the housetops, in order that, in the words of Sir James Meston, a month since, the Government of India "may be forced to reconsider the whole basis of our currency and exchange policy."

The objection Chinese statesmen have to metaling India's "gold exchange standard" is not perhaps any squeamishness as to the decalogue, but has an impregnable economic basis. China is a "debtor nation," and it is all important that her currency should be of that order which will stimulate her exports and contract her imports. The lower, within bounds, the gold price of silver the larger will be her balance of trade. In February, 1909, the Mandarin Tong Shoa Yi—a little later China's first prime minister—wrote me his objections to applying the Indian currency system to his country. He said:

"In China fluctuations in exchange, such as those of last year, are, of course, very troublesome for our importing merchants. Still, no doubt, last year's fall in silver greatly assists our mills and other manufacturing industries which might be damaged by the competition of imported foreign goods if the exchange rose. Thus the fall in exchange is even as an increasing tariff, but, unlike a tariff, our exports are not reduced but are, so to speak, subsidized."

In 1908, Senator Teller, of the United States Monetary Commission, had summed up this "yellow peril" of low silver exchange in these few words:

"When formerly China sold us her products for our gold money 5 gold dollars, or 1 sovereign, used to return her 3 taels, and 3 taels formerly paid a day's wage to 21 Chinese mill hands; while to-day 5 gold dollars return to China not 3 but 8 taels, and 8 taels pay a day's wage to 60 Chinese mill hands."

Reporting at that time to the United States Steel Corporation on the operation of the new Han Yang steel mill at Hankow, Mr. Watson reckoned the per capita wages paid in this mill at one-fifteenth of the wages paid in Pittsburgh, and that the efficiency of the Chinaman was 90 per cent of the white worker. Thus the fall in exchange from 3 taels per sovereign to 8 taels had the effect of cutting down the wages cost of Chinese iron and steel for export in the ratio of 8 to 3.

Sir James Meston now says "there is absolutely no justification for the continuing panic which has drawn 1,200,000,000 silver rupees from our mints during the last four years." Let me suggest to Sir James that there is no such "panic." India is most prosperous; it is not any panic, but sheer prosperity—the huge inrush of specie—which accounts for this intense hoarding. Sir James Meston has issued masses of 18d. notes, and, of course, these pledges jostle their metal representatives into the myriad hoards of India. Burn the "shinplaster" notes and the rupee will emerge again. In the 15 years, 1855–1870, the total production of silver from the world's mines was reported by our silver commission of 1876 to have been less than £28,000,000, and during those 15 years India, with less than half her present population, took no less than £29,000,000 sterling of silver. But for the traditional habit of hoarding, such a mass of new rupees as this would have inflated her currency; as it was, the "index number" for the years from 1855 to 1888 showed, according to the gold and silver commission, a slight fall. If what Sir James Meston ingeminates were now to happen—if the rupees came now by wholesale out of the hoards for banking capital and for investment, and also all this printing-press money remained in active circulation—there would be in India such an inflation of prices as would convulse wages, would double and treble all prices, and lead to most serious disturbances.

The true policy of the Government of India is to permit the rupee exchange to advance steadily to the parity of the melting point of the rupee; that is, to silver at 60.84, and thus exchange at 22.61d. That accomplished, we have restored the Indian exchange with all her silver-using neighbors, China, the Straits, etc., and she will be protected against the present ruinous competition of Japan—of Japan trading as now with China at a silver exchange ratio of 1 to 29½, by comparison with India trading with China at 1 to 19. That done, and having thus restored the exchanges through silver "monometalism" for 800,000,000 Asiatics, we shall have done the greatest day's work in all human history for all white labor, because we shall have both protected that labor from the competition of Asiatic exports, which, as Walter Bagehot, when editor of the Economist, never wearied of pointing out, are "bonused" and "stimulated" by shrinking silver exchange, and also we shall have established a rate of exchange for all Asia which will enable her—will enable her silver money—to again buy our gold money (buy our gold "bills"), and thus buy our goods. For many years now the Government of India has relied on cheap silver—on its dishonest "artificial" rupee—to bonus and stimulate its exports, and thus through fraudulent exchange rates filch from us our gold. In its reply to the proposals of the Wolcott Commission sent over by President McKinley, when negativing the plan so ardently supported by Lord Salisbury and his chancellor (Sir Michael Hicks Beach)—as also by M. Meline, the French prime minister—in that reply what said Lord Elgin, Sir George White, Sir James Westland, truly names to conjure with these, when "turning down" the most important League of Nations proposal ever advanced by the three great powers, Great Britain, the United States, and France? This blessed trinity of Simla solons said in their dispatch of 1897: "If the ratio adopted were 15½ to 1 (it) would be a rise from about 16d. to about 23d. the rupee. Such a rise is enough to kill our export trade." There is the answer of Indian officialdom—that honest untampered money and free exchanges will kill India's exports—the sort of reply with which the financial world is familiar when dealing with the treasurer of some bankrupt South American Republic clamorous for more "paper."

Twenty years have now elapsed since by that fatuous dispatch the Government of India was permitted to override a carefully designed proposal which had behind it the Governments of the United States and France, and to which England was already pledged by Lord Salisbury, and by the elaborate speeches of the then chancellor of the exchequer and Mr. Balfour in the House of Commons (Mar. 17, 1896). It may be useful now, by the light of Sir James Meston's panic oration last month and its admissions, to put on record the words used by Senator Wolcott January 17, 1898, when giving an account of his mission to the United States Senate:

"In the early summer of 1897 there was not a member of the English ministry who did not believe our labors would result in an international agreement. The answer of Sir James Westland was as much a surprise to them as to us, but, following the traditions of the India office, they declined to interrupt the policy which the governor general in council recommended. Mr. President, the experiment now about to be tried by the Government of India will, in the opinion not only of the bimetallists of the world but of nine-tenths of the gold monometallists of London, result in abject and utter failure. It will be impossible to impose upon the people of India this 'gold standard.'" And on October 21, 1897, an important member of Lord Salisbury's cabinet wrote me, and now permits me to publish the following letter:

"Unless Barbour, Sir David—Indian finance minister when the mints were closed in 1893—is altogether wrong the gold standard scheme is impossible, and, if so, the Indian Government must come to their senses. If the American delegates are wise, they will take advantage of the loophole we have given and postpone their negotiations till the Indian scheme collapses, as Barbour prophesies it will very shortly. In any case, when you see the papers you will, I think, agree that no other course was open, and it would only have left the cause without adherents in high places if we had split on it now."

It may be well now to put on record the apologia for Great Britain with which M. Meline concluded his explanation to the Chamber of Deputies of the French Republic in these long drawn-out negotiations, having been fooled to the top of its bent by Lord Elgin equally with the American Republic. The French premier said:

"About this matter I consider that we have done our duty, for I am not accustomed when in power to abandon the convictions which I have always upheld. This year we were offered the opportunity of joining the United States in a diplomatic effort to induce a neighboring country to assist in measures looking to a reestablishment of a fixed relation between silver and gold, and we made the effort. We did not demand of Great Britain the free coinage of silver, which does not seem to be indispensable, but we asked for a concert of measures calculated to establish the fixed relation, and thus to terminate the monetary anarchy which now reigns in the world and which convulses international trade.

"I do not hesitate to say that we have failed. I do not, however, regret the step; it was a wise step, and its results will show hereafter, for I am convinced that a day is near when the force of circumstances will compel the nations of Europe to face the problem and solve it. I hope that until that day dawns humanity will not have suffered from the vacillations which continually postpone the decision of so important a question."

Twenty-one years have elapsed, not a long time in the history of nations, and in his budget speech last month Sir James Meston records the fulfillment of Sir David Barbour's prophecy. The Indian gold standard has collapsed, but not before it had destroyed England's. But all that is ancient history. What we have now to do is to restore an honest silver monometallic currency to Asia, in order that we may secure an honest monetary standard not only for the Orient but for the West, based here by all means, if you please, on gold, if, indeed, that is not already too late and the gold required gone. Since 1898, thanks to this insane scheme of an universal "gold standard"—a fraudulent scheme now dying as hard and as dishonest as "Prussian militarism" is dying—we have seen India suck into her hoarding places nearly £253,000,000 of that gold which is now so despairingly demanded for our own financial reconstruction. Two hundred and fifty-three million pounds sterling! The horse having been first stolen in these years past, and then galloped to death, our authorities locked the stable door a few weeks since. A great central bank for North America, Great Britain, and France, with three regents of the financial caliber of the late Senator Aldrich, Sir Edward Holden, and M. Ribot, such an institution endowed with those £253,000,000 and with a safe loaning capacity of at least £3,000,000,000 on the security of that gold, could have given us 3 per cent money rates in perpetuity, and enabled that league of three nations to go far to "reconstruct" the entire human race and rescue it from usurers of all sorts. All this bright vision we have sacrificed in order to gratify the empirics of a half a dozen Indian "finance members," those amateur financiers and currencyists the Simla vivisectors, who since 1893 have "tried it on the dog" in the West, as also in the East.

For the financial situation in India to-day there is no precedent in all history. Whenever other countries have resorted to huge unsecured emissions of paper currency, as, for example, the United States in the sixties, or Russia, the Argentine, and Brazil, their exchanges with their "creditor nations" (say, with England) were always against them, so that they were unable to retain their gold. For this reason they issued paper money, depreciated their currencies, and in this way stimulated their exports, reduced their adverse trade balances and thus their imports, restoring in the long run their exchanges. That is the very A B C of the foreign exchanges. But the Indian position is the very antithesis of all this. India has always enjoyed such a favorable balance of trade as has made her "the sink" of the precious metals, and to-day that balance of trade is no doubt far greater than it ever was in her history. It is so great that far from being unable to retain the metal of her standard (gold), it has become quite impossible for us in Great Britain to protect our gold reserves against this Indian drain. It is India that has driven England to inconvertible paper, not we India. To stuff India's currency with 18-penny paper promises to pay a metallic rupee is under such conditions the finance of a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta; it cries aloud for the immediate intervention of Parliament if we in England are yet to be saved from financial anarchy and infinite confusion.

The moral to be derived from all this tinkering and tampering is, however, of surpassing interest. The monetary legislation of the last three centuries has been arranged to satisfy the usurious instinct of an infinitely clever cosmopolitan oligarchy, which has long ago made of every bourse a spider's web and which had enmeshed the universe, and this notwithstanding the bounty of nature in discovering for mankind time and again some great and unexpected treasure trove of one or other of the precious metals—in Bolivia, Brazil, California, Ballarat, Nevada, Colorado, the Rand. But when those huge African supplies, which promised the alleviation of the burden of all debt, were disclosed, then it became necessary for the money lenders to divert this Pactolus flood—to pour it, so to speak, upon the sands of the Sahara. Otherwise the real burden of all debt, national or mortgage debt, would have been sensibly relieved. Hence this desperate Indian adventure, which planned to avert the fall in the value of money by deflecting the new African gold by wholesale to India. Instead of, as before 1890, sending India about 2,000,000 sovereigns annually, change her standard, said the cosmopolitan money lenders, who have for three centuries drafted our monetary law, and annually send her 25,000,000 sovereigns, and, presto, the remedy for rising prices and the alleviation of debt is found.

Was ever before a net set so clumsily in full sight of any bird, and with a more contemptuous conviction the bird would just flop in? The Chamberlain commission of 1913, strange as it may seem, expresses neither disgust nor surprise for either the fowlers or their silly fowl. All its members append their signatures to clause 36. Gentle reader, pray say what in cold blood you think of clause 36 of the report of the Chamberlain commission?

"With the argument that India should be encouraged to absorb gold for the benefit of the world in general we do not propose to deal. * * * The extent to which India should use gold must, in our opinion, be decided solely in accordance with India's own needs and wishes."

There is much to be said for the view of Sir Lionel Phillips and his friends that the production of gold should be bonused, but Shylock himself never sponsored a view more immoral and more sinister than that "India should be encouraged to absorb gold for the benefit of the world in general." Was this the reason why, for the first time in human history, a "precious metal"—silver—was, in 1910, subjected by the Indian Government to a very high tariff in order to increase, as it did and does immensely increase, the absorption of our gold by India? And what has been the result of these amazing machinations? The waste of our gold on India has since 1910 been so colossal that mankind has broken clean away from metallic standards and now navigates an uncharted ocean. Instead of silver, "the normal money of mankind," as Bagehot described it in 1876, we find ourselves projected into "greenbackism." Thus by demonetizing silver, the world's usurers, too clever by half, have demonetized gold itself.

Let me say, in conclusion, that no one living has worked harder to make the great experiment of a gold currency for India a success—not even Sir James Meston nor Sir Fleetwood Wilson—than has Mr. Montagu de P. Webb, of Karachi. I do not therefore often find myself in the same lobby with Mr. Webb. But the following lines from a letter of Mr. Webb to the Times of India, written before the war, are a symphony for the budget speech of Sir James Meston a month since, and they show how accurate has been Mr. Webb's prevision of the drain of our gold to Asia and the coming bankruptcy of England's gold standard at the hand of India. Mr. Webb wrote:

"Not until Great Britain finds herself face to face with serious industrial competition from India, China, and Japan, not until vast capital accumulations have shown Lombard Street that the East can finance that industrial competition without the aid of "the city"—and both these developments are steadily proceeding—will the magnates of Lombard Street realize that the silver and gold problem has been solved."

Surely justice demands something more than mere repeal for a form of profiteering of which it is strictly true to aver it has shaken to its foundations the great finance structure of our universe.

Yours, faithfully, MORETON FREWEN.

CARLTON CLUB, April 15, 1919.

Mr. THOMAS subsequently said: Mr. President, apropos of the address which I delivered this morning, my attention has been called to a communication to the New York Times from Sir Moreton Frewen, relating to the same subject. I ask leave to have it inserted in the RECORD in connection with the remarks that I submitted.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COTTON AND EXCHANGE—MR. FREWEN THINKS ENGLAND QUITE ABLE TO PAY—A POINT ABOUT SILVER.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The newspapers are full of discordant notes which seem to throw doubts on the position and price of your cotton. Will you permit me to write that your great customer England never was better able to pay the full dollar price for your cotton than to-day, and never in living memory have the profits of the Manchester mills been greater than at this moment, the great recent fall in sterling albeit. It is true that Manchester has to pay an unprecedented price for the dollar with which she pays for your cotton, but look at the new price at which she sells her manufactured cottons, not merely at home but to those great customers India and China—two trades which take at least $200,000,000 a year from England.

At 40 cents a pound for your cotton an 8½-pound parcel of gray shirtings cost in Manchester last September 29 shillings. I have no later figures with me. Look, then, at the immense advance in the price Manchester receives because of the jump in tael exchange from 8 taels per sovereign to 3 taels. The price at which this parcel sells in Shanghai has advanced from 29 shillings to 74 shillings because of the advance in exchange. It is little wonder that the Lancashire trades are in a ferment of activity, and there is no question of either their willingness or their ability to pay the whole advance in the dollar price of cotton which is occasioned by the fall in sterling exchange. You must also remember that the fall in sterling gives a great bonus to all that America exports to Asia; that where a cotton mill in Massachusetts competes for that trade with a cotton mill in Lancashire your export with sterling exchange at the new rate has a great competitive advantage over Lancashire.

May I, in conclusion, say a few words apropos these new silver exchanges?

Will not a new generation of voters just dismiss all the prejudices bred of ignorance and go back to the leisured and careful convictions of your wise men who repealed the Bland silver bill in 1893? Let us to-day take up the problem of silver just where these repealers left it and by a wide area of agreement, which can now be had, fix these present splendid rates of exchange with a thousand millions of Asiatics. Then, indeed, we shall secure steady exchanges in an era of splendid reconstruction.

Fresh from the repeal of the Bland Act the following cable was sent to the lord mayor of London. The message represents the verdict in a very great trial, fresh in each man's memory, of a very distinguished jury indeed—the United States Senate at the best period in its history:

WASHINGTON, May, 1894.

To the LORD MAYOR OF LONDON, Mansion House, London:

We desire to express our cordial sympathy with the movement to promote the restoration of silver by international agreement, in aid of which we understand a meeting is to be held to-day under your lordship's presidency. We believe that the free coinage of both gold and silver by international agreement at a fixed ratio would secure to mankind the blessing of a sufficient volume of metallic money, and what is hardly less important secure to the world of trade immunity from violent exchange fluctuations.

John Sherman, William Cullom, W. B. Allison, Henry Cabot Lodge, D. W. Voorhees, Calvin S. Brice, George F. Hoar, O. H. Platt, Nelson W. Aldrich, A. P. Gorman, Wm. Frye, Edward Murphy, C. K. Davis, David B. Hill.

It seems but the other day that Walter Bagehot declared to a select committee of the House of Commons that "silver is the normal money of mankind." The normal money! Si monumentum petis, circumspice. The utter rout and confusion of the world's currency and finance.

MORETON FREWEN.

NEW YORK, February 6, 1920.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3875) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 423) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3430) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 422) thereon.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11927) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard, through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 421) thereon.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES BY COLLISION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Senate Document 214 relates to damages adjusted by the Chief of Engineers and a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting this data. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered printed. It should have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

I ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the matter and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10746) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools; the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system; the construction of a sewer system; the construction of a city dock and floating dock; and to levy and collect a special tax therefor.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 3891) granting a pension to Anna J. Atlee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3892) for the relief of Alfred B. Andrews; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3893) granting a pension to Joseph W. Songer (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3894) granting a pension to Ada N. Gahm (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 3895) authorizing the granting of certain irrigation easements in the Yellowstone National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 3896) for the retirement of Frank Schoble, jr., and Raymond D. Day, first lieutenants in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 3897) to amend sections 16 and 26 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MARTINA SENA AND OTHERS.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3218) for the relief of Martina Sena, Luis E. Armijo, and Maria Baca de Romero, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment authorizing the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to expend from the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made under the title, "Armament of fortifications," for the construction of storage facilities, etc., not exceeding $12,351,000, which amount shall remain available during the fiscal year 1921, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,511.55 for use of the Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital in the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the prevention of the spread of epidemic diseases, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

CAR SHORTAGE.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Yesterday I introduced a resolution which was not disposed of. Some Senators have asked me to let it go over until to-morrow. Will it be in order then?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled that resolutions do not come up automatically upon the succeeding day, but lie on the table to be called up at the conclusion of morning business at any hour on any day when the Senators introducing the resolutions desire to call them up.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Chair. I give notice that I shall call up Senate resolution 302 to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts requests that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall be first considered. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, under the subhead "Clerks at embassies and legations," on page 4, line 13, after the words "United States," to strike out "$438,000" and insert "$688,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations, who, whenever hereafter appointed, shall be citizens of the United States, $688,000; and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil-service rules and regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, foreign missions," on page 7, line 18, after the word "authorized," to strike out "$810,000" and insert "$1,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, repairs, postage, telegrams, furniture, typewriters (including exchange of same), messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, including such loss on bills of exchange to officers of the United States Courts for China, and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 7, to insert:

PURCHASE OF THE EMBASSY BUILDING AND GROUNDS AT SANTIAGO, CHILE.

For the purchase of the embassy building and grounds about it at No. 1602, Alameda, Santiago, Chile, and for making necessary minor repairs and alterations in the building to put it into proper condition, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service," on page 9, line 14, before the word "together," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, and to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $500,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this object for the fiscal year 1920, which is hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Allowance to widows or heirs of diplomatic or consular officers who die abroad," at the top of page 10, to insert:

PAYMENT TO MRS. WINIFRED T. MAGELSSEN.

To Mrs. Winifred T. Magelssen, widow of William C. Magelssen, late consul to Melbourne, Australia, $4,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while returning to the United States from his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 9, to insert:

PAN PACIFIC UNION.

To meet the actual necessary expenses of delegates of the United States to the first Pan Pacific Scientific Congress, to be held in the city of Honolulu in August, 1920, and the necessary clerical work and assistants in preparing for, during, and after the congress and in calling a second congress, to be expended through the Pan Pacific Union, at the discretion of the Secretary of State, made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, $9,000.

Mr. LODGE. There are errors in the draft of the amendment as printed, and I ask to substitute for that the one which I send to the desk. It is precisely the same in effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of lines 11 to 18 insert:

To meet the actual necessary expenses of delegates of the United States to the first Pan Pacific Scientific Congress, to be held in the city of Honolulu in August, 1920, and to pay for the necessary clerical work in connection with the congress and in calling a second congress, to be expended through the Pan Pacific Union, at the discretion of the Secretary of State, $9,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is the first appropriation made for this purpose. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts explain the real purpose of it, and if in the future, in his opinion, these appropriations will come annually or is it just for this year?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the people of the Hawaiian Islands and all others in the Pacific, including China and Japan, have formed an association, and are very desirous of having this conference, which is purely for scientific and commercial information. The Territory of Hawaii has already appropriated $10,000 for the purpose, New Zealand has appropriated $15,000, and it is expected that all the Pacific nations will appropriate for it.

Its purpose, as I said, is scientific and commercial. The governor of Hawaii and the Delegate from Hawaii appeared before the committee in its behalf, and it seemed to us a very desirable thing to do and that the improvement of relations and the knowledge gained will be very valuable. The committee was convinced that it is meritorious.

As to it being continued in the future, I can only say to the Senator that these things when once begun I have never known to die.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor have I.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 12, in the subhead before the word "High," to strike out "International" and insert "Inter-American," so as to make the subhead read "United States section of the Inter-American High Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 15, before the word "High," to strike out "International" and insert "Inter-American," and in line 8, after the words "Secretary of," to strike out "State" and insert "the Treasury," so as to make the clause read:

To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission, arising in such work and investigations as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Waterways treaty, United States and Great Britain: International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain," on page 20, line 7, before the words "to be," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$40,000," and in line 12, after the word "business," to strike out "And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for salaries of commissioners in excess of $3,500 each per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, including rental of offices at Washington, D. C., expense of printing, and necessary traveling expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $40,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for subsistence of the commission or secretary, except for actual and necessary expenses, not in excess of $8 per day each, when absent from Washington and from his regular place of residence on official business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers," on page 23, line 13, after "$600,000," to insert "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of post allowances to any officer or employee not appointed under the Department of State and solely responsible thereto," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $600,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of post allowances to any officer or employee not appointed under the Department of State and solely responsible thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, United States consulates," on page 25, line 16, after the word "authorized," to strike out "$900,000" and insert "$1,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent (so much as may be necessary), repairs to consular buildings owned by the United States, postage, furniture, including typewriters and exchange of same, statistics, newspapers, freight (foreign and domestic), telegrams, advertising, messenger service, traveling expenses of consular officers and consular assistants, compensation of Chinese writers, loss by exchange, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and consular agencies in the transaction of their business, and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 18, to insert:

FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

From and after the 1st day of May, 1920, a fee of $1 shall be collected for each application and $10 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States or a person who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and said fees shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States at least quarterly: Provided, however, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers and employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties.

From and after the 1st day of May, 1920, a fee of $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien and $1 for each application of an alien for a visé shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officers of any foreign Government, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States or soldiers coming within the terms of public resolution No. 44, Sixty-fifth Congress (H. J. Res. 331).

From and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States or any person who has resided in the United States three years and has declared his intention to become a citizan of the United States to depart from the United States for any foreign country except Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Bermuda, and the Bahama Islands, or by way of these excepted countries to a foreign country, through the possessions of the United States or otherwise, or to depart from said possessions for any foreign country except Panama and those hereinbefore excepted, unless he bears a valid passport.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has the amendment been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the amendment was agreed to I thought the Senator from Massachusetts was going to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to perfect the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I thought. After that shall have been done I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as not having been agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to amend the amendment on page 27, line 3, by striking out the period at the end of line 3, inserting a comma, and the words "or to members of their immediate families accompanying them, and this section shall not be applicable to seamen."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, lines 15 to 18, I move to strike out the words "or any person who has resided in the United States three years and has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I now desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. The amendment beginning on page 26, line 20, reads as follows:

From and after the 1st day of May, 1920, a fee of $1 shall be collected for each application and $10 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States or a person who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and said fees shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States at least quarterly.

I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the committee has taken into consideration a condition which exists to-day? I know of many American citizens who have secured passports from the State Department to go, say, to England. Such passports have to be viséd by the English High Commission, which is located in New York; but many such passports are not viséd. Accordingly, under this bill, after an applicant has paid $11 in order to get his passport from the State Department, if visé is refused by the high commission at New York the passport would be of no use to him and he would have spent his money in vain.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a fee on the visé is only paid in case it is granted.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, but the American who has paid the State Department $10 for his passport, on application to the English High Commission at New York may have visé refused. How is he then going to get his $10 back?

Mr. LODGE. The visé is given by the representative of the country of destination and, of course, the applicant has got to get a visé on any passport.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, and there would be no objection on my part to the amendment if passports were always viséd by the officials of the country of destination. I have knowledge of, I was going to say, hundreds of cases where the State Department has issued passports to American citizens who have applied at New York for a visé on their passports, and the visé has been refused. That is being done to-day on the ground——

Mr. LODGE. That happens in but very few cases, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I personally know of a great many such cases, for they have come under my personal observation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is impossible to suppose that the amount of money involved in such cases is more than a trifle, for but very few applicants are refused visés of their passports.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have had——

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator from Utah desire the language so arranged that where a visé of a passport is refused by the foreign country the amount paid for the issuance of the passport shall be reimbursed to the applicant?

Mr. SMOOT. Why should it not be reimbursed to him? The passport does not do him any good.

I will say to the Senator that I took this matter up with the State Department less than 10 days ago as to the case of American citizens who are being absolutely refused entrance into England by the refusal of a visé of their passports at New York.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Utah will prepare an amendment which will cover cases where visés of passports are refused by foreign countries, and providing that the amount of the passport fee shall be reimbursed by the Government of the United States, I shall be willing to accept it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I care for. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Secretary of State stated that it was almost unthinkable that such a thing as that should occur, and yet, I repeat, that in the last six months——

Mr. LODGE. What is done in such cases under the present law?

Mr. SMOOT. For the last six months I have been trying to have the British Government rescind the order that was issued as to this matter, but I know the practice has continued until to-day. I know the Secretary of State now has the question up with the British Government.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, every country has a right to grant or refuse visés of passports, and the number of visés of passports of immigrants coming to this country that we were obliged to grant was 500,000 last year.

Mr. SMOOT. The British Government takes the position that food is scarce and that as to persons who desire to go over to England and stay there for, say, over six months, they do not wish to visé their passports.

If the Senator from Massachusetts will agree to an amendment of the kind I have suggested, I should have not a particle of objection to this provision; but I do believe there should be such an amendment agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to accept such amendment if the Senator from Utah will prepare it.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is the refusal to visé passports because of an order in council a Crown statute or a governmental regulation?

Mr. SMOOT. It is by governmental regulation, as I have been told by Capt. Jeffs, who has charge of the English High Commission at New York, which is responsible for the viséing of passports.

Mr. MOSES. May I suggest further that the amendment should be drawn so as to include cases where statutes exist which would forbid the entrance of a foreigner into a country, as, for example, we have certain statutes that absolutely forbid the admission of certain classes of individuals; and we ought not to make the amendment so sweeping that those classes could benefit.

Mr. SMOOT. No foreigner would benefit by the amendment which I shall propose.

Mr. LODGE. This legislation refers only to passports which we issue to American citizens.

Mr. MOSES. I understand that; but there might be certain classes of American citizens who might be fugitives and by some subterfuge or other might secure passports.

Mr. LODGE. Fraud vitiates everything, of course.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, have the committee amendments been concluded?

Mr. LODGE. No. I gladly accept such an amendment as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests, but I think it had better come in after the first paragraph, which relates to passports.

Mr. SMOOT. Or after the word "quarterly," in line 7, on page 27.

Mr. LODGE. Let there be put in at the appropriate place some such wording as this:

Whenever any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued to an American citizen, the State Department is authorized to refund whatever has been paid for fees on the return of the passport.

The Secretary will be able to make such changes in the wording as may be necessary to make it accurate.

Mr. SMOOT. With the understanding that the amendment to the amendment shall be agreed to, I shall not object to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment it is proposed to insert the following:

Whenever any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued to a citizen of the United States the State Department is hereby authorized to refund to said citizen whatever fees have been paid by him on return of the passport.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge to page 11, lines 6 to 9, which provide an appropriation for the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, $5,000. There is an unexpended balance for the present fiscal year amounting to somewhere in the neighborhood of $15,000, which is needed for the purpose of completing surveys of what are called "bancos," and that work can be completed, as I am informed, by the use of this unexpended balance. Therefore, at the end of line 8, page 11, I move to amend by inserting:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1920, is hereby made available for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1921, for the objects and purposes designated by said act of appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no objection to making the unexpended balance available. That, I am sure, will cover the matter.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. That will make the total amount available $20,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will not object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, but I desire to state that in the past the Appropriations Committee have objected to similar amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand, that will make the total amount available $20,000, while the amount asked for was $45,000. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will not agree to an amendment on page 11, line 8, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$20,000"? I wish to say to the Senate and to the Senator from Massachusetts that I am not very familiar with this matter. It is one which the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has been looking after, and he is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family. I should like to have the Senator allow the amendment to go in the bill, at any rate until my colleague returns to the Senate, and if there is any discrepancy it can be corrected in conference.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I have gone as far as I can in accepting the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. This commission has been at work since 1893——

Mr. SMOOT. That is, they have been drawing salaries since that time.

Mr. LODGE. They have been drawing salaries since that time. They appear to be engaged in an interminable task, because in the valleys, which extend some 400 miles, I think, the river shifts continually and forms what are called bancos. For instance, the line as drawn throws certain territory on to the American side of the river, we will say, but in the winter when the high water comes and the river changes its course it cuts through American territory and puts it inside the Mexican line. That is going on constantly. The Senator from Tennessee appeared twice before the committee, and the commissioner, Mr. Hill, who also comes from Tennessee, appeared, and likewise the Secretary. They admitted frankly that the only way to reach a final settlement was to establish an arbitrary line. This work has been going on for nearly 20 years, and the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate, which have had the subject before them not only this year but many times, both are entirely against the continuance of this work and this surveying. Mexico has not had an engineer there for the past year, and nothing has been done. If there are one or two surveys to complete, I am willing to make the previous appropriation available, but in view of the action of the committee I do not feel warranted in adding to the sum provided by the House, which is appropriated solely because it is a treaty matter. They would have abolished the whole thing if there had not been a treaty agreement. I think that $20,000 will take care of the officers of the commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am going to offer an amendment to strike out "$5,000," on line 8, page 11, and to insert in lieu thereof "$20,000."

The Mexican Boundary Commission was established under treaty with Mexico. Article 2 of that treaty provides:

The International Boundary Commission shall be composed of a commissioner appointed by the President of the United States of America and of another appointed by the President of the United States of Mexico, in accordance with the constitutional provisions of each country, of a consulting engineer, appointed in the same manner by each Government, and of such secretaries and interpreters as either Government may see fit to add to its commission.

Judge Hill, in describing what was being done, in the hearings said this:

In the estimate that I made for the appropriation for this fiscal year there were three distinct items of work that we regarded as important. One was a reconnoissance of the Rio Grande and its tributaries with a view of locating practical dam and reservoir sites for storing water for irrigation, and with a view of controlling the flood waters so as to reduce to a minimum the avulsive changes in these valleys; another was the establishment of gauging stations for the measurement of the water at different places above and below the mouths of important tributaries, so as to have a record of the flow of the river; and the other was this work of surveying these valleys where the line had not been surveyed under the treaty of 1905. We did make the reconnoissance of the river; we have established the gauging stations, and have them in operation; but because of the failure of the Mexican Government to cooperate with us we were not able to do the surveying, because this is a joint commission, and the survey ought to be made jointly by the engineers of the two Governments, and reported by them to the joint commission for its action.

So that it seems that the commission is doing a good work there.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, to be frank, they are not doing any work at all. They have had three meetings this year, the record of which covers nine typewritten pages.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know about the records of the meetings, but I know that these men have been down there on the job.

Mr. LODGE. They have had three meetings. They are not to blame for that, because there is no Mexican engineer at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor has there been for over three years.

Mr. LODGE. No; I think that is a little long. I think it is only two years.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that the commission rather lapsed and remained in abeyance for a number of years, but in the last two or three years they have had a live man at the head of it, and he has been at work.

Mr. LODGE. I want the Senator from Tennessee to be reasonable, and I think he will be when I have read the figures. Remember, we have added $15,000 made available of an unexpended balance. That makes a total of $20,000.

Let me read the expenses of last year. Gauging stations were established and maintained——

Mr. McKELLAR. What page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. LODGE. Page 41 of the Senate hearings. The expenditures were for making surveys, installing gauging stations, maintaining same four months, instruments for engineers, office supplies, rents, traveling expenses, telegrams, express and freight, ice, telephone, machine, sundries, salaries of commissioner, consulting engineer, assistant engineer, secretary, and disbursing officer, and clerk, office, El Paso. Seventeen thousand three hundred and twenty dollars will cover all the salaries and leave a balance of $2,500, which will cover, I think, all the other items.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an item of $6,424.62 for making surveys, $2,792.76 for installing gauging stations, and $1,253.50 for instruments for engineers. The total of all these items, including the salaries up to July of last year, was $32,241.64, so that it would mean a reduction——

Mr. LODGE. For the next six months there was only $16,000 spent, because the Mexican was not there, and nothing was done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, they have been making surveys, because this is shown in the items of expense.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, they made no surveys in the past year. They admitted that themselves.

Mr. McKELLAR. They have a statement to that effect in this record.

Mr. LODGE. They may have had an engineer there, but they told me that no Mexican engineer had been there for over a year. Mr. Hill stated that himself. They may have been keeping up some surveys, but this $20,000 that they now have will pay all the salaries, and that is the principal thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think about the only three necessary things to accomplish with this appropriation are that the commission, first, shall receive their checks; second, indorse the check; and, third, spend the money.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, the Senator is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I have studied this question more than the Senator from Tennessee has.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator may have, but I do not think he has studied it as carefully as I have, because the Senator is mistaken about that. I know he is well meaning in the matter, but he is just simply mistaken about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am only judging what is going to happen in the future by what has happened in the past.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator remembers that several years ago it was in the hands of an Army officer, and nothing was done, but since it has been in the hands of a civilian commissioner down there a good deal more work has been done.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, the Senator must know that the commissioner from Colorado was not an Army officer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Who was the commissioner from Colorado? As I remember, some general in the Army, whose name I forget now, was commissioner for many years, and I do not think he paid very much attention to it; but since that time they have been very active about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going into that matter. I will content myself by simply saying that when the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado gets into conference I hope the conferees will not agree to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know, of course, that unless the Senator from Massachusetts agrees to let it go into conference I can not get the amendment through the Senate. I realize that; so, unless he says that he is willing for it to go into the bill, so as to get it into conference, there is no use in my offering the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. All of the committee who were present and heard the statement were satisfied that the amount ought not to be increased. Now we have added this amendment, which gives them $15,000 more.

Mr. McKELLAR. That, of course, will help the situation somewhat, and I will accept what the Senator has done about it.

Mr. LODGE. I have accepted the amendment, and after the action of the committee on it I really think that is as far as I ought properly to go.

Mr. McKELLAR. I withdraw the amendment, then.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure the House take the view—perhaps a darker view than I do—that if it were not for the treaty they would abolish the commission.

Mr. SMOOT. They would have abolished it long ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. HITCHCOCK conferees on the part of the Senate.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, Senate bill 1699.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McLean	Simmons
Beckham	Harrison	McNary	Smith, Md.
Borah	Henderson	Myers	Smoot
Capper	Hitchcock	Nelson	Stanley
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Sterling
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sutherland
Culberson	Kendrick	Nugent	Trammell
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Underwood
Elkins	King	Page	Wadsworth
Fernald	Knox	Phelan	Walsh, Mass.
France	Lenroot	Phipps	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Poindexter	Watson
Gronna	McCormick	Pomerene	Williams
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard	Wolcott

Mr. CURTIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] on business of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not think my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the civil-service retirement bill was put to the Senate. I renew the motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1699.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had inserted in the RECORD yesterday the full statement of Mr. Hoover, expressing his views upon the political questions which at this time seemed to him worthy of discussion.

I am not about to discuss the question of Mr. Hoover's candidacy for the Presidency. I do not know whether he is a candidate in either or neither or both parties, and at the present time it is not my purpose to undertake to find out from his statement whether or not he is a candidate. I was greatly interested, however, in some views which he expressed, particularly with reference to the subject now uppermost in the minds of the people of this country. He has occupied a position which makes his views upon this subject of more than ordinary interest. It is with reference to those views that I desire to offer some observations.

I quote from Mr. Hoover's statement:

> If the treaty goes over to the presidential election with any reservations necessary to clarify the world's mind that there can be no infringement of the safeguards provided by our Constitution and our Nation-old traditions, then I must vote for the party that stands for the league.

There has been some difference of opinion as to the exact meaning of this statement. Some have thought that it could be construed as placing Mr. Hoover in opposition to any reservations at all; but I think a fair and legitimate construction of the language used is to the contrary. As I understand the statement, the treaty must carry reservations which respect our Constitution and our Nation-old traditions. In case the treaty is presented in the presidential election with such safeguards, as I construe the statement, Mr. Hoover would support the party standing for the treaty with those reservations. It is true that he does not state clearly what he would do in case the treaty were presented without sufficient reservations; but the fair inference, it seems to me, is that it would have to carry reservations according to the standard here laid down before he would support it.

Mr. President, if this is the statement of Mr. Hoover, and if I have correctly construed it, it is indeed of unusual interest in the consideration of the matter at this time. If the construction which I have placed upon it be a fair one, then Mr. Hoover may fairly be placed alongside of those who have heretofore been classed as irreconcilables. He would, of course, deny this, but if he ever tries to write a league to conform to his standard, assuming he would stick to his standard, he would land in this much-despised camp.

No one has contended for anything other than a league which would protect and safeguard the provisions of our Constitution and the Nation-old traditions of our country, and it marks a distinct advance upon the part of those who heretofore have been advocating the treaty. If it is conceivable that a treaty can be formed and a league of nations written which will respect the Constitution of the United States in its letter and its spirit, and which will safeguard and preserve the Nation-old traditions of our country, the matter would end here without any further debate, in my judgment, upon the part of anyone. The entire controversy has been over the question of how we can protect and safeguard our institutions as protected by our Constitution and our policies as established by our Nation-old traditions.

Those who have advocated the unconditional ratification of the treaty have, I assume, entertained the belief that there was nothing in the treaty or the league which runs counter to the Constitution. Certainly those who have been advocating reservations have taken the position that all they sought by the reservations was the safeguarding of the things which Mr. Hoover says reservations must safeguard before it secures his approval or his vote. Speaking for myself, and, I believe, for others who have been opposed to any league at all, we have based our opposition upon the proposition that those things could not be safeguarded and protected at all under any reservations which could be offered or which had been suggested. In a word, that a league and our Nation-old policies are irreconcilable.

So the whole question is what will protect our Nation-old traditions and what kind of a league can be written or framed which will safeguard those traditions and the principles of our Government as crystallized into our fundamental law? I think if Mr. Hoover will sit down and take his pencil and undertake to write a league of nations which will do what he says here is a prerequisite to his support, he will find himself in the position of some of us who have undertaken that same thing—that it is impossible to accomplish the feat. It can not be done. You must either give up our Nation-old policies or you must stay out of the league. You can not be entangled in European affairs and not be entangled at the same time. Viscount Grey said quite candidly that this was not only a plunge into the unknown but into a course absolutely contrary to our previous foreign policy.

It is very easy to say in popular parlance and as a matter of generalization that you want a league, but you want one which will not in any wise infringe upon our constitutional principles or our traditions. But when you sit down and reduce it to a practical concrete result it is a very difficult thing to do. Indeed, with all due respect to those who hold a different opinion, I insist that it is an impossible thing to do. You can not have a league of nations such as Mr. Hoover speaks of, because you can not have a league unless you give up some of those things which he says are prerequisite. Let us read his statement again:

> If the treaty goes over to the presidential election with reservations necessary to clarify the world's mind that there can be no infringement of the safeguards provided by our Constitution and our Nation-old traditions, then I must vote for the party that stands for the league.

Our Nation-old traditions, Mr. President, with reference to our foreign policy, will bear repeating, especially in view of Mr. Hoover's statement. Before going to another feature of it I am going to call attention to those Nation-old traditions, the basis upon which they rest, and ask my colleagues here how it is possible to conform a league to the principles thus announced in his statement as necessary to constitute a league which will secure his support.

Washington, in his Farewell Address, which constitutes the basis of our whole foreign policy, including the Monroe doctrine as well as the doctrine which is peculiarly associated with Washington's name, had this to say in the very beginning of our Government:

> The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.
> Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Mr. President, the very idea of a league, the fundamental principle upon which it must rest or not rest at all, is in direct contravention to this, the oldest and the most sacred of our Nation's traditions. While I do not mean to say this as an impeachment of Mr. Hoover's intellectual integrity, when a man says to the people of the United States that he is in favor of a league of nations which will preserve this tradition, he is stating a contradiction and he can never reduce his theory to practice. And it is the viciousness of the whole scheme that when you reduce it to practice where it will have to go, when the burden falls upon the masses of the American people, it will be a different thing from what it is when you talk about it from the rostrum.

> Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?
> It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world.

What is a league of nations but an alliance with all of the world who come into it, with Europe and with Asia and with Africa and with the islands of the sea? Every part of the habitable globe is included in it. How can one say that he wants a league with reservations which protects that which destroys the league itself if it does protect it? What we are entitled to, Mr. President, in dealing with the League of Nations, as I said in the very beginning of this controversy months ago, is candor with ourselves and with the American people, and not pretend to offer them something which in fact we are not giving them.

This is particularly pertinent:

> It is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another.

Is not that quite as true to-day as it was a hundred and odd years ago? Have you gentlemen observed anything since the armistice was signed on the part of either of our allies or associates which runs counter to this remarkable statement, courageous and wise, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another?

> It must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

It sounds like a note, Mr. President, from the Father of our Country to some of the well-meaning men who seem to think that a different rule will now apply, and that we can accept those altruistic theories which have never as yet obtained among the nations of the earth.

Kindred to the rule which I have just been stating, and a part of it, really, is the second proposition that relates to our Nation-old traditions. It is stated by Mr. Jefferson, who, perhaps, of all men who ever lived had the greatest capacity for stating with completeness and succinctness the entire proposition in a single sentence or paragraph. We remember when Mr. Monroe was dealing with the question or the problem which afterwards crystallized into what is known as the Monroe doctrine he wrote to Jefferson, then in his old age, at Monticello, asking for his advice, and Jefferson responded, saying:

> The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a Nation. This sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark upon it under circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe and particularly her own. She should, therefore, have a system of her own separate and apart from that of Europe.

The very object of the league, Mr. President, is to eliminate and destroy both of these principles. As it was originally drawn it wholly accomplished that fact. In my humble judgment, as it was drawn the second time it accomplishes that fact. There is no doubt that it accomplishes a destruction of what is known as the Washington policy, and there is just as little doubt in my mind that it destroys the other, and, in my humble opinion, with the reservations which have been written both of the policies will disappear, one instantly and the other inside of a decade.

These two policies have nowhere been stated better than they were stated by the President of the United States some three or four years ago. I am calling attention to this in order that those who are interested in Mr. Hoover's statement that this league must preserve these Nation-old traditions must take into consideration these announcements which I have read, which have been engrafted upon our political system, and which have become just as essential to our happiness as a people and power as a Nation as the Constitution of the United States itself.

Mr. Wilson said:

Every man who worthily stands in this presence should examine himself and see whether he has a full conception of what it means that America should live her own life. Washington saw it when he wrote his Farewell Address. It was not merely because of passing and transient circumstances that Washington said that we must keep free from entangling alliances. It was because he saw that no country had set its face in the same direction in which America had set her face. We can not form alliances with those who are not going our way and in our might and majesty and in the confidence and definiteness of our purpose we need not and we should not form alliances with any nation in the world.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator state the date and the occasion when the President delivered himself of those utterances?

Mr. BORAH. I can not state with exactness the date, but it was in May, 1915, as I now remember.

These, Mr. President, constitute the body of the Nation-old traditions which Mr. Hoover says these reservations should protect. I have this question to submit to Mr. Hoover: What is his plan for protecting them? Where is the framework of the league which will protect them? Will he submit it to the American people? Will he give the Senate the benefit of it? How can it be done? It is the thing about which we have been contending here for nine months. I venture to say that no proposition will thus be submitted, because when it comes, as I said, to working it out as a practical proposition you can not do it.

Mr. Taft and the advocates of the league have admitted that it is the destruction of our hitherto foreign policy; that it is an entire change of our national system so far as policies are concerned. I do not know, indeed I think I am authorized to say, from the President's speeches upon his western tour, that he regards it as an entire change of our foreign policy with the possible exception of the Monroe doctrine.

If the able gentleman does not tell us how we are to preserve our national traditions, how shall we or the national conventions know how it is to be done? Evidently he does not think that the reservations accomplish it because he does not indorse either set of reservations. Evidently he thinks that no program has yet been submitted which accomplishes it because he does not indorse any program. He simply lays down the policy and leaves us to deal with the rest. The rule he announces is perfectly sound; its execution will work disaster to his league.

Suppose we enter the League of Nations with article 10 left in it, which obligates us to protect the territorial integrity and political independence of all nations who join the league, immediately the policy of Washington disappears and immediately the policy of Monroe disappears, because it applies to the western continent as well as the eastern continent and makes no exception, neither in article 10 nor in article 11.

Do I understand that Mr. Hoover is in favor of joining the League of Nations with article 10 as it stands, or does he propose to eliminate it entirely? Does he propose to join the league with article 11 as it stands, or does he propose to eliminate it? The criticism which I have to offer is that we are left utterly in the dark as to what constitutes the kind of league which America should adopt.

There have been two reservations offered to article 10; one by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the majority side, and one by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the leader of the minority side. After some 60 days of careful study of these two reservations the only difference I find between the two is whatever difference arises by using the word "unless" instead of using the word "until." Mr. Hoover does not tell us whether he is an "unlessite" or an "untilite." [Laughter.] He does not seem to understand that upon these words hangs the fate of the world. Our reservation friends realize the stupendous importance of this difference. Those of us on the outside who have had some difficulty in regard to it follow blindly our leaders. The Lodge reservation reads as follows:

The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

The reservation offered by the Senator from Nebraska reads:

The United States does not assume any obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, until in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

Does not Mr. Hoover know the intellectual battle that is now going on here to divide the world between the "unlessites" and the "untilites"?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That the Senator quotes the reservation which he has just read as my reservation is another proof of the persistence of evil in the world. That was not a reservation which I offered; it was a reservation which was printed with my name attached to it; but I never offered it, for the reason that it was not perfected and was erroneously sent to the desk with a batch of other reservations during the time limit, when it was necessary to get all of the reservations before the Senate. I have made explanations of the situation several times, and I presume the Senator from Idaho is more interested in setting forth an interesting and amusing incident than he is in making any misrepresentation of my position. The reservations which I offered were those upon which the Senate voted and upon which it cast 41 votes. They are the reservations which have since received the approval of the President of the United States; but the reservation which the Senator has read was not a reservation that I offered.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I suggest, if the Senator will permit me, that it is very much to the credit of the Senator from Nebraska that he disavows the reservation just read by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I trust that I shall not be under any necessity of disavowing the reservation any further. I am perfectly willing to listen to the amusing discussion of it by the Senator from Idaho, but I trust no one will hereafter seriously charge me with its authorship.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, my personal regard for the Senator from Nebraska will hereafter guide me, and I shall not charge him with being the author of the reservation; but it will always be a source of speculation to the Senator from Idaho as to how the reservation got in under the wing and under the name of the Senator from Nebraska, and how it was permitted to be printed and to appear in the volume among all those reservations which were offered and to be offered as the reservation of the Senator from Nebraska. However, whether the Senator from Nebraska is the author of it or not, or whether it must go fatherless into oblivion, it does illustrate, to my mind, the controversy here between the reservationists.

So far as the principle which Mr. Hoover states is concerned—that is, the preserving of our "Nation-old traditions"—the Nation-old tradition excludes the reservation of the Senator from Massachusetts just as completely as it does the reservation which does not belong to the Senator from Nebraska; for, mind you, Mr. President, our Nation-old tradition did not contemplate our taking any part in European affairs, even by the action of Congress. The Father of his Country, Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Madison, Mr. Monroe, and Mr. Hamilton intended to exclude the Executive, the Congress, or any other governmental agency from interfering in foreign affairs at all. Both of those reservations provide that we may protect the territorial integrity and political independence of all these nations when Congress says so. Our Nation-old tradition said that Congress never shall say so. It was not to exclude the Executive from taking such action, but it was to turn the people of the United States as a people, through their Congresses and their Executives, away from the thought of engaging in such a policy. So I say that the Nation-old tradition excludes the reservation of the Senator from Massachusetts just as completely as it does the other reservation, the author of which is unknown, and as it does the policy announced by Mr. Hoover.

There will come a time, Mr. President, in this controversy when we shall have to stop talking generalities. When you meet the man and the woman in the street and in the field, those who deal with the concrete propositions of life, who are not given to the use of glittering generalities, but who deal with the things which touch them in their struggle for existence, you will have to answer to them, "How do you protect us from the embroilment in Europe?" What will they say in reply when you say, "We propose to protect the territorial integrity of these nations, but not until Congress or unless Congress says so"? Their reply will be to you, "Congress has no more right to say so than has the President of the United States. We, the people, propose to oppose that policy, and we do not propose that even Congress shall have the power to commit the men and women of this country to such a burden."

There may be some egotism in Congress which leads it to believe that it is a surer and safer guardian of the people's interests than the Executive, and vice versa; but the safeguard is back among the people of the United States, and they do not propose to protect the territorial integrity of other nations under the direction of Congress any more than they do under the direction of the President of the United States. If Congress should vote to do so, it would be violating the policy of Washington and Monroe just as completely as if the Executive did it alone.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very interestingly following the Senator's argument, but I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the policy of Washington is superior to the will of the people of the United States represented by Congress acting under the Constitution?

Mr. BORAH. I do, until you give the people of the United States an opportunity to pass upon the question. Do not misunderstand our position. If you will send this question to the people of the United States, let them go into the voting booths and direct their representatives to enter this league through proper changes of the Constitution and whatever else may be necessary, that is a different proposition; but the Congress of the United States has had no instruction upon this subject.

In 1916, Mr. President, if there was anything that was studiously avoided in the campaign it was this very issue. Neither the President of the United States nor his antagonist even broached the subject that we were going to enter upon such an enterprise; indeed, the President of the United States was elected upon the very contrary proposition; and Mr. Hughes never intimated that he proposed to change the policy of Washington and Monroe if he were elected. Was it made an issue in 1918, when the present Congress was being elected? When have the people had an opportunity to pass upon this question? Give them an opportunity; let them vote upon it. This is their Government and their country. If they want to enter into this enterprise, they have a perfect right to do so; they can change every line of the Constitution; they can annul the policies under which we have lived; but let us have their wisdom and their judgment upon the matter before we, as agents who have received no instructions, usurp our authority and say we are going to take this action.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not claim, does he, that there is anyone on this side of the aisle who contends that this Congress should assume that obligation? If Congress ever should assume it, the people will have an opportunity, under the reservation, to instruct their representatives when they elect them.

Mr. BORAH. To get out of it?

Mr. LENROOT. No; to assume the obligation.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes. If I understand the Senator from Wisconsin is now standing with me to send this question to a vote of the people, then we have no difference in the world, because the people have a perfect right to deal with the Constitution as they wish and to deal with our policies as they wish; so if we are going to the people on this proposition, that is a different thing; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this treaty is now back in the Senate for no other reason than to get it out of the next campaign if possible, to which aspect of the situation I am going to refer in a few days.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is now discussing the Lodge reservation to article 10. Under the Lodge reservation to article 10, if Congress ever does assume the obligation, it will not be this Congress but it will be a Congress elected when the people will have an opportunity in the election of that Congress to assume the obligation.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; but in the meantime the Senate has bound the people of the United States by a moral obligation to do this thing in case certain conditions arise.

Mr. LENROOT. There we do not agree.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, you have set aside the policy of Washington, because you have entered into a contract to do many things about the affairs of Europe.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield further, I can not at all agree with him upon that construction. By this reservation we assume nothing and leave Congress wholly free in the future to assume or not to assume the obligation. The policy of Washington remains, in so far as this reservation is concerned, until some future Congress, if it ever shall, shall change it. The ratification of the treaty with this reservation does not change it in the slightest degree.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the policy of Washington does not remain; we are sitting through our accredited representatives in the council; we are sitting through our representatives in the assembly; we are taking part in the political affairs of Europe. Whether it amounts to the preservation of the territorial integrity of some country or not, we are taking part in all the affairs of Europe, which is contrary to the policy of Washington, regardless of whether or not it ever rises to the point of actually protecting the territorial integrity of any nation of Europe.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, the Senator is getting away from article 10. I was confining my observations to the obligation assumed under article 10 and the reservation declining to assume it.

Mr. BORAH. But we have got to take the entire instrument. That is true so far as article 10 is concerned, technically speaking. For the sake of the argument—although I do not think it will bear that construction—we will take the Senator's construction of it, that the Congress would have the right to refuse to execute article 10; but under what conditions would it have the right to refuse to do so? Suppose our representatives on the council and our representatives on the assembly have cooperated with the representatives of the other nations of the earth on the council to such a point as that a moral obligation has arisen. Is the Congress of the United States free, as it is to-day? Has it the same latitude and the same discretion that it has to-day? If you think it has, take the situation as it is presented to us here in the Senate Chamber now. The reason why we are asked to do what we are asked to do to-day, or next week, is because our representatives in Versailles have committed us to the proposition and that we are morally bound to act. What is the trouble with our English friends now, and why are they becoming so estranged from us? It is because they say that our representative went thither and contracted, and now, in the language of Sir George Paish, who is here as a volunteer to instruct the American people in their moral obligations, we are moral delinquents for failing to comply with the course laid down by our accredited representative.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. The same position was assumed on the night of the 17th of January in New York City by the acting premier of Canada, his position being that we, the United States, having accredited the President as our representative to the Versailles conference, were morally bound by the conclusions which he reached and by the document to which he appended his signature.

Mr. BORAH. And that would be accentuated, Mr. President, by reason of the fact that the next gentleman that goes, if he goes, will not be only accredited by the Executive but he will be accredited by the Congress itself, and the Congress will have to respect him as the accredited representative of both departments of the Government.

Mr. President, on other features of this matter, for I have digressed somewhat——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. Without discussing whether or not the League of Nations involves a departure from the traditional policy announced by Washington in his Farewell Address, I was interested to know what the Senator meant when he said—at least I so interpreted his remark—that if we adopt the League of Nations we would have to modify or change the Constitution of the United States, or at least it would impose obligations which would be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States. I was anxious to know what particular clauses of the Constitution of the United States would be violated by entering into the League of Nations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I would prefer to go on with my remarks along other lines; but I will say, in order that the Senator may know that I did not speak inadvisedly with reference to my own view, that I do think this necessitates either a disregard of the Constitution of the United States or, if we conform to it, a change, in view of the fact that the league creates an office unknown to the Constitution and puts in that office an officer unknown to the Constitution and delegates authority to bind the United States. We create an office unknown to the Constitution. We give the officer powers unknown to the Constitution. The Congress of the United States is delegating certain powers to that officer. The Congress has no authority to delegate any such powers, no authority to create any such office, no authority to create any such officer or to give him any such power. There are other constitutional objections, but I can not discuss them at this time.

Mr. President, I want to refer now for a few moments to the treaty itself, in view of Mr. Hoover's interview, and particularly in view of Mr. Hoover's great opportunity for knowing some things concerning the treaty and its effect upon Europe which some of us have not had an opportunity to know.

I hold in my hand a book entitled "The Economic Consequences of the Peace," by J. M. Keynes. I presume that Senators have generally read this book. If they have not, I know they will find it exceedingly interesting. I wish not only that they could all find time to read it, but, more especially, that it could be read by the people of the United States very generally. Let me say in passing that it would be well for those who may be interested in the book to read first the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] delivered in the Senate Chamber on the 29th of August last. It is remarkable to what an extent this book sustains the views then expressed by the Senator and the prophecies, if I may use the term, which he made with reference to the effect of this treaty upon Europe.

This book is written by a gentleman who is now the editor of the Economic Journal in England, has been for many years associated with the treasury department, was a member of the supreme economic council at Paris, and, as I understand, was a visitor to this country with Lord Reading. He has had an excellent opportunity to study this particular situation, and he has been all his life a student of the subject matter, economy and finance, with which he particularly deals when he discusses the probable effect of the German treaty. His contention is that the German treaty consigns continental Europe to perpetual famine and chronic revolution; that unless the treaty is completely revised and rewritten it must inevitably result that the economic system of Europe will be destroyed, which will result in the loss of millions of lives and in revolution after revolution, which necessarily follows when a people find themselves in the condition to which the people of Europe will be reduced. He shows, in the first place, that the German economic system was the economic system of Europe, around which the economic system of all the other countries of Europe was grouped; that this treaty industriously and effectively destroys the only economic system in Europe which could take care of the appetites and clothe the people, 300,000,000 in number, living in continental Europe; and that the United States—this is not his language, but the inference which in my judgment may be drawn from it—must necessarily enter upon an endless task of pouring funds into continental Europe to feed those who are to be impoverished by reason of the German treaty. I understand—I think I saw it in print; I know I have heard it several times—that Mr. Hoover himself stated that the German treaty reduced Austria to perpetual famine. What I should like to know is if the judgment of Mr. Hoover, who asks that the pending treaty should receive the approval of the people of the United States, is in accordance with that of the great economists of England who have already denounced the treaty as an impossible one, working disaster and ruin to an entire continent.

Mr. Hoover has been there. He has studied the situation. He knows the conditions, financial and economic. There is no one in the United States who has any better or greater opportunity to know the situation than Mr. Hoover. No one could advise with more effectiveness and success as to the economic consequences of this treaty, so far as this country is concerned, than Mr. Hoover himself; and I call upon him, as one who has stated the policies which should guide the two great parties of this country, to advise the two great parties and the Senate of the United States, and particularly the people of the United States, as to whether or not the conclusions drawn by Mr. Keynes are correct conclusions. If they are, we should hold back from the ratification of this treaty as we would hold back from being participants in wholesale murder.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The picture that the Senator draws from the work of Mr. Keynes is very impressive, and I sympathize a good deal with that English economist's view that prostrating Germany and rendering Germany helpless is possibly a damage to all Europe; but has the Senator from Idaho contemplated the consequences of American failure to become a party to the treaty, so as to have membership on the all-powerful reparations commission? These great powers of exacting tribute and reparations from Germany, and the control of the economic conditions in Germany, are vested in this commission on reparations; and the attitude of that commission toward Germany is going to be the cause of alleviating or of perpetuating the evils of which Mr. Keynes in his book speaks. Now, if America becomes a member of that commission, America's influence on the commission will necessarily become very powerful. Already, whether it is the result of Mr. Keynes's book or of other propaganda in Great Britain, it is known that the British attitude toward Germany is changing, and that Great Britain proposes so to modify the terms of the treaty, through her influence on the reparations commission, as to make it possible for Germany to produce and play her part in the world; and Great Britain's influence with France will be to the same effect.

Now, I ask the Senator from Idaho this question: Will not the presence of the United States upon the reparations commission have a beneficial influence in causing such a modification of the terms exacted from Germany as to give the German people a chance to get upon their feet? Will not the American influence be all in the direction of moderation and alleviation; and will not that presence, therefore, be of tremendous benefit in permitting the economic conditions in Europe to be so modified and improved that the restoration of normal conditions will be hastened?

To my mind, the presence of the United States upon the reparations commission will be of inestimable value in bringing about that result in Europe. The United States will be a disinterested member.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course the influence of the United States and the power of the United States may be something after we join the league, and something after we become a member of the reparations commission; but how infinitely greater it is, how commanding it is just now, if we say to France—because this treaty, according to this book, is France's idea crystallized—"We will assume no such burden and we will have no part in any such cruel and unjust situation until you consent to modify this treaty in accordance with what the President of the United States insisted upon at Versailles"! Let us stay out until they remedy the wrong which they themselves made possible.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator from Idaho made reference a moment ago to a speech that I made in the Senate on the 29th of August on this subject. I want to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that in that speech I avowed, in these terms, that its sole and only purpose was to advance the proposition that it was impossible for Germany to carry out the terms of the treaty. I predicated that statement not only upon my own conception, after a very close analysis of the terms of the treaty, as to the weight of the obligations that were laid upon the back of Germany, but I took the testimony of Mr. Bernard Baruch, who, in compliance with a request from the State Department to send an expert on the economic features of the treaty, testified under my cross-examination that in his opinion Germany would never be able to carry out the terms of the treaty. I asked him if he considered it good business to lay upon the back of a debtor a burden that he could not carry, and he replied that he did not think it was good business.

The obvious situation is that economically Europe is pyramided upon Germany. European solvency either depends upon Germany being able to pay a fair indemnity, or it depends upon the United States advancing more money to keep Europe going; and if one or the other of those two things is not accomplished, and speedily accomplished, we have nothing but a prospect of Bolshevism and anarchy throughout the entire Continent of Europe.

If the Senator will permit me now to say something in reply to the Senator from Nebraska, it is true that the reparations commission have the power to reduce or increase the amount of the reparations. They can increase them by a majority vote without reference to their Governments. The members of the commission themselves have that authority; but they can not abate one farthing of the reparations without the unanimous vote of all of the commissioners, backed up and supported by the action of their Governments. Now, I ask, what prospect is there that those who exacted those extraordinary, cruel, and unusual terms will voluntarily reduce them? And to the extent that there is throughout the world—and there is throughout the world—a very great feeling that this treaty must be modified, I attribute it largely to the fact that up to now the United States has refused to become a party to it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it ought to be stated here that this book discloses that the President of the United States and his advisers were from the beginning opposed to the treaty in its terms. I think there is no doubt that America's influence was thrown entirely against the treaty in the respects in which we now make complaint of the treaty, but it did no good; it did not accomplish anything. All of which ought to answer the contention that once in we can effectuate a change.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] I know has read the book and he recalls that in chapter 3 the author outlines and narrates how Mr. Clemenceau and Mr. George dealt with the President, and how they outgeneraled the President and accomplished that which the President did not desire, but which they intended from the beginning to have. It is a revelation bearing upon the proposition that Europe has changed her nature. So has the leopard!

I will read now the concluding paragraph of chapter 3 for the benefit of the Senate, and then I will take up the book further. It seems that Mr. Clemenceau and Mr. George had accomplished their purpose and had a great deal of trouble in getting the President up to the point where he would agree to it. Then after they had accomplished it and found out what a stupendous burden they had put upon Germany and what would be the consequences it would have upon the rest of them, they immediately came to the conclusion that perhaps they had better modify the treaty a little. They started out then to get the President to change back and modify that to which he had consented, and that is disposed of in this fashion:

Thus it was that Clemenceau brought to success what had seemed to be, a few months before, the extraordinary and impossible proposal that the Germans should not be heard. If only the President had not been so conscientious, if only he had not concealed from himself what he had been doing, even at the last moment, he was in a position to have recovered lost ground and to have achieved some very considerable successes. But the President was set. His arms and legs had been spliced by the surgeons to a certain posture, and they must be broken again before they could be altered. To his horror, Mr. Lloyd-George, desiring at the last moment all the moderation he dared, discovered that he could not in five days persuade the President of error in what it had taken five months to prove to him to be just and right. After all, it was harder to debamboozle this old Presbyterian than it had been to bamboozle him; for the former involved his belief in and respect for himself.

I leave that for the contemplation of the Senator as to what effect our representative would have on the reparation commission when he would have to have a unanimous vote of the commission. Let us have the bamboozling and debamboozling this time before we are in where we are again at their mercy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know whether it will disturb the Senator from Idaho, but I should like to have him recite to the Senate, as the author of that book does, what were the causes which led Lloyd-George to make those foolish exactions of Germany.

Mr. BORAH. I will come to that as I go along.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That would fit in very well now. It was because Lloyd-George wanted to try the referendum on the English people and insisted on having an election. Instead of exerting his responsibility as head of the British Government, he went into a British campaign, and in the campaign, as the result of political excitement and against his own judgment, he was made to promise to the British people impossible exactions of Germany, which he had to carry out when he got to Paris.

Mr. BORAH. The United States is not going to become responsible for the political exigency or insincerity of Mr. Lloyd-George. I read now from page 3 of the book:

But the spokesmen of the French and British peoples have run the risk of completing the ruin, which Germany began, by a peace which, if it is carried into effect, must impair yet further, when it might have restored, the delicate, complicated organization, already shaken and broken by war, through which along the European peoples can employ themselves and live.

On page 25 the author says:

The war had so shaken this system as to endanger the life of Europe altogether. A great part of the Continent was sick and dying; its population was greatly in excess of the numbers for which a livelihood was available; its organization was destroyed; its transport system ruptured; and its food supplies terribly impaired.

It was the task of the peace conference to honor engagements and to satisfy justice; but not less to reestablish life and to heal wounds. These tasks were dictated as much by prudence as by the magnanimity which the wisdom of antiquity approved in victors. We will examine in the following chapters the actual character of the peace.

Yes; if the peace and happiness of Europe was to be considered it was of first concern to restore Europe's economic system. Not to do so was to put in peril the whole social structure of Europe and to lay heavy burdens upon civilized people everywhere. It was to punish the helpless and the innocent and to starve women and children by the thousands, even millions.

I am only running through the book to get a certain drift of it in order to make some comments later.

On page 51 the author says:

The President's attitude to his colleagues had now become: I want to meet you so far as I can; I see your difficulties, and I should like to be able to agree to what you propose; but I can do nothing that is not just and right; and you must first of all show me that what you want does really fall within the words of the pronouncements which are binding on me.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that my colleagues and many other people have thought that I have been a little severe in my language toward the men who represented France and England at the conference, but nothing I can say within the parliamentary rules of this Chamber would be too severe. When you think of the fact that they have lightly wrecked the entire economic system of an entire continent and reduced to starvation millions of people, and perhaps prevented the world peace from coming at all in this decade, there is no language too severe for such men. I am not passing my judgment upon them; I am reading the judgment of a man who sat there, an educated gentleman, an instructed gentleman, advising against this and denouncing those who finally consummated it. This treaty in its consequences is a crime born of blind revenge and insatiable greed.

I read further:

Then began the weaving of that web of sophistry and Jesuitical exegesis that was finally to clothe with insincerity the language and substance of the whole treaty. The word was issued to the witches of all Paris:

Fair is foul, and foul is fair,
Hover through the fog and filthy air.

The subtlest sophisters and most hypocritical draftsmen were set to work and produced many ingenious exercises which might have deceived for more than an hour a cleverer man than the President.

If we can understand the English language, Mr. President, we have here an indictment by a responsible gentleman who was an official at the conference that these gentlemen sitting with the President deliberately sat down to deceive him and to deceive the American representatives into signing a treaty which means disaster to the whole European Continent. And now, while this is being revealed and as the facts are coming out, we, as a Senate, are asked by the same men or the same representatives to hasten to complete the work of the President. Is it not time that we, with the facts that are being divulged, stop and reflect upon that which we are about to do?

The author here gives a number of illustrations of the way in which this was accomplished, which I will not take the time to read. I read now from page 56:

The future life of Europe was not their concern; its means of livelihood was not their anxiety. Their preoccupations, good and bad alike, related to frontiers and nationalities, to the balance of power, to imperial aggrandizements, to the future enfeeblement of a strong and dangerous enemy, to revenge, and to the shifting by the victors of their unbearable financial burdens onto the shoulders of the defeated.

Two rival schemes for the future polity of the world took the field—the 14 points of the President and the Carthaginian peace of M. Clemenceau.

What have the advocates of the league done to inform our people of this dishonest dickering at Versailles, all of which has resulted so shamefully? What have they said to the people concerning this fearful, cruel burden which we assume when we ratify this treaty? Tell the people the truth. They have been deceived and kept in the dark long enough. They will have to carry this burden.

The writer next shows how the Carthaginian peace of Clemenceau finally obtained.

Upon page 65 he says:

The German economic system as it existed before the war depended on three main factors:

1. Overseas commerce as represented by her mercantile marine, her colonies, her foreign investments, her exports, and the overseas connections of her merchants; 2. The exploitation of her coal and iron and the industries built upon them; 3. Her transport and tariff system. Of these the first, while not the least important, was certainly the most vulnerable. The treaty aims at the systematic destruction of all three, but principally of the first two.

The Senator from Nebraska a few moments ago spoke of the reparation commission. The author says, on page 78:

The reparation commission is empowered, up to May 1, 1921, to demand payment up to $5,000,000,000 in such manner as they may fix, "whether in gold, commodities, ships, securities, or otherwise." This provision has the effect of intrusting to the reparation commission for the period in question dictatorial powers over all German property of every description whatever. They can, under this article, point to any specific business, enterprise, or property, whether within or outside Germany, and demand its surrender; and their authority would appear to extend not only to property existing at the date of the peace but also to any which may be created or acquired at any time in the course of the next 18 months.

Such a power was never before lodged in a tribunal nor in any single individual, I presume, in the history of the world. It enables the reparation commission to seize any property that it may find, according to its own discretion, and to demand the surrender of it, whether it be inside of Germany or outside of Germany, if it belongs to Germany or German nationals.

At page 79 the author says:

Thus the powers of the reparation commission, with which I deal more particularly in the next chapter, can be employed to destroy Germany's commercial and economic organization as well as to exact payment.

On page 94 the book says:

But this is not yet the whole problem. If France and Italy are to make good their own deficiencies in coal from the output of Germany, then northern Europe, Switzerland, and Austria, which previously drew their coal in large part from Germany's exportable surplus, must be starved of their supplies. Before the war 13,600,000 tons of Germany's coal exports went to Austria-Hungary. Inasmuch as nearly all the coal-fields of the former Empire lie outside what is now German-Austria, the industrial ruin of this latter State, if she can not obtain coal from Germany, will be complete. The case of Germany's neutral neighbors, who were formerly supplied in part from Great Britain but in large part from Germany, will be hardly less serious.

Mr. President, in a few days we will have before us a bill appropriating $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 for the purpose of taking care of the people in Europe who, under the German treaty, are deprived of an opportunity of earning a livelihood even if they desire to do so. We are asked at one end of the transaction to agree to a treaty which is impoverishing the people, and we are asked here to appropriate money to feed those people whom we have impoverished, and no one knows how long it is to continue. Austria can never recover under the treaty, if this gentleman is correct. The neutral adjoining nations are in very little better condition. Not only are we signing an unjust and an intolerable treaty, but we are committing ourselves to the proposition of feeding interminably those whom they have impoverished.

It was one thing to punish Germany, it was one thing to administer justice to those who had brought upon the world this disaster, but it was an entirely different thing to reduce countless millions to starvation by reason of depriving Germany of the opportunity of responding to a judgment which justice would assess against her. As the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] said in his interrogatory to the witness, it was an unwise thing to put upon a debtor a debt that she could not pay, but it was a cruel and murderous thing to go further and destroy her capacity not only to feed her own but to help take care of millions in adjoining countries.

I now read from page 96:

If the distribution of the European coal supplies is to be a scramble in which France is satisfied first, Italy next, and everyone else takes their chance, the industrial future of Europe is black and the prospects of revolution very good.

I will hasten on through. Mr. President, I call attention now to page 226. This chapter is entitled "Europe after the treaty." I read:

This chapter must be one of pessimism. The treaty includes no provisions for the economic rehabilitation of Europe—

The supremest question which could have been presented to the conference—

nothing to make the defeated Central Empires into good neighbors, nothing to stabilize the new States of Europe, nothing to reclaim Russia; nor does it provide in any way a compact of economic solidarity amongst the Allies themselves; no arrangement was reached at Paris for restoring the disordered finances of France and Italy or to adjust the systems of the Old World and the New.

The council of four paid no attention to these issues, being preoccupied with others—Clemenceau to crush the economic life of his enemy; Lloyd-George to do a deal and bring home something which would pass muster for a week; the President to do nothing that was not just and right. It is an extraordinary fact that the fundamental economic problems of a Europe starving and disintegrating before their eyes was the one question in which it was impossible to arouse the interest of the four. Reparation was their main excursion into the economic field, and they settled it as a problem of theology, of politics, of electoral chicane—from every point of view except that of the economic future of the States whose destiny they were handling.

The Senator from Nebraska is not present, but that is an answer to his question—

And yet we are hastening under the whip to see if we can not get our name permanently and forever attached to this treaty, which has been in existence a few months and is now, by reason of the disaster which it is working, receiving the condemnation of the intellects of Europe.

I read further:

The essential facts of the situation as I see them are expressed simply. Europe consists of the densest aggregation of population in the history of the world. This population is accustomed to a relatively high standard of life, in which even now some sections of it anticipate improvement rather than deterioration. In relation to other continents, Europe is not self-sufficient; in particular, it can not feed itself. Internally the population is not evenly distributed, but much of it is crowded into a relatively small number of dense industrial centers. This population secured for itself a livelihood before the war, without much margin of surplus, by means of a delicate and immensely complicated organization, of which the foundations were supported by coal, iron, transport, and an unbroken supply of imported food and raw materials from other continents. By the destruction of this organization and the interruption of the stream of supplies, a part of this population is deprived of its means of livelihood.

Again, on page 230, he says:

To put the peace conditions into execution would logically involve, therefore, the loss of several millions of persons in Germany. This catastrophe would not be long in coming about, seeing that the health of the population has been broken down during the war by the blockade and during the armistice by the aggravation of the blockade of famine. No help, however great or over however long a period it were continued, could prevent these deaths en masse. "We do not know—

This is a quotation from the report of the Germans at the peace conference, and then the author makes a comment upon their report:

"We do not know, and, indeed, we doubt," the report concludes, "whether the delegates of the allied and associated powers realize the inevitable consequences which will take place if Germany, an industrial State, very thickly populated, closely bound up with the economic system of the world and under the necessity of importing enormous quantities of raw material and foodstuffs, suddenly finds herself pushed back to the phase of her development which corresponds to her economic condition and the numbers of her population as they were half a century ago. Those who sign this treaty will sign the death sentence of many millions of German men, women, and children."

After studying and reflecting upon this question for months, the author further says:

I know of no adequate answer to these words. The indictment is at least as true of the Austrian as of the German settlement. This is the fundamental problem in front of us, before which questions of territorial adjustment and the balance of European power are insignificant.

One other quotation, Mr. President:

It is these articles which have reconciled to the league some of its original opponents—

Referring to certain articles of the league—and now hope to make of it another Holy Alliance for the perpetuation of the economic ruin of their enemies and the balance of power in their own interests, which they believe themselves to have established by the peace.

Mr. President, if any Senator here had brought any such indictment as that against this treaty he would have been discredited at once as being oversympathetic with those to receive the punishment; but this book is written by one who can not be charged with sympathy as against a just and righteous punishment. It is written by one, however, who understands what this treaty is to do as an economic proposition to the entire Continent of Europe. As he says in another place, France can not escape; Italy can not escape; ruin must accompany the entire Continent of Europe, and, perhaps, England as well.

These are things which I should like to have Mr. Hoover's judgment concerning—a man who has been in Europe, who knows the situation, who has studied it—whether or not we, as a people, should become a party to that which is denounced as a disaster. If it is not as described here in the book, if the consequences foreshadowed are not justified, let us know that fact; let us have the opinion of the man who is in the best position to advise us; but, on the other hand, if anything like that is true which is pictured here, it is the solemn obligation and duty of the Senate, regardless of the demands of the uninformed, to hold back the honor and the obligations of the United States until the remedy is afforded—the infamy wiped out. From the bottom of my heart I thank God that one by one those responsible for forcing this treaty and deceiving our representatives are receiving judgment at the hands of the people.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Granting, now, that the picture drawn by the author from whom the Senator from Idaho has read is true, that the economic condition described is the result of the hard terms of the treaty which has been imposed on Germany and Austria; granting, now, that we adopt the so-called Lodge reservation, for example, thus safeguarding American institutions and American liberty and American rights, might we not by the ratification of the treaty, by becoming a member of the League of Nations, have a wholesome influence, a stabilizing and steadying effect upon the conditions there? Might not our counsel and our advice in a council of the League of Nations concerning the economic conditions of the European countries be worth while and help to mitigate some of the horrors which have been described?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know whether the Senator from South Dakota was present when the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] answered practically the same question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]; but if we accomplish anything we would have to accomplish it as members of the reparation commission.

Mr. STERLING. I had that in mind when I asked the question. Aside from the power of the reparation commission, aside from the influences that might be brought against certain members of the reparation commission—I grant them all—aside from that, might we not have, by joining the league under the terms prescribed by the reservations, anyway, have a good and wholesome influence and thus benefit the whole world, ourselves as well as them?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. The greatest care was taken that the League of Nations should have nothing to do with reparations. The reparations are all to be handled by the reparation commission, and the reparation commission sits in secret. It takes no cognizance of the League of Nations. It is proceeding now by absolutely and utterly ignoring the existence of the League of Nations; and that will be the rule right along. It is like joining one organization for the purpose of influencing another. You have got to be in the organization itself in order to do so.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] means is that the moral influence of the presence of a representative of America would have a tremendous effect. I can only judge the future by the past. This was all done as against the moral influence of a very distinguished American. Will we never get through indulging in these fancies? I would not object to them ordinarily, but they are very costly not only in treasure but even in human life.

Mr. STERLING. But, may I say to the Senator from Idaho, it was done under peculiar circumstances?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and there will always be peculiar circumstances in Europe.

Mr. STERLING. It was done under peculiar conditions, when the feeling upon the part of France, for example, was strong as against Germany, the power that she had feared for generations, for that matter; and now in fear that she might, unless Germany was stripped of everything, again rise against her, she insisted on exacting these tremendous punishments.

Mr. BORAH. She insists on it now. According to the press dispatch yesterday in the New York Sun, France has notified England that she will not waive a cent.

Mr. STERLING. But may not time and the witnessing of the conditions that exist as a result of the treaty have their effect even upon France?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I think time is a very effectual thing in this case; I want it on our side, and I am going to suggest to the Senator how to get a little time upon this matter. If we are going into this, and America, by reason of being in the league and a member of the reparations commission, is going to have a very heavy burden to carry, the Senator from South Dakota and myself will not be very greatly affected by it; we will pay our small portion of the taxes, but we will not be greatly affected; the people at large will have to carry this burden. We have already sent $100,000,000 over there and poured it into this situation. We are now being asked to send $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 more, and this book advises that there is no end of it. The taxpayers of the country have got to assume that burden; and, as a mere matter of equity and talking about the question of fairness, is it just to impose that burden upon the American people until the American people have an opportunity to know all the facts and to pass judgment upon the matter themselves? Does the Senator from South Dakota feel that he is authorized, as an agent, to enter into a bankrupt concern which will not affect him very much but which will, perhaps, ruin his principal?

Mr. STERLING. In regard to any contributions we may be asked to make, I feel we can hardly resist the appeals of the destitute and the starving.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; we can not resist them very well, but we can refuse to become a party to making them destitute, and we can refuse to become a party to reducing them to starvation. According to this book and the discussion of the question it contains, the condition in Europe is brought about at the present time by reason of the terms of the treaty. Austria can not go to work this year or next year; Hungary is in no better position, and therefore we are upon the one hand joining in a proposition which will condemn them to starvation and, of course, then we can not refuse to feed them after we have been a party to starving them.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, that condition exists irrespective, as I understand, of whether or not we ratify the treaty. The treaty is in force and effect, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BORAH. But if we do not ratify the treaty until that condition is remedied it will be remedied, and if we say that the treaty is such that we can not accede to it because of its hard terms and because of its economic effect upon Europe, it will be changed. The Senator would not go into the most ordinary business affairs of life under any such condition as he asks this Republic to go into this matter. If the Senator were asked to put $500 into a business concern with anything like the outlook that confronts the American people when they go behind this guaranty he would not consider it for a single moment.

What I contend is this: If by reason of local conditions in France and England a treaty was written which is one which we can not in good conscience and in justice sign, it is but the part of prudence and common sense and wisdom for us before we become a party to it to insist upon the revision of the treaty according to justice and not according to election speeches.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the author from whom he has quoted discusses at all the question of America and the League of Nations?

Mr. BORAH. Incidentally, yes. I do not know that I can turn to it, but I believe there is one paragraph on page 267, not very exactly to the point concerning which the Senator asks but indirectly so. It is as follows:

> But if this view of nations and of their relation to one another is adopted by the democracies of western Europe and is financed by the United States, Heaven help us all. If we aim deliberately at the impoverishment of central Europe, vengeance, I dare predict, will not limp. Nothing can then delay for very long that final civil war between the forces of reaction and the despairing convulsions of revolution, before which the horrors of the late German war will fade into nothing, and which will destroy, whoever is victor, the civilization and the progress of our generation. Even though the result disappoint us, must we not base our actions on better expectations and believe that the prosperity and happiness of one country promotes that of others, that the solidarity of man is not a fiction, and that nations can still afford to treat other nations as fellow creatures?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Evidently the author invokes the aid of Heaven if they depend upon America, not that America could not render the help if she wanted to.

Mr. BORAH. Laying aside the humorous significance of the Senator's remarks, what he means is that if the treaty stands in its present terms and America nevertheless undertakes to finance Europe, disaster will follow just the same in Europe; what he means is that America can not by anything she may do overcome the disaster which must inevitably follow from the terms of the treaty. Shall we nevertheless with shameless indifference hasten on to stain the honor of this Republic by approving the whole miserable, deceitful, cruel scheme? Will not Mr. Hoover state frankly to the public what he has stated frankly in private concerning the world's unparalleled infamy—called the German treaty? If he will state publicly the things he has stated privately, as reported to me by my colleagues who enjoy the close friendship of Mr. Hoover, he will indeed render a service to his countrymen.

POWERS OF FUEL ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to discuss the unfinished business, and I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum, in order to give him an opportunity to be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. KING. I have not suggested the absence of a quorum as yet.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. If the Senator from New Jersey desires to proceed, I will yield to him.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution which I desire to have read and for the immediate consideration of which I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to be advised as to the effect that will have upon the unfinished business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent has been requested to present the resolution, and it is directed to be read in order that the Chair may ascertain whether there is objection.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 303), as follows:

Resolved, That the Director General of Railroads is hereby directed to report to the Senate as soon as practicable—

1. The extent of the authority, powers, and duties with respect to the shipment, distribution, apportionment, or storage of coal or coke, which were originally delegated to the Fuel Administrator under an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, as amended, and the proclamations or orders thereunder, subsequently transferred to the Director General of Railroads by the Executive order of November 22, 1919, or any prior or subsequent proclamation or order.

2. The exercise by the Director General of Railroads at the present time of the powers so delegated and the extent to which any authority, power, or duty has been extended, enlarged, or curtailed by the President since the original delegation.

3. The exact contents of all papers, documents, or memoranda delegating or conferring authority, powers, or duties upon the Director General of Railroads with respect to the shipment, distribution, apportionment, or storage of coal or coke under or by virtue of such act of August 10, 1917, as amended.

4. The agency or agencies under the control of the Director General of Railroads now exercising such transferred or delegated authority, powers, or duties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is, Shall the resolution be agreed to?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I simply want to explain to the Senate my object in introducing this resolution.

After Dr. Garfield resigned, I understand that the powers of the Fuel Administration were transferred to the Director General of Railroads. There have been numerous inquiries from my State, from purchasers of coal, as to what department they can appeal to; and we failed to find, upon investigation, where the authority rests. I should like to know, so as to inform my constituents whether or not the Director General has taken over all the powers conferred on the Fuel Administrator under the Lever Act. This is simply a resolution asking for a report on that subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the resolution. I think it ought to pass. It occurs to me, however, that at the same time we might ask for information in reference to the distribution or redistribution of empty freight cars, under a recent order, for grain purposes; and I wonder if the Senator from New Jersey has any objection to adding another section dealing with that subject?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. KING. On yesterday the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] offered a resolution. I objected to its consideration if he insisted on the resolution going to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I stated that I was entirely willing that it should be considered and passed, and should vote for it, if it was referred to the appropriate committee, to wit, the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I should like to inquire whether that resolution was called up this morning by the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. My understanding is that it was not called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota gave notice that it would be called up to-morrow.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have no objection to an amendment to the effect suggested by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Tennessee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely.

Mr. NORRIS. I certainly have no objection to the amendment of the resolution as the Senator suggests; but if it covers the same ground, as I anticipate it will, that is covered by the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota——

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether it does or not. It is a matter that is very acute.

Mr. NORRIS. I should feel obliged to object to it now in that event, because the Senator from North Dakota is not here. He gave notice to-day that he would call up his resolution to-morrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator if he is sure that the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota covers the exact matter to which I have referred?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am not sure; but from what I heard the Senator state in regard to it I am inclined to think it does. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah in regard to that. He heard them both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota is here and will be submitted to the Senator from Tennessee for his examination.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, but the resolution offered by the Senator from North Dakota asked for a certain investigation by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as to cars for the shipment of wheat, and I objected to its reference to that committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I was here. I know just what happened then; but the point I am raising is that if the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee covers the same ground that is covered by the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota, I do not think it ought to be pressed until the Senator from North Dakota is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator about that, and it seems that my proposed amendment does cover substantially the same matter that is covered in the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota and therefore I shall withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota will be called up to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, on last Friday I gave notice under the rule that I would on this day submit a proposed amendment to the rules affecting Rule XXII. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Rules that that committee is now considering similar amendments. I therefore offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 304) was referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXII be amended by striking out the following language now contained in the last paragraph of said rule, viz:

"Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time."

HON. FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am sorry to say the Government will soon lose the services of one of its ablest, most valuable, most faithful, and most efficient public officials. The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, has tendered his resignation, effective the 1st of March, and it has been accepted. Secretary Lane is a statesman of large vision, broad mind, and far-seeing judgment. He has been an indefatigable worker for the advancement of this country, for the development of its industrial and economic resources, and for the creation of larger opportunities for American citizens of this and future generations.

Much of the legislation for the economic and industrial development of the resources of this country, which is now about to come to fruition, is in large part the result of the indefatigable efforts and persistent work of Secretary Lane. The influence which he has had in that field will bear beneficial results for generations to come. I regret greatly the retirement from public life of Secretary Lane. I am sorry for our Government to lose the services of so faithful, so devoted, and so capable an official. He has given the best part of his life to the public, and he will be missed.

In the editorial columns of the Washington Post of yesterday appeared a very true and well-merited tribute to the worth and ability of Secretary Lane and his great services to the country. I heartily indorse its sentiments and statements, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be included in the RECORD as requested.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MR. LANE'S RESIGNATION.

"The resignation of Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane will prove a distinct loss to the public service. No higher compliment than this could be paid to a man who has spent 21 years, the best years of his life, serving the people.

"Mr. Lane is recognized as one of the best-equipped men identified with the Wilson administration; in fact, one whose equipment has been far superior to the tasks assigned him, whose ability the President has not availed himself of to the full. Therefore it is not remarkable that there should come from those who have appreciated his services the suggestion of his name in connection with the presidential nomination, ignoring the fact that he is constitutionally debarred from the Presidency by having been born in Canada. The error is entirely excusable, since the public is not so interested in the birthplace of a public official as in his capability. Were Mr. Lane of American birth there is little doubt that he now would be seriously considered for the leadership of his party in the approaching campaign.

"In his letter of resignation to the President, Secretary Lane regrets the necessity which compels him to leave the Cabinet, but says 'I must now think of other duties.' The meaning of that phrase is all too clear to those who have given their time to the public service. It means that after 21 years in office he must now get out into the world and earn a competence for himself and his family, having been unable to do this on the modest salaries of the offices he has held. And he will earn it handily if the business world appreciates brains and energy and courage.

"Although born in Prince Edward Island, Mr. Lane at an early age was taken to California by his parents, and to all intents and purposes is a native son. After having served as corporation counsel of San Francisco from 1897 to 1902, during which time he was active in Democratic politics and received the vote of his party for United States Senator, he was appointed in 1905 a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He served with distinction and ability on that body until 1913, when he became Secretary of the Interior.

"Through the troublous times of the past three years the sound judgment and clear utterance of Secretary Lane have been of help to the President and to the country. There were times when it was expected that he would be assigned to more vital work during the war, but for inscrutable reasons this was not done. Indeed, there were times when his advice was rejected, to the public injury as after events proved, but Mr. Lane, with the true spirit of a patriot, subordinated his personal feelings to the desire to serve his country in the great emergency.

"He leaves the Cabinet with a fine record of accomplishment, with the cordial good wishes of the President and his fellow Cabinet members, and with the respect and gratitude of his countrymen. There isn't much more than this to be had out of life, but whatever there is Mr. Lane is entitled to it."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I can not allow the opportunity suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Montana to go by without stating that Hon. Franklin K. Lane is a citizen of California, and that California is well pleased with the discharge by him of important duties extending over a period of nearly 20 years of public service, largely in the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Department of the Interior. His career has been highly useful, distinguished, and honorable.

I am sure I express the feeling of California and of the Nation as well when I say that his severance of his relations with the public service is a matter of profound regret.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smoot
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Sterling
Brandegee	Kellogg	New	Sutherland
Capper	King	Norris	Thomas
Curtis	Kirby	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Knox	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Pomerene	Warren
Gronna	McCormick	Robinson	Watson
Harris	McCumber	Sheppard	Wolcott
Harrison	McKellar	Sherman
Henderson	McLean	Simmons
Hitchcock	McNary	Smith, Ga.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], in attendance on a meeting of a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only 45 Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. STERLING. Has the list of the absentees been called?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. NUGENT, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. STANLEY, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

Mr. FRANCE, Mr. COLT, Mr. OWEN, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. KEYES, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. BALL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] expects to address the Senate on the pending bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Finance Committee have under consideration the dye bill. It is impossible to secure a quorum of the committee unless I attend; and I wish to say to the Senator from South Dakota that I have been in attendance on that committee this afternoon, and that is why I was not in the Chamber. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has called the committee together on the last two days in the hope of getting a report upon that bill. The Senator will remember that a special joint resolution was passed extending the time during which the embargo, if I may so term it, upon the importation of certain dyestuffs from Germany should be enforced. The time specified in the joint resolution is nearly here, and we had hoped that we could get the bill into the Senate during the coming week and have it considered by the Senate.

I am perfectly willing to proceed this afternoon with the discussion of the pending bill or to take it up the first thing in the morning. I should very much prefer to take it up in the morning, if the Senator from South Dakota does not object, and that will allow the committee to proceed to-day with the consideration of the dye bill.

I ask the Senator from South Dakota what is his opinion in relation to the matter.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not like to see the pending bill any longer delayed. It will be recalled, I think, by the Senator from Utah that the bill was before the Senate for three days last week, and on two of those days the Senate adjourned at an early hour because we could not get a quorum. We were unable to do anything on the bill yesterday, and the time to-day has been largely occupied with other matters. It seems to me we ought to proceed with the consideration of the bill. I want the Senator from Utah to know that I appreciate his situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that to-morrow morning I do not expect to occupy more than an hour's time in the discussion of the measure. I am perfectly willing to vote upon it right now so far as I am concerned, but I do think that for the benefit of the RECORD there ought to be a statement made as to just the difference between the estimates made by the Senator in his report and those made by the board of efficiency of the department. I am not going to take any time of the Senate simply to talk; I merely want to present those figures to the Senate, and then I am perfectly willing to vote upon every amendment and upon the bill itself just as quickly as possible.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to know if there is not some other Senator who would occupy the time this afternoon?

Mr. SMOOT. If there is anyone else to speak, I would be glad to have him speak this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 11, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 10, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With increased devotion and growing fervor, Father in heaven, we would worship Thee in spirit and in truth, that by Thy holy influence we may develop all that is purest, noblest, God-like in our being and eliminate the evil; that we may be worthy of Thy preferment and leave the world a little better that we have lived and wrought; and thus be the instruments in Thy hands of establishing brotherly love in all the world; that peace, joy, happiness, may reign in all hearts and Thy will be done. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COAL, OIL, AND GAS ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the oil-leasing bill, S. 2775.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon calls up the conference report on the oil-leasing bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a new bill, practically. It is a compromise, I suppose, between the House and the Senate bills. It has never been read in the House, and the Senate amendments have never been read in the House. Does not the gentleman think that it would be advisable, as a matter of record at least, to have read the bill which we are to vote upon?

Mr. SINNOTT. There are not many changes from the House bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it is desirable.

Mr. SINNOTT. Then, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the fact is there are very, very few changes in the bill as it passed the House, so that the House has had the bill, and has examined the bill, and has passed the bill practically as it is now before us. On the other hand, I think there is no objection to reading the report of the conferees if that is desired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title to the bill, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, and lands containing such deposits owned by the United States, including those in national forests, but excluding lands acquired under the act known as the Appalachian Forest act, approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 961), and those in national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any asssociation of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas, to municipalities: Provided, That the United States reserves the right to extract helium from all gas produced from lands permitted, leased, or otherwise granted under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in the extraction of helium from gas produced from such lands, it shall be so extracted as to cause no substantial delay in the delivery of gas produced from the well to the purchaser thereof: And provided further, That citizens of another country, the laws, customs, or regulations of which, deny similar or like privileges to citizens or corporations of this country, shall not by stock ownership, stock holding, or stock control, own any interest in any lease acquired under the provisions of this act.

"COAL.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the petition of any qualified applicant shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States, outside of the Territory of Alaska, into leasing tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such tracts, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing tract, and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, upon the request of any qualified applicant or on his own motion, from time to time, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and shall award leases thereon by competitive bidding or by such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any qualified applicant: Provided, That the Secretary is hereby authorized, in awarding leases for coal lands heretofore improved and occupied or claimed in good faith, to consider and recognize equitable rights of such occupants or claimants: Provided further, That where prospecting or exploratory work is necessary to determine the existence or workability of coal deposits in any unclaimed, undeveloped area, the Secretary of the Interior may issue, to applicants qualified under this act, prospecting permits for a term of two years, for not exceeding 2,560 acres; and if within said period of two years thereafter, the permittee shows to the Secretary that the land contains coal in commercial quantities, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease under this act for all or part of the land in his permit: And provided further, That no lease of coal under this act shall be approved or issued until after notice of the proposed lease, or offering for lease, has been given for 30 days in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the lands or deposits are situated: And provided further, That no company or corporation operating a common carrier railroad shall be given or hold a permit or lease under the provisions of this act for any coal deposits except for its own use for railroad purposes; and such limitations of use shall be expressed in all permits and leases issued to such companies or corporations, and no such company or corporation shall receive or hold more than one permit or lease for each 200 miles of its railroad line within the State in which said property is situated, exclusive of spurs or switches and exclusive of branch lines built to connect the leased coal with the railroad, and also exclusive of parts of the railroad operated mainly by power produced otherwise than by steam: And provided further, That nothing herein shall preclude such a railroad of less than 200 miles in length from securing and holding one permit or lease hereunder.

"SEC. 3. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure modifications of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

"SEC. 4. That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the existing lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres, through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

"SEC. 5. That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest will be subserved thereby, lessees holding under lease areas not exceeding the maximum permitted under this act may consolidate their leases through the surrender of the original leases and the inclusion of such areas in a new lease of not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands.

"SEC. 6. That where coal or phosphate lands aggregating 2,560 acres and subject to lease hereunder do not exist as contiguous areas, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, if, in his opinion, the interests of the public and of the lessee will be thereby subserved, to embrace in a single lease noncontiguous tracts which can be operated as a single mine or unit.

"SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall not be less than 5 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each third month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall not be less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of diligent development and continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may permit suspension of operation under such lease for not to exceed six months at any one time when market conditions are such that the lease can not be operated except at a loss.

"SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue limited licenses or permits to individuals or associations of individuals to prospect for, mine, and take for their use but not for sale, coal from the public lands without payment of royalty for the coal mined or the land occupied, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interests: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to any corporations: Provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 320 acres for a municipality of less than 100,000 population, and not to exceed 1,280 acres for a municipality of not less than 100,000 and not more than 150,000 population; and not to exceed 2,560 acres for a municipality of 150,000 population or more, the land to be selected within the State wherein the municipal applicant may be located, upon condition that such municipal corporations will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit to residents of such municipality for household use: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the holding of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

"PHOSPHATES.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any applicant qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States containing deposits of phosphates, under such restrictions and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulation adopt.

"SEC. 10. That each lease shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys, if surveyed; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such survey; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose; and any excess deposits shall be repaid to the person, association, or corporation making such deposits or their legal representatives: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width.

"SEC. 11. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each third month succeeding that of the sale or other disposition of the phosphates or phosphate rock, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions shall be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may permit suspension of operation under such lease for not exceeding 12 months at any one time when market conditoins are such that the lease can not be operated except at a loss.

"SEC. 12. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates, or phosphate rock, under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits.

"OIL AND GAS.

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill one or more wells for oil or gas to a depth of not less than 500 feet each, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered. The Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that the permittee has been unable with the exercise of diligence to test the land in the time granted by the permit, extend any such permit for such time, not exceeding two years, and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought a monument not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of posting said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits not more than five in number may be granted to any qualified applicant for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within three years from date of the permit and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within four years from date of permit: Provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

"SEC. 14. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit: Provided, That the permittee shall be granted a lease for as much as 160 acres of said lands, if there be that number of acres within the permit. The area, to be selected by the permittee, shall be in compact form and, if surveyed, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such surveys; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose, and any excess deposits may be repaid to the person or persons making such deposit or their legal representatives. Such leases shall be for a term of 20 years upon a royalty of 5 per cent in amount or value of the production and the annual payment in advance of a rental of $1 per acre, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year, with the right of renewal as prescribed in section 17 hereof. The permittee shall also be entitled to a preference right to a lease for the remainder of the land in his prospecting permit at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent in amount or value of the production, and under such other conditions as are fixed for oil or gas leases in this act, the royalty to be determined by competitive bidding or fixed by such other method as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary shall have the right to reject any or all bids.

"SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for lease to the one quarter of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

"SEC. 16. That all permits and leases of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the conditions that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so permitted or leased, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the permittee or lessee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the permit or lease, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 17. That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same, not subject to preferential lease, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior to the highest responsible bidder by competitive bidding under general regulations to qualified applicants in areas not exceeding 640 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such bonus as may be accepted and of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall not be less than 12½ per cent in amount or value of the production, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods. Whenever the average daily production of any oil well shall not exceed 10 barrels per day, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reduce the royalty on future production when in his judgment the wells can not be successfully operated upon the royalty fixed in the lease. The provisions of this paragraph shall apply to all oil and gas leases made under this act.

"SEC. 18. That upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed prior to July 3, 1910, and continuously since by the claimant or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting placer mining law to any oil or gas bearing land upon which there has been drilled one or more oil or gas wells to discovery embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment as royalty to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost, from such land, the claimant, or his successor, if in possession of such land, undisputed by any other claimant prior to July 1, 1919, shall be entitled to a lease thereon from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent of all the oil or gas produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area, but in no case to exceed 3,200 acres, within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provision of this section when the area of such geologic oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor, subject to this limitation, shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to, but not in excess of, said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure, but not more than 3,200 acres.

"All such leases shall be made and the amount of royalty to be paid for oil and gas produced, except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost, after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all like claims situate within any naval petroleum reserve the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder or any part of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"No claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section.

"Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest," approved March 2, 1911,' approved August 25, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them as shall be deemed just. All leases hereunder shall inure to the benefit of the claimant and all persons claiming through or under him by lease, contract, or otherwise, as their interests may appear, subject, however, to the same limitation as to area and acreage as is provided for claimant in this section: Provided, That no claimant acquiring any interest in such lands since September 1, 1919, from a claimant on or since said date claiming or holding more than the maximum allowed claimant under this section shall secure a lease thereon or any interest therein, but the inhibition of this proviso shall not apply to an exchange of any interest in such lands made prior to the 1st day of January, 1920, which did not increase or reduce the area or acreage held or claimed in excess of said maximum by either party to the exchange: Provided further, That no lease or leases under this section shall be granted, nor shall any interest therein inure to any person, association, or corporation for a greater aggregate area or acreage than the maximum in this section povided for.

"SEC. 18a. That whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum placer claim under preexisting law to land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized at any time within 12 months after the approval of this act to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds of operation.

"SEC. 19. That any person who on October 1, 1919, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands under a claim initiated while such lands were not withdrawn from oil or gas location and entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within six months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions, and limitations as to acreage, as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery, he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That where such prospecting permit is granted upon land within any known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field, the royalty to be fixed in any lease thereafter granted thereon or any portion thereof shall be not less than 12½ per cent of all the oil or gas produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant for a permit or lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section.

"All permits or leases hereunder shall inure to the benefit of the claimant and all persons claiming through or under him by lease, contract, or otherwise, as their interests may appear.

"SEC. 20. In the case of lands bona fide entered as agricultural, and not withdrawn or classified as mineral at the time of entry, but not including lands claimed under any railroad grant, the entryman or patentee, or assigns, where assignment was made prior to January 1, 1918, if the entry has been patented with the mineral right reserved, shall be entitled to a preference right to a permit and to a lease, as herein provided, in case of discovery; and within an area not greater than a township such entryman and patentees, or assigns holding restricted patents may combine their holdings, not to exceed 2,560 acres for the purpose of making joint application. Leases executed under this section and embracing only lands so entered shall provide for the payment of a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent as to such areas within the permit as may not be included within the discovery lease to which the permittee is entitled under section 14 hereof.

"OIL SHALE.

"SEC. 21. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any person or corporation qualified under this act any deposits of oil shale belonging to the United States and the surface of so much of the public lands containing such deposits, or land adjacent thereto, as may be required for the extraction and reduction of the leased minerals, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as he may prescribe; that no lease hereunder shall exceed 5,120 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the United States, at the expense of the applicant, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to methods of mining, prevention of waste, and productive development. For the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the oil or other minerals covered by a lease under this section the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as shall be specified in the lease and an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year, at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum, for the lands included in the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year; such royalties to be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products from shales the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any royalty and rental during the first five years of any lease: Provided, That any person having a valid claim to such minerals under existing laws on January 1, 1919, shall, upon the relinquishment of such claim, be entitled to a lease under the provisions of this section for such area of the land relinquished as shall not exceed the maximum area authorized by this section to be leased to an individual or corporation: Provided, however, That no claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: Provided further, That not more than one lease shall be granted under this section to any one person, association, or corporation.

"ALASKA OIL PROVISO.

"SEC. 22. That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, who, or whose predecessors in interest, prior to withdrawal had complied otherwise with the requirements of the mining laws, but had made no discovery of oil or gas in wells and who prior to withdrawal had made substantial improvements for the discovery of oil or gas on or for each location or had prior to the passage of this act expended not less than $250 in improvements on or for each location shall be entitled, upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States within one year from the date of this act, or within six months after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent, to a prospecting permit or permits, lease or leases, under this act covering such lands, not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each: Provided, That leases in Alaska under this act whether as a result of prospecting permits or otherwise shall be upon such rental and royalties as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and specified in the lease, and be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period of the lease: Provided further, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products in Alaska the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any rental or royalty not exceeding the first five years of any lease.

"No claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section.

"SODIUM.

"SEC. 23. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of sodium dissolved in and soluble in water, and accumulated by concentration, in lands belonging to the United States for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands in San Bernardino County, Calif.

"SEC. 24. That upon showing to the satisfacttion of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 23 hereof has been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit and that such land is chiefly valuable therefor the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for one-half of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of the amount or value of the production, to be taken and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if the land be not surveyed by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. The permittee shall also have the preference right to lease the remainder of the lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of the amount or value of the production to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. Lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 23 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, except such lands as are situated in said county of San Bernardino, shall be held subject to lease, and may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres; all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty of not less than one-eighth of the amount or value of the production as may be fixed in the lease, and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre for the first calendar year or fraction thereof and $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period, upon such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be incorporated in each lease or prescribed in general regulation theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to mining methods, waste, period of preliminary development, and minimum production, and a lessee under this section may be lessee of the remaining lands in his permit.

"SEC. 25. That in addition to areas of such mineral land which may be included in any such prospecting permits or leases, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee of lands containing sodium deposits, and subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than 25 cents per acre, the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 40 acres in area, for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, AND GAS LEASES.

"SEC. 26. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit, and shall insert in every such permit issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him.

"SEC. 27. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease in any one State; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of the same producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, for any kind of mineral leased hereunder, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres of the respective kinds of minerals allowed to any one lessee under this act. Any interests held in violation of this act shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any ownership or interest forbidden in this act which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18, 18a, 19, and 22 or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines of railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same: And provided further, That if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, or sodium entered into by the lessee, or any agreement or understanding, written, verbal, or otherwise to which such lessee shall be a party, of which his or its output is to be or become the subject, to control the price or prices thereof or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of the amounts of lands provided in this act, the lease thereof shall be forfeited by appropriate court proceedings.

"SEC. 28. That rights of way through the public lands, including the forest reserves of the United States, are hereby granted for pipe-line purposes for the transportation of oil or natural gas to any applicant possessing the qualifications provided in section 1 of this act, to the extent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 25 feet on each side of the same under such regulations as to survey, location, application, and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and upon the express condition that such pipe lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers: Provided, That the Government shall in express terms reserve and shall provide in every lease of oil lands hereunder that the lessee, assignee, or beneficiary, if owner, or operator or owner of a controlling interest in any pipe line or of any company operating the same which may be operated accessible to the oil derived from lands under such lease, shall at reasonable rates and without discrimination accept and convey the oil of the Government or of any citizen or company, not the owner of any pine line, operating a lease or purchasing gas or oil under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no right of way shall hereafter be granted over said lands for the transportation of oil or natural gas except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this section. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located in an appropriate proceeding.

"SEC. 29. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit upon such terms as he may determine to be just, for joint or several use, such easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease: And provided further, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

"SEC. 30. That no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights, under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease, and may with like consent surrender any legal subdivision of the area included within the lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency; provisions prohibiting the employment of any boy under the age of 16 or the employment of any girl or woman, without regard to age, in any mine below the surface; provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase; provision requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary to insure the sale of the production of such leased lands to the United States and to the public at reasonable prices, for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare: Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated.

"SEC. 31. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

"SEC. 32. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act, also to fix and determine the boundary lines of any structure, or oil or gas field, for the purposes of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have, including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee of the United States.

"SEC. 33. That all statements, representations, or reports required by the Secretary of the Interior under this act shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified by him, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require.

"SEC. 34. That the provisions of this act shall also apply to all deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas in the lands of the United States, which lands may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States such deposits, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by such laws reserving such deposits.

"SEC. 35. That 10 per cent of all money received from sales, bonuses, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts; for past production 70 per cent, and for future production 52½ per cent of the amounts derived from such bonuses, royalties, and rentals shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress, known as the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902, and for past production 20 per cent and for future production 37½ per cent of the amounts derived from such bonuses, royalties, and rentals shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as 'Miscellaneous receipts.'

"SEC. 36. That all royalty accruing to the United States under any oil or gas lease or permit under this act on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas.

"Upon granting any oil or gas lease under this act, and from time to time thereafter during said lease, the Secretary of the Interior shall, except whenever in his judgment it is desirable to retain the same for the use of the United States, offer for sale for such period as he may determine, upon notice and advertisement on sealed bids or at public auction, all royalty oil and gas accruing or reserved to the United States under such lease. Such advertisement and sale shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to reject all bids whenever within his judgment the interest of the United States demands; and in cases where no satisfactory bid is received or where the accepted bidder fails to complete the purchase, or where the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that it is unwise in the public interest to accept the offer of the highest bidder, the Secretary of the Interior, within his discretion, may readvertise such royalty for sale, or sell at private sale at not less than the market price for such period, or accept the value thereof from the lessee: Provided, however, That pending the making of a permanent contract for the sale of any royalty oil or gas as herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior may sell the current product at private sale, at not less than the market price: And provided further, That any royalty oil or gas may be sold at not less than the market price at private sale to any department or agency of the United States.

"SEC. 37. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals, including lands and deposits described in the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming,' approved August 1, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 1346), shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws, including discovery.

"SEC. 38. That, until otherwise provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to prescribe fees and commissions to be paid registers and receivers of United States land offices on account of business transacted under the provisions of this act."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

In order that the specific modifications of the House bill, as shown in the foregoing, may be indicated by section and specific amendment, the following explanation is made, by reference to S. 2775, "ordered to be printed with the amendments of the House of Representatives" (star * print), now available in the document room.

Section 1, of the bill as agreed to in conference, is section 1 of the House bill, with amendment as follows:

Page 38, House bill, in lines 24 and 25, and on page 39, lines 1 and 2, strike out the following: "That all right, title, and interest in all helium in the lands or deposits subject to disposition under this act are hereby expressly reserved and shall remain in the Government of the United States," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the United States reserves the right to extract helium from all gas produced from lands permitted, leased, or otherwise granted under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in the extraction of helium from gas produced from such lands, it shall be so extracted as to cause no substantial delay in the delivery of gas produced from the well to the purchaser thereof."

The above lines stricken out and those inserted relate to helium gas, a noninflammable gas used in balloons and dirigibles.

Section 2 is section 2 of the House bill without change except the addition of the word "further" after the word "Provided," on page 40, line 2.

Section 3 is section 3 of the House bill without change.

Section 4 is section 4 of the House bill without change.

Section 5 is section 5 of the House bill without change.

Section 6 is section 6 of the House bill with the following amendment: Page 42, line 11, strike out "not to exceed." The same page, line 15, strike out "such."

This amendment in no wise changes the meaning of section 6 of the House bill but simplifies the language.

Section 7 is section 7 of the House bill without change.

Section 8 is section 8 of the House bill with the following amendments:

Page 44, line 9, strike out "municipal corporations" and insert in lieu thereof "individuals or associations of individuals."

On the same page, line 10, after the word "use," insert "but not for sale."

On the same page, in line 13, after the word "That," insert "this privilege shall not extend to any corporations: Provided further, That in case of municipal corporations."

The above amendments restore the Senate provisions to said section 8 and permit individuals or associations of individuals to secure limited licenses or permits to secure a supply of coal for strictly domestic needs. The House provisions confined such licenses and permits to municipal corporations.

Section 9 is section 9 of the House bill without change.

Section 10 is section 10 of the House bill with the following amendment: At the end of the section, on page 46, line 2, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width." This restores the Senate provision, which merely gives the construction of the Department of the Interior to the phrase preceding said amendment, "compact form."

Section 11 is section 11 of the House bill with the following amendment: Page 47, line 6, change the word "six" to "twelve," thus authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit suspension of operation for 12 months instead of 6, as provided for in the House bill.

Section 12 is section 12 of the House bill without change.

Section 13 is section 13 of the House bill without change.

Section 14 is section 14 of the House bill without change.

Section 15 is section 15 of the House bill without change.

Section 16 is section 16 of the House bill without change.

Section 17 is section 17 of the House bill without change.

Section 18 is section 18 of the House bill with the following amendments: Page 53, line 24, strike out "continuously since" and insert, after the comma following the figures "1910," the words "and continuously since."

This amendment was made for clarity.

Page 55, line 9, after the word "thereon," insert the word "only."

This word was omitted by mistake from the engrossed copy of the House bill.

On page 55, in lines 24 and 25, and page 56, lines 1 and 2, strike out the following:

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith."

and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"No claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section."

This amendment restores to the bill the Senate fraud provision which was considered stronger and more drastic than the House provision, which it thus supersedes.

The description of the act, referred to in line 7, on page 56, is amended by adding the title of the act.

Section 18 was further amended as follows:

Page 56, line 13, strike out "on or prior to September 1, 1919,".

The purpose and efficacy of the language just stricken out is retained in the following amendment:

Page 56, lines 17, 18, and 19, strike out the following:

"That no claimant acquiring any interest in such lands since September 1, 1919, shall secure a lease thereon under this section:"
and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That no claimant acquiring any interest in such lands since September 1, 1919, from a claimant on or since said date claiming or holding more than the maximum allowed claimant under this section shall secure a lease thereon or any interest therein, but the inhibition of this proviso shall not apply to an exchange of any interest in such lands made prior to the 1st day of January, 1920, which did not increase or reduce the area or acreage held or claimed in excess of said maximum by either party of the exchange:"

Section 18 is known as the relief section of the bill, and relates to very valuable producing oil lands which are now involved in litigation. The purpose of the House language stricken out was to prevent the claimant or holder of excess area and acreage from disposing of such excess, which excess, under the terms of the House bill, would revert to the United States to be leased by competitive bidding. The above amendment by the insertion of said language retains the purpose of the House bill, while at the same time it does not prevent one holding or claiming not more than the maximum allowed by section 18 from disposing of any part thereof. It also recognizes an exchange of interest in lands made prior to January 1, 1920, provided the exchange does not reduce or increase the area or acreage held in excess of the allowed maximum, thus not permitting a change in the status quo of the excess holder or claimant. Sales of oil lands have been made by claimants holding less than the maximum allowed. It was thought best not to interfere with such sales, nor with exchanges in settlement of controversies which did not result in reducing the area or acreage held in excess of the maximum allowance.

Section 18 was further amended for clarity as follows:

Page 56, line 20, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the following "nor shall any interest therein."

Section 18a is the same section of the House bill without change.

Section 19 is section 19 of the House bill, with the following amendments:

On page 58, lines 9 to 13, inclusive, the Senate fraud provision explained above in connection with section 18 was adopted instead of the House fraud provision.

Also the following amendments:

On page 58, line 15, strike out "on or prior to September 1, 1919."

On the same page, line 17, change the colon to a period and strike out the remainder of said section, to wit:

"Provided, That no claimant acquiring any interest in such lands since September 1, 1919, shall secure a permit or lease thereon under this section."

Section 19 relates in the main to locations upon which no discovery has been made. In other words, it relates to "wild-cat" territory. The provisions in the House bill stricken out, would needlessly embarrass and hamper the locator in financing oil development and drilling. For this reason it was thought best to eliminate the restrictions of the House bill.

Section 20 is section 20 of the House bill without change.

Section 21 is section 21 of the House bill without change other than the substitution of the Senate fraud provisions for the House fraud provisions, above explained in connection with the same amendment to section 18.

Section 22 is section 22 of the House bill with the following amendments: On page 61, line 11, after the word "who," insert "prior to withdrawal." This amendment restores the Senate provision requiring substantial improvements to have been made prior to an oil-land withdrawal in Alaska.

This section was further amended as follows: Page 62, line 1, insert after the word "lease," a colon. Lines 2 and 3, on said page 62, strike out the following: "and may in the discretion of the Secretary include noncontiguous tracts."

The House language stricken out permitted the Secretary in the Territory of Alaska to include in a lease noncontiguous tracts.

Section 22 was further amended on page 62, lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 by substituting the Senate fraud provisions for the House fraud provisions, for the reason above set forth in connection with section 18.

Section 23 is section 23 of the House bill without change.

Section 24 is section 24 of the House bill with one amendment, as follows: Page 63, line 4, strike out the word "any" and substitute the word "one." This is merely a verbal amendment.

Section 25 is section 25 of the House bill without change.

Section 26 is section 26 of the House bill without change.

Section 27 is section 27 of the House bill without change.

Section 28 is section 28 of the House bill without change.

Section 29 is section 29 of the House bill without change.

Section 30 is the same as section 30 of the House bill with amendment, as follows: Page 70, line 17, after the word "purchase" insert "provisions." This amendment is a mere verbal one for clarity.

Section 31 is section 31 of the House bill without change.

Section 32 is section 32 of the House bill with the following amendment:

Page 71, line 19, strike out the following: "and thereafter to readjust the change."

The purpose of this amendment is as follows:

In lines 18, 19, and 20, page 72, of the House bill, the Secretary was authorized "to fix and determine and thereafter to readjust and change the boundary lines of any structure, or oil or gas field, for the purposes of this act." It was thought that the inclusion of the language stricken out would authorize the Secretary to readjust and change the boundary lines of an oil field after vested rights had attached, to the injury of such vested rights. It was not thought wise to leave the language of section 32 subject to such construction.

Section 33 is section 33 of the House bill without change.

Section 34 is section 34 of the House bill without change.

Section 35 relates to the division of proceeds from sales, bonuses, royalties, and rentals. It is the same as the House provision, with the following amendments:

Page 72, line 19, strike out the figure "60" and insert in lieu thereof "52½."

Same page, line 24, strike out the figure "30" and insert in lieu thereof "37½."

The effect of the above amendments is to put 52½ per cent of the amounts derived from future proceeds into the reclamation fund and to pay 37½ per cent of such future proceeds to the State within which the leased lands or deposits are located.

Section 36 is section 36 of the House bill without change.

Section 37 is section 37 of the House bill with the following amendment:

Page 74, line 16, strike out the following: "and the lands containing such deposits."

The inclusion of the above language stricken from section 37 would bring the bill in conflict with the statutes permitting a surface entry, and probably repeal the same, and was therefore eliminated.

Section 37 was further amended by more clearly referring to the joint resolution approved August 1, 1912, and was also further amended by striking out the proviso at the end of the section, beginning in line 23, on page 74.

This proviso was stricken out for the reason that it would cause needless expense to the small prospector and locator.

Section 38 was stricken from the House bill.

Section 38 was as follows:

"That the United States shall have the preferential right to obtain, extract, and remove helium from all lands permitted, leased, or otherwise granted under the provisions of this act, and from gas or oil or from gas and oil or other products found within such deposits, or under lands containing the same, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

In lieu of section 38 of the House bill the following amendment was inserted in section 1 of the conference bill:

"Provided, That the United States reserves the right to extract helium from all gas produced from lands permitted, leased, or otherwise granted under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in the extraction of helium from gas produced from such lands it shall be so extracted as to cause no substantial delay in the delivery of gas produced from the well to the purchaser thereof."

Section 38 of the conference bill is the same as section 39 of the House bill.

The chief differences between the Senate and the House bills were:

1. As to the maximum charges.
2. The relief provisions in section 18.
3. The division of proceeds under section 35.

The Senate bill limited the maximum charges by the Government for coal to 20 cents per ton; for oil to 25 per cent of the value of the production. The House bill contained no maximum restrictions on said charges by the Government. The conference agreed to the House provisions.

The second chief point of difference between the Senate and the House as to the relief provisions in section 18 was settled in a way so as to preserve the integrity of the House safeguards against the disposal of excess holdings.

The third point of difference between the Senate and the House was the disposal of the proceeds. The Senate bill put 45 per cent of the proceeds into the reclamation fund and paid 45 per cent to the State. The House bill put 70 per cent of the proceeds from past production and 60 per cent of the proceeds from future production into the reclamation fund, and paid 20 per cent from past production and 30 per cent from future production to the State. The compromise reached in conference left intact the provisions of the House bill as to past production, to wit, 70 per cent to the reclamation fund and 20 per cent to the State. As to future production, a compromise was reached by splitting the difference between the House bill—60 per cent to the reclamation fund and 30 per cent to the State—and the Senate bill—45 per cent to the reclamation fund and 45 per cent to the State—thus giving the reclamation fund 52½ per cent and the State 37½ per cent of the proceeds from future production.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, after this bill passed the House, last October, I received a letter from Mr. Gifford Pinchot concerning the House bill. I sent a copy of that letter to Secretary Daniels and received a letter in reply from Secretary Daniels. I have handed those two letters to the Clerk, and I should like to have them read in my time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the letters will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 8, 1919.

Hon. NICHOLAS J. SINNOTT,
Chairman House Public Lands Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: I have just gone over the mineral-leasing bill as passed by the House. While it contains some provisions with which I am not in accord, in my opinion it is the best leasing measure that has passed either House. On the whole, it follows the conservation principles laid down by Theodore Roosevelt. To you, the members of your committee, and to the House are due the thanks of the friends of conservation. I have strong hope that the conference committee and the Senate will concur in your good work.

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) GIFFORD PINCHOT.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, November 20, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: I am in receipt of your esteemed favor inclosing a letter from Hon. Gifford Pinchot with reference to the mineral-leasing bill as it passed the House. I thank you very much for sending it to me. I have insisted all the way through that the naval reserves ought to be protected, and I understand that is what was done in the bill that has passed the House.

Sincerely, yours, (Signed) JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think I can truthfully say that the hopes of Mr. Pinchot and the friends of conservation as expressed in his letter have been realized in the conference report, and that the conferees have concurred in the good work of the House, for in no vital, fundamental feature of the bill expressing the House policy has the conference report changed the House bill.

While I realize that numbers do not necessarily count, yet it may be of interest to the Members of the House to know that of the House amendments to the Senate bill, 11 were modified in a small way; that the House receded on some 16 amendments, 4 or 5 of which merely related to the fraud provision of the bill, restoring the Senate fraud provision, which many Members of the House, myself among them, thought were much stronger than the House provisions.

Sixty House amendments were accepted by the conferees in toto without modification—accepted as they passed the House.

I do not feel that it is necessary to make an extended or elaborate explanation of this oil-leasing bill. This is the fifth time that this bill will have passed the House if it does pass to-day. The matter is very familiar to most of the Members of the House, and unless Members have questions to ask concerning the bill, I expect to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oregon yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think it would be well to make a concise, comprehensive statement as to what the bill is? It is a new bill, practically.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, the bill is practically the same as it passed the House last October. It is also modeled on the bill that passed the House at the last session and the session before and the session before.

In brief, the bill does away with and repeals the present laws providing for the patenting and the absolute disposal by the Government of the mineral resources named in the bill. This bill is strictly a leasing bill. No longer can patents be issued deeding away these mineral resources of the Government, except as to some valid claims now existing upon mineral lands provided for in section 37 of the bill. But apart from that, no longer will oil, oil-shale, phosphate, sodium, or coal lands be deeded away by the Government.

The bill provides for limited leases for coal lands, for oil and oil-shale lands, for phosphate lands, and for sodium lands, reserving to the Government certain royalties and rentals. In the case of coal the royalty is to be at least 5 cents per ton. In the case of oil in what is known as "wildcat" or unknown territory, where oil is discovered by an applicant or a permittee, the permittee pays 5 per cent of the value of the production on his leasehold. Then in known oil territory there is a limited lease for not exceeding 640 acres, for which lease the lessee must pay not less than 12½ per cent of the value of the production, and in addition to that he has to pay a certain bonus royalty, which bonus royalty will be determined by competitive bidding.

The bill gives the Government control over the future operations of these leases. It provides for continuous, economical, and diligent development and operation of the leasehold, with provisions against waste, with provisions guarding the safety and welfare of miners, with provisions against monopoly for selling the products at reasonable prices, and other matters of that kind that are to be inserted in the leases. The violation of any of these provisions will work a forfeiture of the lease.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I understand a lease can only cover 640 acres. If a man gets his lease and strikes oil or sodium or phosphate, then his minimum is 12½ per cent. Is that correct?

Mr. SINNOTT. As to the oil lease in unknown or what is called wildcat territory the permittee gets a permit to prospect for oil or gas on not to exceed 2,560 acres. On the discovery of oil he gets a lease for 20 years for one-fourth of his permit area. In the case I have stated he would get a lease for 640 acres. For the oil produced from the 640 acres he would pay 5 per cent of the value of the production. Then, in addition to that, he gets a preferential lease on the remainder, the remainder between the 640 acres and the 2,560 acres, but for that he has to pay a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent, or one-eighth, and that rate is to be fixed by competitive bidding or by such other method as the Secretary may provide.

Mr. CANNON. Right at that point, what made me ask the question is this: Suppose, for the sake of illustration, he has found oil or any of the other articles covered, and it costs him $100,000. Then when its great value is ascertained, is it possible that competitors may come in who have not spent a cent and bid up 20, 50, or 75 per cent as against the man who has made the expenditure and taken the risk?

Mr. SINNOTT. The man you refer to, of course, has the absolute right to one-fourth of the area included in his permit, but what you state is true as to the remainder. Others may come in and bid, and if they bid over him he loses the remainder of the land unless he is willing to take the remainder at the highest bid; he has that privilege.

Mr. CANNON. He can keep the one-fourth absolutely?

Mr. SINNOTT. He can keep the one-fourth absolutely. He has a vested right in a lease to that. The remainder, of course, he can take at the highest bid, or the Secretary is authorized to determine the price on the remainder by regulation.

Mr. CANNON. If he should develop two wells he would be sure of the one-fourth?

Mr. SINNOTT. He would be sure of the one-fourth.

Mr. CANNON. His competitors could not oust him, but if he keeps his lease, as I understand the gentleman, suppose they bid up to 80 per cent, to illustrate. He must then pay 5 per cent on that 80 in addition to the royalty?

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman mean on the one-fourth?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. No. Five per cent is the maximum that he has to pay on the one-fourth.

Mr. CANNON. He has got the one-fourth until the expiration of the lease?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And how long does the lease run?

Mr. SINNOTT. The lease runs for 20 years, and at the end of 20 years new terms may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless new laws are passed in the meantime in relation thereto.

Mr. CANNON. Has he a preference for a renewal?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; he has a preference for a renewal under section 17 of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. But he would have to compete, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, with others who might desire to get an original lease, while he only wanted a renewal.

Mr. SINNOTT. He has a preference right at whatever terms are fixed by the Secretary, or at whatever terms may be fixed by law.

Mr. CANNON. I have taken this bill because I do not know much about it, as I have taken most of the legislation that comes before the House; but the gentleman represents the new part of the United States, which is largely undeveloped. His constituents are interested in the development of the country as well as the gentleman.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, is the gentleman satisfied that this bill will not prohibit the development of the country which he and others represent?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; the gentleman is satisfied with the bill, and thinks that it will help to develop that section of the country, concerning which we believe that—

Time's noblest offspring is the last—according to the old lines.

Westward the course of empire takes its way, you know, and time's noblest offspring is the last—that means, of course, the West.

Mr. CANNON. Being a tenderfoot and not knowing much of anything about it, I ought to be willing to follow the gentleman.

Mr. HARRELD. How much of this land has been withdrawn?

Mr. SINNOTT. About 6,000,000 acres of oil lands have been withdrawn, and about 40,000,000 acres of coal land.

Mr. HARRELD. What effect will this bill have on that land? Is that restored to entry?

Mr. SINNOTT. The withdrawn lands will be subject to prospecting permits and also to leases.

Mr. HARRELD. The same as lands that have not been withdrawn?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. The same as lands that have not been withdrawn.

Mr. GRIGSBY. With reference to the proviso concerning Alaska in section 22, and the language limiting the number of permits, the bill as reported reads as follows:

Not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each.

Now, the language that has been omitted is as follows:

And may in the discretion of the Secretary include noncontiguous tracts.

Am I right in my assumption that that was taken out as surplusage in view of the use of the word "aggregate"?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is referring to lines 2 and 3 on page 62 of the star print of the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. GRIGSBY. I am.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; that language was considered to be mere surplusage, and therefore was stricken from the bill. I shall insert in the RECORD letters from the Departments of Interior and Justice giving approximations on the moneys impounded referred to in section 18, and to be distributed under the provisions of section 35:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: In reply to your request for information as to the approximate amounts of money which will be received as back royalties under the general leasing bill, S. 2775, if enacted, I have to advise as follows:

According to the figures of the General Land Office the amount of escrow deposits under the law of August 25, 1914 (38 Stat., 708), in California is something over $1,152,523.48 and in the State of Wyoming, $3,172,482.36, making a total of $4,325,005.84. In addition, there are three tracts of land in Wyoming involved in a three-cornered proceeding, in which the State, a mineral claimant, and the United States are litigating, in which there have been impounded all receipts, amounting to between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. One-eighth of this amount, if the United States is successful, would be approximately $300,000, which would make the total escrow deposits to June 30, 1919, something over $4,600,000. In addition, there was considerable production from oil wells in both California and Wyoming prior to the passage of the said act of August 25, 1914, none of which was impounded, but for which the parties must account if they take advantage of the leasing bill. We have absolutely no figures for California, but a rough estimate furnished by the Bureau of Mines relative to Wyoming is that some $4,000,000 worth of oil was taken out before 1914, one-eighth of which would be $500,000. We could only guess as to what had been taken out in California prior to 1914, but I should think it would amount to fully as much as in Wyoming, and if this guess is correct, there would be $500,000 due from the California operators as one-eighth of this production.

Consequently, the total amount from impoundments and from production prior to the act of 1914 would be about $5,600,000; that is to say, that much would have to be paid over to the United States under the provisions of the bill.

Further, the Department of Justice in its court proceedings has had a number of receivers appointed to take charge of production from wells involved in the suits. These amounts must involve many millions of dollars, but the Land Department has no record thereof, and as I advised you informally yesterday the information as to the amounts held by the Department of Justice through receivers will have to be obtained from Assistant Attorney General Nebeker, Department of Justice.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. FINNEY,
Member Board of Appeals.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: In reply to your request for figures on the impoundment of oil and gas moneys, I find that the General Land Office reports are not up to date owing to the fact that it has not heard from its field officers. However, we have taken the figures actually in hand and then made a careful estimate of receipts between the date of the last reports and December 31, 1919. The figures are as follows:

Wyoming—
Total escrow to Sept. 30, 1919	$3,458,045.81
Three months to Dec. 31, 1919 (estimated)	285,000.00
Total to Dec. 31, 1919	3,743,045.81
California—
Total escrow to June 30, 1919	1,152,523.48
Six months to Dec. 31, 1919 (estimated)	300,000.00
Total to Dec. 31, 1919	1,452,523.48
Total amount of estimated impoundments in both States to Dec. 31, 1919	5,195,569.29

In addition, there is impounded in Wyoming, as stated to you in a previous letter, the proceeds of the oil produced from three 40-acre tracts in dispute between the State, mineral claimants, and the United States. This is an impoundment of all receipts less operating expenses, and amounts to approximately $2,480,000.

If the relief measure should pass and one-eighth be collected, this would add approximately $200,000 to the amount above estimated, or a total estimated amount of $5,495,569.29.

In addition, the Department of Justice has impoundments made through receivers, and also has some judgments obtained in courts which, if they become final, would turn a large amount of money over to the United States. This information, I understand, you are obtaining from the Department of Justice.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. FINNEY,
Member Board of Appeals.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1920.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with your request for information as to the amount of moneys impounded in the hands of receivers in the withdrawn oil-land suits, I take pleasure in handing you the following statement:

In suits affecting lands in the naval reserves in California:
In the Honolulu case (approximately)	$3,800,000
In other cases	5,500,374
Total in naval reserves	10,300,374
In suits affecting lands in California outside of naval reserves	9,427,795
Total in California	19,728,169

In the Hanley case in Wyoming there is impounded in bank under stipulation approximately $200,000.

There is also impounded in Wyoming in the Ridgely case, under an arrangement entered into between the Interior Department and the defendants prior to the institution of suit and which has remained in force, over $2,000,000. The exact amount impounded in this case may be had from the Interior Department.

In addition to the above amounts now impounded in the hands of receivers and otherwise, the defendants must account for large amounts of oil extracted prior to the appointment of receivers. The aggregate amount thus to be accounted for or the amount in any particular case can not now be given, except that it may be stated that in eight of the California cases in which accountings have been completed and final decrees entered, the aggregate of money judgments entered in favor of the Government for oil taken prior to the appointment of receivers is $2,977,077.26.

The amount of oil in the hands of receivers January 1 could not be definitely ascertained in time for this report, but it is stated to be a very small quantity.

Respectfully, for the Attorney General,

FRANK K. NEBEKER,
Assistant Attorney General.

Statement showing how the one-eighth of the impounded moneys referred to in the letters from the Department of Justice, Jan. 1, 1920, and from the Department of the Interior, Oct. 16, 1919, and Jan. 17, 1920, is to be distributed.

It is to be remembered that under the provisions of section 18 and section 18–a, one-eighth of the moneys impounded is to be paid to the Government to be distributed in accordance with section 35.

MONEYS IN CALIFORNIA.

All the proceeds accruing to the Government from the Naval Reserves are to be paid into the Treasury.
This sum will amount to one-eighth of $10,300,374, or	$1,287,546.75
From letter of Department of Justice, January 21, one-eighth of $9,427,795	1,178,474.00
From letter of Department of Interior, January 17, one-eight impounded	1,452,523.00
Total one-eighth impounded in California	2,630,997.00
20 per cent of this amount to be paid to the State of California	526,199.00

MONEYS IN WYOMING.

From letter of Department of Interior, January 17	$3,458,045.00
From letter of Department of Interior, January 17	285,000.00
From letter of Department of Interior, January 17	300,000.00
Estimated in accounting, letter Department of Interior, October 16	500,000.00
From letter, Department of Justice, January 21, one-eighth of $200,000	25,000.00
In addition not set forth in above letters	500,000.00
Total one-eighth impounded in Wyoming	5,068,045.00
20 per cent of this amount to be paid to the State of Wyoming	1,013,609.00
Total one-eighth funds impounded California	2,630,997.00
Total one-eighth funds impounded Wyoming	5,068,045.00
Total in both States	7,699,042.00
70 per cent paid to reclamation fund	5,389,329.00

In addition to the above figures it is thought that one-eighth of the proceeds from the accounting to be hereafter had will add several million dollars to the funds to be divided, under the provisions of section 35 of the bill.

FUTURE ESTIMATES.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 13, 1920.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: In reply to your telephonic request for an estimate of receipts under the general leasing bill, if enacted, I have to advise you that any estimate at this time must be understood to be a mere guess. Roughly, however, I would estimate that the receipts will be more than $10,000,000 per year. We have only one coal lease at the present time, that of the Owl Creek in Wyoming, an area of less than the maximum provided in the leasing bill. The royalty is 8 cents per ton, and the Government's royalties last year were over $24,000. Assuming that we would only make 50 coal leases, the income at that rate would be $1,200,000 per year. Estimating the returns under the phosphate and sodium features of the bill at $300,000, the receipts from coal, phosphate, and sodium would be $1,500,000.

Considering the production and return from the known oil areas of Government land in California and Wyoming, of the fact that many new wells will be brought in as soon as adjustment is made under the leasing act, and that there is bound to be some discoveries on the vast area of Government land now withdrawn, I think a conservative estimate of the oil and gas returns would be $8,500,000 per annum.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. FINNEY,
Member Board of Appeals.

Mr. Speaker, if estimates in this letter of future receipts from this bill prove true, and I hope they do, the reclamation fund will be enriched to the extent of $5,250,000 each year.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to anybody?

Mr. SINNOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] five minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I assume that there is no necessity of referring at this time to any of the parts of this bill that have been agreed upon by both the Senate and the House, and were not in dispute between the two bodies, and were therefore not referred to the conference committee. In other words, the only matters that can be before this House at the present time are matters which the House put in the Senate bill by way of amendment and then receded from or modified. As the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] has well said, there is very little for us to now consider. Of the 85 or 90 amendments that the House put in the bill the Senate yielded and agreed absolutely to some 60 of them, and they include most of the main ones, too. We somewhat modified something like a dozen of them, and as to 16, I believe it was, the House receded. Those were mostly matters of comparative unimportance or where we, as your conferees, ourselves thought that the Senate provision was clearly better than ours. The bill which we, as your conferees, now bring before you as a conference agreement is, practically speaking and on principle, to all intents and purposes the same as it was when we passed it in this House. The Senate conferees have substantially accepted our bill, so I can see no logical reason why any Member should oppose the adoption of this conference report. This is a tremendously important piece of legislation. Congress has been working on this subject for nearly 10 years. After long and patient hearings and investigations, the Public Lands Committee has reported out this bill and the House has passed it time and again, only to have it killed in the Senate or in conference, and I am delighted to see it so near now to becoming a law; and when the President signs it, as I hope and believe he will, the whole country in general, and the West in particular, will be wonderfully benefited by it. Under this bill there will be many billions of dollars worth of development throughout the West.

Now, if anyone wants to go over the bill in detail and take the House provisions that have been modified or rejected by the conference and that are before the House at this time, of course I or any other member of the conference committee will be glad to explain any of them. I feel that the Public Lands Committees of both the Senate and the House, and in both this Congress and the last Congress, and especially the chairmen of both of these committees, are entitled to the congratulations and thanks of both Congress and the country for their many years of hard, tedious, and patient work on this measure. They have rendered a great service to the West and to the entire country.

In addition to what the chairman of the committee has said, when he read the letter from Secretary Daniels and one from Mr. Gifford Pinchot, I will say that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, has also written the following letter to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 8, 1919.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SINNOTT: Referring to yours of September 6, submitting for my consideration Senate bill 2775, generally known as the leasing bill, I would say that, in my opinion, it is on the whole the best leasing bill that has passed either House of Congress.

Cordially, yours,

F. K. LANE.

So we have the executive departments satisfied with this measure. Both the Senate and the House are satisfied with the measure. The conservation sentiment throughout the country is satisfied with this measure, and on behalf of the West, in further answer to my good friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who asks if this bill will prohibit the development of the West, I will say no. It will greatly encourage and stabilize the development of the West. While it is not quite as liberal as I think it might be in justice to the West, yet it is a fair and workable bill, and the West wants it and will give it a fair trial, and if some of its provisions turn out in practice to be too drastic or harsh we will ask Congress to modify them by amendment at some future session. I think this bill is the most ultraconservative bill that has ever been passed by Congress. It is overwhelmingly conservative, and it changes the whole principle of the public-land laws of the United States by refusing hereafter to allow the title to lands to go into private ownership, and adopts for the future a Government leasing policy for the coal and the oil and the gas and the phosphate and these other substances. While most of the people of the West believe it would be better if this land went into private ownership under proper restrictions and went onto the tax roll and became subject to taxation for local development and the support of any States and counties and schools and roads, that has all now gone by and it is not before us at this time, and it is now agreed upon that we will adopt and try out this leasing policy.

In this connection I want to say one thing. While this is a leasing bill, and the Federal leasing policy, whether it is wise or otherwise, is going to hereafter be adopted; and it may be demonstrated that it is best and become the permanent policy of our Government in these matters. Yet the Senate and the House have both always retained in every bill of this kind the provisions of section 37 and expressly recognized and legalized and attempted to affirmatively protect the property and legal rights under the laws as they are now and have for over 40 years been on our statute books of the honest prospectors, the bona fide locators in good faith, and holders of rightful claims, claims that are valid and existing under existing laws at the date of the passage of this act. Those claimants, even though they may not have perfected a legal discovery under the laws, are entitled to go ahead and maintain and perfect their claims under the present existing laws and obtain a patent to their lands just as though this bill had never been passed, and I hope no court or Federal department will ever attempt to deny to these people the rights which Congress looks upon as vested and is attempting in section 37 to guarantee to them. Congress has no right to pass an ex post facto law depriving citizens of their vested legal property rights, and no court or executive official has any right to misconstrue the law to give it that effect or to flagrantly violate the plain intention of Congress in this matter.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CANNON. What proportion of the money that is received by the Goverament goes to the Government and what, if any, goes to the States?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Ten per cent of all of the royalties derived from coal, oil, gas, phosphates, and so forth, goes to Uncle Sam direct. That is for the expense of administration. Of all the oil royalties that are now held up by receiverships and impounded in the various courts in litigation, amounting to several million dollars and held to await the determination by Congress or the courts as to what should become of it, 70 per cent goes into the reclamation fund for the purpose of aiding and encouraging irrigation projects and development throughout the West, and 20 per cent of that money goes to the States in which the oil was produced. California and Wyoming will each get a large sum, and the reclamation fund will get possibly $6,000,000. That is for the past production up to the passage of this bill. Hereafter the division is different. From this time on 37½ per cent of all the royalties derived by the Government that come from all the oil, and coal, and gas goes to the State in which they are produced and 52½ per cent of all such proceeds goes direct into the irrigation and reclamation fund, and the remaining 10 per cent goes to the Government for administration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield me a few minutes more.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CANNON. That means that 87½ per ceat in the future royalties goes for reclamation and to the States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Ninety per cent—52½ to the reclamation fuad and 37½ to the States where the money is collected.

Mr. CANNON. And 10 per cent to the man who makes the development?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; the man who makes the development gets whatever the Secretary of the Interior lets him have. He can not get more than seven-eighths of his production, and he may not get any. I am talking now about the manner of the division of the amounts of money that are collected by the Government from the men and companies that make the development.

The amount the man who makes the development gets depends entirely upon the Secretary of the Interior. He has got to pay to the Government at least one-eighth, 12½ per cent, royalty on everything, whether he makes anything or not, and the Secretary of the Interior can make him pay any per cent from that on up to 100 per cent if he wants to. There is a minimum but no maximum limitation on the Secretary of the Interior in his determination of what royalty anybody must pay on his production of oil or coal, gas, and so forth.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman mean by royalties? With my limited knowledge, I gather that practically the whole of the royalties that occur in the respective States and in the arid regions goes to the States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no; I wish they did. But they do not. As I said before, 37½ per cent goes direct to the States hereafter and the rest goes, 52½ per cent, into the reclamation fund and 10 per cent into the Federal Treasury. That reclamation fund may be expended in any State. It may be expended in States that have no coal or oil and that do not produce a dollar. It may be expended, and undoubtedly some of it will be spent, in Texas, and Texas has no public lands and will contribute nothing to this fund, or it may go into States that do produce oil and coal and gas and do contribute very largely to this fund. All money that goes into the reclamation fund, no matter where it comes from, is expended for irrigation development in the arid States of the West where it will produce the best results and reclaim barren land and make homes for the people and develop and build up that country, and the money that goes to the States is to be expended on roads and schools.

Mr. CANNON. I am inclined to vote for the conference report, but I shall be gratified if the arid regions and the mountain regions where irrigation is being developed do not finally have to come to the Treasury of the United States for assistance to take care of their irrigation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman in order to suggest that all of the proceeds coming from the naval reserves go into the Treasury.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; those funds may be so applied, and that is a very large sum, several million dollars.

Mr. Speaker, this law will apply to some 750,000,000 acres of public land in the United States and Alaska. It is a great constructive piece of legislation. It means homes and occupations for millions of people and vast benefits to the entire Nation, and I am gratified and proud to have taken an humble part in the long struggle to bring about the enactment of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I received the following telegram this morning, which I want to read to the House. To me it is a matter of great importance, and I believe the House should take some action in respect to the matter it refers to. It relates to the shipment of freight in the Southern States. The telegram is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 9, 1920.

CHAIRMAN WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The National Federation of Construction Industries, by action of its executive committee and in consultation with its constituent national associations, vigorously protests instructions issued by the United States Railroad Administration covering the Mississippi Valley region that from February 8 to 18 no box cars shall be loaded with other than news-print paper, wood pulp, sugar, grain, and less than car lot merchandise. This shuts off box cars for building materials and is disastrous to construction industry, will close down hundreds of manufacturing plants, tie up construction work now in progress, and throw hundreds of thousands of men out of employment. Preventing shipment of construction materials in box cars will largely reduce operations and shipments of producers of gravel, stone, and other construction materials handled in open cars. The disastrous effect of this order will probably not continue for 10 days only but may result in congestion and shortage of car supply for an indefinite period. This federation represents combined construction industry of United States, which has several hundred national associations of producers, $3,000,000,000 permanent wealth, annually supplies more than one-quarter of railroad tonnage, and employs more labor than any other industry.

ERNEST T. TRIGG,
President National Federation of Construction Industry.

That order has gone into effect and prohibits the shipment of meat in carload lots, the shipment of all kinds of textiles and clothing, provisions of every description, building material of all kinds, and all of those things I mention can only be shipped in box cars for the protection of the goods from the weather. The Railroad Administration has seen fit to issue this order prohibiting the shipment of all goods in box cars for the next 10 days, except as stated—print paper, wood pulp, sugar, and grain. Thousands of men will be thrown out of employment if the order continues, the telegram states, and it expresses the fear that the order will not extend merely over the 10 days but for a much longer period of time.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman from Michigan interviewed the Railroad Administration to ascertain the reasons they give for issuing this order?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I have not called upon them; but let me say to the gentleman I have in my office communications from every part of the country, which letters and telegrams have come in during the last 10 days, especially from the Northwest—Oregon, Idaho, Washington—and from the coal fields of Indiana and Illinois and Ohio, complaining of a shortage of cars. Those same complaints have also come from the South. The lumbermen of the South say they obtain 50 per cent less than their necessary supply of cars for the shipment of lumber and building material, which, of course, tends to increase the cost of production, because there is a shortage in the supply of building material in all the lumber yards of this country and in all of the cities of the country.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is just now giving probably a very good reason why the Railroad Administration issued this order. There is apparently a shortage of cars everywhere from what the gentleman says, and there may be pressing need that these particular things to which he refers should have preference over other articles in interstate commerce.

Mr. FORDNEY. That may be true; but if the gentleman will read the testimony just given before an investigating committee in the Senate he will find that at Asheville, N. C., there stood for 20 days on the tracks there 7,823 cars, unloaded by the Government, and the Government paid $81,000 of demurrage on empty cars. The cars are now being held on various sidetracks all over this country, to the detriment of business of the country, because of lack of efficiency in the administration of the railroads under Government control.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 350,000,000 acres of public lands remaining in continental United States and about 400,000,000 in Alaska. Of these lands, it is estimated that about 55,000,000 to 60,000,000 acres in continental United States contain coal of some sort. Seven million acres of those lands have been withdrawn as being valuable for oil or gas. The probability is that a much larger acreage than that of the public domain will be found valuable for oil or gas. Under the present law these coal lands may be sold at a price fixed by the department, not less than $10 to $20 an acre, depending upon their distance from the railroad. Oil lands may be taken and title acquired under the placer acts in any area that locators may desire to take them. Under this bill we reverse our policy of passing title to lands in fee, and reserve to the Government title to all the lands of the remaining public domain containing coal, gas, phosphate, and sodium. We provide for the leasing of those lands and like deposits which have been reserved in areas that have been disposed of under limited title under certain conditions set forth in the bill.

We have been endeavoring for 10 years to secure legislation of this character, but this year for the first time the House has had before it a bill that is strictly a leasing measure. It therefore fulfills the desires and the expectations of those who, 10 or 12 years ago, began the agitation for what was known as the conservation of the mineral resources of the public lands. The proceeds of the rents and royalties obtained from the lands are to be divided between the States in which the minerals are produced to an extent intended to reimburse them for the loss of taxing values; the Government, with a view of covering the cost of administration; and the national reclamation fund. From the best information possible to obtain it seems that the reclamation fund will receive immediately in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 from rents and royalties already accrued, and it is believed that from this source in the future the reclamation fund will be sufficiently large to carry on a systematic and reasonably speedy development of the irrigation possibilities of the 17 Western States which are the beneficiaries under the reclamation law.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. Bills proposing in part such a system as this have passed the House four times. Each time the bill has been a little better, and I think this bill is by far the best of all the bills that have been before the House. This is largely because of the fact that it is strictly a leasing measure, whereas the other bills that have been before the House provided partly for leasing and partly for the passage of the title in fee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman will recall, I am sure, the criticism that has been made of Congress concerning its neglect in passing legislation of this character. But I believe when this bill becomes a law it will show that the postponement was justified rather than to take one of the bills which heretofore passed one or the other branch of the Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is true; at any rate the bill is much better than the measures which have heretofore been before the Congress, and, curiously enough, the bill is not only an improvement in its effect on the public interest but in some respects it is much fairer to the men already on the ground and having claims of one sort or another, although, in my opinion, the measure does rather scant justice to some of those people. No one need feel worried in supporting this bill for fear it does too much for the men that had gone on the ground under the land laws and endeavored to develop these minerals. It does them rather scant justice, but it is the best that can be secured in that respect and it does safeguard the public interest.

I congratulate the Congress that it seems, after these years of effort, we are going to have a fairly reasonable and well-constructed leasing law and one that does thoroughly protect the public interest. There are still in the bill provisions which will entail unnecessary expense, especially in the coal sections, and provisions which will not, in my opinion, work well; but take it all in all the bill is a great advance along the lines of conservation. The passage of the bill is an important step in our program of progessive constructive legislation.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I think that there has been sufficient debate on this bill and sufficient explanation of it, and I ask for this time only to make some observations not having to do with further clearing the text of the bill, as I believe that is unnecessary. I desire to make brief reference to the work of the chairman of this committee, not only in the preparation of the bill as it passed the House, but in the conduct of the conference itself. This bill has been through the House four times, and for once, I believe, the House has got substantially all that it claimed in the way of advanced and enlightened legislation. In previous sessions the Senate has made some modification of the theory of the bill as it passed the House. I believe that chiefly through the aid of Chairman SINNOTT we now have a bill that represents fairly the attitude of the House as it was expressed in the House when the bill was passed. In no essential respect has the bill been modified, and this satisfactory result is largely due to Chairman SINNOTT. The congratulations of the House are due the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] for his splendid work. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. MONDELL, and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota makes the point of no quorum. Evidently no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the adoption of the conference report will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 287, nays 13, answered "present" 5, not voting 123, as follows:

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I wish to withdraw that vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. EVANS of Nevada, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The conference report is agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

WRANGELL, ALASKA.

Mr. GRIGSBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10746, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. That does not require unanimous consent. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10746) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools, the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, the construction of a sewer system, the construction of a city dock and floating dock, and to levy and collect a special tax therefor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. GRIGSBY. The amendment merely reduces the rate of interest on the bonds from 7 to 6 per cent.

Mr. GARD. It does not change the amount of the bond issue, but the rate of interest on the bonds is changed from 7 to 6?

Mr. GRIGSBY. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Is that satisfactory to the community up there?

Mr. GRIGSBY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

COTTON YARN.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of House resolution 451, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report, and for the immediate consideration of the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 451.

Whereas the prices of combed cotton yarns have increased several hundred per cent during the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive, more than 100 per cent of which was during the last six months of the year 1919; and

Whereas this increase has been greatly in excess of the increase of the cost of the raw cotton and the labor entering into the manufacture of such yarns, and can not therefore be attributed to such increases. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby requested to inquire into the increase in the price of combed cotton yarns during the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive, and especially during the last six months of the year 1919; to ascertain the cause or necessity for and the reasonableness of such increase; to ascertain the difference between the increase in the price of the yarn on the one hand and the increase in the cost of raw cotton and the labor entering into the cost of the manufacture of such yarn; and to report to the House at the earliest practicable date the result of the investigation, together with such recommendations as the commission may deem advisable and proper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman whether he would be willing to include cotton fabrics; not only yarns but things which are manufactured out of yarns, namely, cotton cloth, and muslin, and ginghams, and things of that kind that have increased in value from 300 to 500 per cent?

Mr. TILSON. I would have no objection unless the effect would be to make the investigation so wide that before any part of it could be made its usefulness would be past.

Mr. SABATH. I am informed that there is an agreement on the part of the manufacturers of some of these articles whereby they deliberately close down their factories and shops for the purpose of retarding production, thereby being able to greatly increase the price of such muslins and cotton cloths as they manufacture. In view of that fact I believe that the investigation should go further than simply the manufacture of yarns. It should include the manufacture of cloths and muslins and other cotton fabrics.

Mr. TILSON. I do not believe that the gentleman from Illinois is getting at the trouble. The yarns that I speak of, if I understand correctly, do not enter into the manufacture of muslins, although they do enter into the manufacture of other fabrics. From such investigation as I have been able to make of it, I think the greatest increases have been in combed cotton yarn, increases such as I have been unable to account for. The Federal Trade Commission is willing to make the investigation. All that is desired is a request on the part of Congress or either House of Congress that the commission do it.

Mr. SABATH. I am very anxious, perhaps more anxious than the gentleman is himself, to have such an investigation started, and I feel satisfied that when they do start——

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Connecticut that he ask unanimous consent to put in cotton cloths.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to widening the sphere of this investigation to a certain extent, and ask unanimous consent to modify my resolution by inserting cotton cloths.

Mr. SABATH. Cotton cloths and muslins and ginghams.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is all right.

Mr. TILSON. It will probably be necessary to investigate to a certain extent these matters, anyway, because the manufacturers of these products made from cotton yarns would probably be as much interested as anyone else.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wishes to modify his resolution so broadly, the Chair thinks it would be better to bring it in after it is completed.

Mr. TILSON. Very well.

LOUISIANA SUGAR.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the interrogatories passed by the House of Representatives on December 18, 1919, and sent to the Attorney General, in relation to the fixing of the price of Louisiana sugar, and his answers, filed in the House on February 6 last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the queries propounded to the Attorney General relative to sugar and his answer thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is the matter that the gentleman showed me. The answers of the Attorney General are now included in a House document, are they not?

Mr. TINKHAM. They are printed in a House document, but they have not yet been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GARD. Why should they now be printed in the RECORD? What is the reason?

Mr. TINKHAM. The reason is this: There is going to be action taken in relation to these interrogatories and a discussion of them, and I believe that the House of Representatives should have them printed in order that they may be before it in comprehensive form.

Mr. GARD. Has there been any report from the Federal Trade Commission on the investigation of the sugar question which some time ago was authorized?

Mr. TINKHAM. There has been no report by the Federal Trade Commission upon that order of investigation.

Mr. GARD. When was the investigation ordered?

Mr. TINKHAM. It was ordered the 1st day of last October.

Mr. GARD. It seems to be following the usual course of investigations, which are not made until the use of the investigation has ceased.

Mr. TINKHAM. I am sorry to say that the observation of the honorable Representative from Ohio seems to be true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman states that he wishes to place these two documents in the RECORD so that there will be action taken hereafter. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether that action will be political or otherwise?

Mr. TINKHAM. It will not be political. It will be economic, and I hope it will be for the benefit of the American people when finished.

Mr. GARD. What action will that be?

Mr. TINKHAM. I intend on next Thursday to address the House in relation to these interrogatories and the answers thereto under general debate on the Military Academy bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How will the gentleman get in?

Mr. GARD. That is not action. That is conversation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the documents referred to:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1920.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives, dated December 18, 1919, I beg to transmit the following:

1. As to paragraph 1, I beg to state that I neither made, assented to, nor approved the price for Louisiana sugar on the plantation of 17 cents per pound for yellow clarified and 18 cents per pound for plantation granulated.

2. As to paragraph 2, in view of my answer to paragraph 1, I deem no further answer necessary.

3. As to the first request in paragraph 3, I beg to state that it has not been usual for the office of the Attorney General in advance of legal action to render an official opinion in relation to the United States criminal statutes and notify possible violators of his interpretation of them, nor has it ever been done to my knowledge.

In answer to the second request in paragraph 3, I never notified the Louisiana sugar producers that under laws against profiteering they would not be prosecuted if they sold yellow clarified at 17 cents per pound and plantation granulated at 18 cents per pound.

4. In answer to paragraph 4, I beg to state that in the fall of 1919 this department was called upon to give some guide to the United States district attorney in New Orleans as to facts and circumstances which should be taken into consideration by him in beginning criminal prosecutions.

This implied a determination that, as a practical proposition, he might successfully contend in court, in the absence of particular circumstances, that a sale of sugar above a reasonable, fair, maximum price for this year's Louisiana crop of sugar was an excessive price and therefore a violation of the Lever law. He had before him the fact that Louisiana sugar was selling in the open market at from 20 to 27 cents, that the crop was but 40 per cent of the normal, and that the price was rapidly mounting.

It was the opinion of the department that all these factors would be taken into consideration by the court in considering any prosecutions, and that prosecutions begun in disregard of such considerations would offer no prospect of eventual success.

On November 7, 1919, the United States district attorney in New Orleans wired the Attorney General as follows:

"NEW ORLEANS, LA., November 7, 1919.

"ATTORNEY GENERAL,
"Washington, D. C.:

"After a protracted meeting with the sugar planters their committee agreed to a fair price of 17 cents per pound for prime yellow clarified sugar, net on plantation with 1 cent additional per pound for choice plantation granulated intermediate grades in proportion. The committee further recommended that all sales where delivery has begun by evidence of bills of lading shall stand, but recommended that all contracts for a higher figure be abrogated in fairness to all producers and manufacturers whose action in making contracts has been delayed by deference to authorities. Prime yellow clarified sold on the open market in New Orleans yesterday at 20½ cents, market virtually bare, with ready buyers for all sugar of that grade at that price. My session with the planters was a protracted one and was held after I had talked to many of the leading consumers and obtained their views. The committee itself was composed largely of the most conservative element of planters, yet there was only one member of the committee originally consenting to the 17 cents suggestion, all other members holding for a higher price because of the admitted short crop and low sugar yield. Stating in this connection that such cane as had passed through the mill showed an unusually poor yield of sugar, making estimates of production made a week ago high, and indicates losses to many even at prices agreed. I have sought the very best sources of advice in this matter and have reached conclusion that the 17 cents agreed upon is reasonable and recommend that the department accept it. I have reached this conclusion because 17 cents as a maximum price does not carry with it any guarantee that the entire crop can be disposed of at that figure and it is probable that the average for the crop would be considerably less. I have before me your telegram 6th referring to willingness of conference committee to accept 14 or 15 cents as price for entire crop. I had this fact in mind when I wired you November 3, but as Government is not in a position to guarantee the producer any fixed price for his crop and is necessarily limited to establishing a fair price, which virtually means maximum price, it would be impossible to secure consent of planters to fix the fair average price as a maximum price because of the vast difference existing between maximum price and average price for crop. I believe the action of the planters yesterday represents the extreme limit of their concessions although they met me in a conciliatory spirit. Sincerely hope that maximum price suggested may be acceptable to the department. Please instruct me by wire.

"MOONEY,
"United States Attorney."

On November 8, 1919, the following telegram was sent:

"MOONEY,
"United States Attorney, New Orleans, La.:

"Your wire of the 8th, detailing results of conference. Consider agreed price rather high, but hereby concur in maximum fixed price of 17 cents for Louisiana plantation clarifieds, 18 cents for Louisiana clear granulated. Understanding that all contracts for a higher figure to be abrogated. Further suggest, if possible, you secure an agreement in writing by authorized committee of Louisiana producers and refiners to be used as prima facie evidence where prices are charged in excess of agreement. You are hereby instructed to immediately prosecute any violator of this agreed price.

"PALMER."

These telegrams do not at all mean that we fixed the price, but do mean that, under all the special circumstances existing as to the Louisiana crops, this department was willing to concede that prosecutions would be ineffectual and unsuccessful if based upon a contention that any price less than 17 cents per pound for yellow clarified and 18 cents per pound for plantation granulated was an "excessive price" under the Lever law.

Respectfully submitted.

A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Attorney General.

House resolution 394.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 18, 1919.

Resolved, That the Attorney General is hereby directed to report to the House of Representatives forthwith—

(1) Whether he made, assented to, or approved in any way of a price for Louisiana sugar on the plantation of 17 cents per pound for yellow clarified and 18 cents per pound for plantation granulated.

(2) Upon what authority of law he has fixed or agreed that the price of Louisiana sugar on the plantation should be 17 cents per pound for yellow clarified and 18 cents per pound for plantation granulated.

(3) Whether it has been usual for the office of the Attorney General, in advance of legal action, to render an official opinion in relation to the United States Criminal Statutes and notify possible violators of his interpretation of them and whether he notified Louisiana sugar producers that under laws against profiteering they would not be prosecuted if they sold yellow clarified at 17 cents per pound and plantation granulated at 18 cents per pound.

(4) The facts upon which he fixed or agreed upon the maximum price of 17 cents per pound for yellow clarified and 18 cents per pound for plantation granulated and how these facts were obtained.

Attest:

(Signed) WILLIAM TYLER PAGE,
Clerk.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1374. An act for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell;

S. 2773. An act for the relief of Ethel Proctor;

S. 2614. An act for the relief of Francis M. Atherton;

S. 2861. An act for the relief of the Davis Construction Co.;

S. 547. An act authorizing the enlistment of non-English-speaking citizens and aliens;

S. 3738. An act abolishing the United States Housing Corporation; and

S. 2978. An act to establish additional fish-cultural subsidiary stations in the State of Michigan.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 3620. An act to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to change the names of vessels;

H. R. 683. An act for the relief of William E. Johnson;

H. R. 5065. An act for the relief of Carlow Avellina; and

H. R. 396. An act to authorize the payment of certain amounts for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, S. Dak.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 49.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11368) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to dispose of Senate amendments numbered 114 and 115 in manner and form as if the House had receded from its disagreement to said amendments and had agreed to the same.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1374. An act for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2773. An act for the relief of Ethel Proctor; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2614. An act for the relief of Francis M. Atherton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2861. An act for the relief of the Davis Construction Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 547. An act authorizing the enlistment of non-English-speaking citizens and aliens; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3738. An act abolishing the United States Housing Corporation; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 2978. An act to establish additional fish-cultural subsidiary stations in the State of Michigan; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11368. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MONAHAN] be allowed to address the House on the morning of the 23d of February, after the Journal has been read, upon the subject of George Washington.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MONAHAN] be permitted to address the House on Monday, February 23, on the subject of George Washington, for 20 minutes, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the request.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say to the gentleman that the request was that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MONAHAN] be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes on George Washington after the reading of the Journal on the 23d of February, the 22d falling upon Sunday; hence the request for the 23d.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I see no reason for objecting, although I wonder if the gentleman from Wisconsin intends to address the House on every anniversary day that we celebrate. On Thursday of this week he is to address the House on Lincoln.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, I am sure the address will be well worth listening to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No doubt it will be, but it will take that much time from the public business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—has the matter been brought to the attention of the majority leader as to the disposition of time on that side?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, has there been any provision made yet for the reading of Washington's Farewell Address on the 23d?

The SPEAKER. There has not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker may designate some Member of the House—not myself—to read Washington's Farewell Address on the 23d.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Speaker suggest the name of a Member to read Washington's Farewell Address on the morning of the 23d, immediately after the reading of the Journal and before the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MONAHAN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COTTON YARNS.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] his amendment ready?

Mr. TILSON. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I renew my request. I send my proposed amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. Res. 451 with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 3, page 1, after the word "yarns," by inserting the words "and cotton cloths."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, this resolution directing an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission is now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I understood the gentleman to state that the reason, or one reason at least, why it had not been acted upon by that committee was because the railroad bill was in conference.

Mr. TILSON. I understand that the committee has not had a meeting.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope and have reason to believe that that reason will soon disappear. I think it is a very bad practice to undertake to direct a department or branch of the Government to make an investigation which will cost thousands of dollars and which in the end usually proves worthless without the resolution being considered by a committee.

Mr. TILSON. In this case, as the gentleman knows, the Federal Trade Commission is working all the time. If the commission is not doing this work it will be doing some other work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The other work may be quite as important as this. I know that whenever the Federal Trade Commission are directed by either House of Congress to make an investigation they predicate a request for an appropriation upon that direction, and whenever they run short of work they get some Member of Congress, either in this body or the other, to suggest a direction to them to proceed with work. Now, I do not assume that is the case in this particular instance——

Mr. TILSON. It is not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Though I dare say the gentleman has conferred with the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. TILSON. I tried to get the commission to make the investigation without this formal request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Which they have full authority to do under the law. But the moment they are directed to do it, then they come before the Committee on Appropriations and say, "Why, Congress has directed us to do this. We must have so much money with which to do it." Now, my friend from Connecticut thinks it is wise for us to spend the money in that way. I do not, but I think we ought to have the opinion of a committee on the subject as to whether it is wise to spend money in that way or not. It will cost that much more money to make this investigation. I do not think the investigation will amount to the snap of your finger after it is made. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] probably knows a good deal more about cotton and cotton raising than I do. I think we ought to have a report from a committee before we direct the Federal Trade Commission to spend a large amount of money in making an investigation, whether it is useful or useless.

Mr. TILSON. Of course, the gentleman can object if he wishes, and can prevent the passage of this resolution now. If so, I shall have to wait until the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce can pass upon it, and I do not know when that will be. Meanwhile the good that such an investigation might accomplish will certainly be lessened.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They will not finish an investigation of this sort in a year's time.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, yes; I understand they make a good many investigations of this kind in a year's time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; they do not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12272, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening a point of order had been made and disposed of.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 35, line 13, after the colon, insert:

"Provided further, That no part of any appropriation in this act for Forest Service shall be expended on any national forest in which the fees charged for grazing shall be at a rate less than 300 per cent of the existing rate."

Mr. HAYDEN. I make the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and an attempt to change existing law under the guise of a limitation.

The existing law provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to fix the grazing fees upon national forests. The amendment offered by the gentleman directs the Secretary of Agriculture to treble the existing grazing fees. Clearly legislation of that character is not in order upon an appropriation bill. I do not believe that by indirection, under the pretense of a limitation, the gentleman from Iowa can accomplish that purpose.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe there can be no question about the amendment being in order. As stated by the gentleman from Arizona, the Secretary now has authority to fix grazing fees. The amendment is simply a limitation upon the appropriation. It states that none of the money appropriated shall be expended unless a certain fee is charged, which seems to me is entirely in order. As to the authority to charge for grazing permits, that question has been passed upon by the Supreme Court and settled.

Mr. HAYDEN. The connection between increasing the fees for grazing upon a national forest and the necessary appropriation for carrying on the administration of that forest is not such as to justify the contention that the gentleman is making. The effect of his amendment would be that unless the Secretary of Agriculture trebled the grazing rate upon a given forest that national forest could not be administered; that nothing whatever could be done. All the Forest Service employees would be discharged and forest fires allowed to rage unchecked. Timber trespassing would take place without restraint, with the forests unguarded. The effect of such legislation would be absolutely ruinous.

Mr. HAUGEN. The amendment does not go that far. It is within the power of Congress to determine how money shall be expended, and that is all that is sought to be done by this amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. What the gentleman seeks to do, in fact, is to legislate upon an appropriation bill under the guise of a limitation.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is not legislation. It is simply a limitation on the appropriation for the Forest Service. I will read from a memorandum submitted by the Forest Service on this proposition:

> The act of June 4, 1897, originally authorized the Secretary of the Interior to administer the national forests. The part of that act which is pertinent shows the authority of the Secretary to prescribe rules and regulations. This act does not direct the Secretary of the Interior specifically to make a charge for any uses or sales. The question was raised, and the Attorney General of the United States held in 1905 that the language of the act gave the Secretary of Agriculture the right to establish rules and regulations for the use of national forest land and the right to fix a charge for such usage. The opinion of the Attorney General has since been sustained by the Supreme Court.

So there is no question about the authority of the Secretary to fix the fees, and, of course, there can be no question but that Congress has authority to determine how money appropriated shall be expended.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the gentleman from Iowa deny that the effect of his amendment will take out of the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion now lodged in him by law and compel him to increase the grazing fees by three times the present charges?

Mr. HAUGEN. The forest reserves have been transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture with the same power formerly granted the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAYDEN. Exactly; and the effect of the gentleman's amendment will be to take away the discretion now lodged in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture by existing law and compel him to arbitrarily treble the grazing fees now paid.

Mr. HAUGEN. The amendment prescribes how the money appropriated shall be expended. If the forests are to be wasted, then we do not propose to spend the money appropriated. The amendment provides that if the Secretary will impose a proper charge for the grazing permits, as specified in this amendment, the money may be expended, but if the forests are to be wasted, then no money shall be available for expenditure. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not recall the exact terms of the amendment suggested, but will this amendment, if agreed to, affect contracts for leasing or grazing now in existence?

Mr. HAUGEN. It may affect the contracts; but all of the contracts are made conditional, it being stipulated that they may be terminated at the discretion of the Secretary. The amendment provides that no part of the appropriation for the Forest Service shall be expended on any national forest in which the fees charged for grazing shall be at a rate less than 300 per cent of the existing rates.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would require the Secretary to cancel all of the contracts.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Do not say "Oh, no," until I finish my statement, because the gentleman is not correct. It would require the Secretary to cancel all grazing contracts now in existence before he could expend a dollar of the money carried by this act. The gentleman shakes his head, but it seems to me that the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. HAUGEN. No repudiation of contracts is suggested.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; nothing is said in the amendment about contracts; but here is a case, we may say, where a man has a contract for grazing. The gentleman says that no part of this material should be expended in the Forest Service as long as that contract is not doubled or trebled. Is not that changing the contract?

Mr. HAUGEN. The contracts when made are all drawn conditional upon just this sort of a proposition; that is, the right to terminate or modify the contracts is reserved by the Secretary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know; but the gentleman, I think, makes this incorrect assumption, that a limitation on an appropriation bill on one subject directing the Secretary to do something means that he is not to expend the money. That is not the case. A limitation in an appropriation bill is put there to prevent a certain thing being done, not to prevent the expenditure of the money at all. I do not know, but I still agree with the gentleman on the point of order. I was trying to when we started out. It seems to me that the gentleman's amendment now requires the Secretary of the Interior to cancel all of the contracts that are now outstanding and add three times the contract price if they are to be renewed. The Secretary of the Interior can not refuse to expend this money. He has no jurisdiction to say that he will not support the national forests. The law requires him to do that. If he is to do it, then we direct him to do something which I think we have not any right to do.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What percentage of those lands are under contract now?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are all under contract.

Mr. SNELL. Practically all of them?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; and I think they ought to be made to pay more. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. No person can graze live stock on a national forest without a permit from the Secretary of Agriculture, and every grazer of live stock has now such a permit, which, if this legislation is agreed to, would have to be canceled and the grazing rates trebled.

Mr. SNELL. How long do these contracts run?

Mr. HAYDEN. A large number of permits were issued for five years, beginning with the year 1919, under a new policy announced by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SNELL. How much have they been raised lately?

Mr. HAYDEN. The last raise was 100 per cent. Twenty-five per cent was added to the grazing fees on national forests in 1918 and a 100 per cent increase was made in 1919. That 100 per cent raise was agreed to by the stockmen of the national forests upon the express condition that instead of year to year permits the new permits should be issued for five years. I have in my hand a copy of that class of five-year permits which I shall insert at this point.

[Sample copy.]

[United States Department of Agriculture, Forest Service. Five-year grazing permit. (This permit is not transferable and may be revoked within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.)]

APRIL 10, 1919.

John Doe, of Winslow, Arizona, having paid to the First National Bank of Albuquerque, N. Mex. (U. S. depository), the grazing fee, amounting to the sum of seventy-two and no/100 dollars ($72.00), is hereby authorized to pasture the following number and class of live stock: One hundred (100) head of cattle, upon the lands of the United States within the Coconino National Forest, from May 1, 1919, to October 31, 1919, and during the same period each year following until October 31, 1923, provided payment of like amount is made each year thirty days before the beginning of the grazing period.

Provided, That the animals shall not intrude upon any area upon which grazing is prohibited, nor upon any portion of the national forest except the following-described area: The Buckhorn grazing district.

This permit is issued upon the facts stated and under the promises and agreements made by said John Doe in his application dated December 1, 1918, and subject to the stipulations printed on the back hereof.

This permit is issued with no obligation or agreement on the part of the Government to maintain an exclusive possession upon any part of said forest to any one person or firm, nor as to adjustment of any conflict as to possession.

For violation of any of the terms of the application on which it is based, or whenever any injury is being done the forest by reason of the presence of the animals therein, this permit will be revoked and the animals will be removed from the forest.

RICHARD ROE, Supervisor.

STIPULATIONS.

The acceptance of this permit binds the permittee and his employees, engaged in caring for the animals while on the forest, to extinguish, before leaving the vicinity thereof, all camp fires started by himself or any of his employees; to render all reasonable aid in extinguishing forest fires within the district in which the stock is grazed, such service to be without compensation if required to protect the grazing area described in this permit, but at the prevailing rate of compensation if otherwise; to obey and support all the laws and regulations governing national forests; to pay for all damages sustained by the United States through any violation by himself or his employees of such laws or regulations or of the terms of this permit; and to forfeit this permit whenever the national forest for any reason ceases to exist, or for a violation of the national forest regulations now or hereafter adopted or of any of the terms of this permit, or whenever an injury is being done to the forest by reason of the presence of the animals therein.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Arizona yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman is not quite right in saying that so many of the contracts run for five years, and that they were made so in pursuance of a statement of policy by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture conferred with those who lease the national forests for grazing purposes, and one of the subjects under discussion was the amount that should be charged. The Secretary suggested an increase, but said that according to his policy there would be no considerable further increase during the coming five years. Some of the contracts were made for five years following that conference, but every contract made and every permit issued contains an express provision that the amount can be changed at any time, and that for reasons sufficient to the Secretary it may be canceled entirely at any time. So that the adoption of the provision suggested by the gentleman from Iowa would be no violation of existing contracts.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is in violation of the announced policy of the Secretary of Agriculture, which appears in a letter printed on page 127 of the hearings, to the effect that the time had arrived on the national forests where five-year permits could be issued; that he had directed and authorized the issuance of such permits. It further appears in the testimony before the committee that a large number of such permits have been issued. To my certain knowledge practically every permit issued on the forests of my State during the past year has been for five years.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That policy the Secretary of Agriculture talked about was a policy that he had been pursuing of charging only a fraction of the value of the forests for grazing purposes. He was inclined to continue that policy. It is the idea of the Congress, at least if the Committee on Agriculture properly represents the sentiment of Congress, that his policy is wrong and ought to be changed. The Secretary ought not to continue to permit the forests to be used at a very small part of their value. The policy ought to be changed. And, besides, it is the province of the Congress to determine the policy, and the amendment the committee offers determines the policy that there should be increases. When the Secretary talks about five years, it is simply giving voice to his sentiment that his old policy of charging a very small fee ought not to be changed, at least for five years. Congress differs from him; at least it ought to. The Committee on Agriculture differs from him radically and has made this recommendation to the House.

Mr. HAYDEN. The committee itself in the amendment which was reported to the House provided for five-year permits. The committee is adopting the announced policy of the Secretary of Agriculture, except that they make a difference in the time as to when that policy shall go into effect. The Secretary decided the question in 1919 and made a 100 per cent raise, and now, by reason of the present inflated values of live stock, the committee is of opinion that a further raise can be made in the middle of the present five-year period, and arbitrarily seeks to impose this burden on the live-stock industry of the national forests.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, an amendment has been offered in the guise of a limitation. There are at least two things that can not be done under the guise of a limitation. Under the pretense of a limitation you can not change existing law. You can not under that guise or pretense take from an executive officer the discretion, authority, and control that has been vested in him. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa does both of these things. It changes existing law, and in changing existing law it takes from the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion which he is now exercising. That it does that is evidenced very clearly by the discussion that has been had relative to the five-year contracts which the Secretary has entered into acting under his discretion. Having the authority to fix the rates, he has been fixing them, and in many cases he has entered into agreements under which five-year leases have been granted.

The rulings with regard to limitations on appropriations have been quite liberal, but they have been very clear and definite, in that they deny the right to change existing law or take from the discretion of an executive officer under the guise of an attempt to limit the use of money appropriated. It is not a question as to the wisdom or virtue or propriety of the plan proposed.

It is clearly out of order, because it is a change of existing law and legislation under guise of a limitation. It does take from an executive officer the discretion which the law has given him and the discretion which he is now exercising, and the discretion under which he has made five-year contracts in many cases.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard very briefly on the point of order.

I want to direct the attention of the Chair to some decisions with which I anticipate he is already familiar, for the purposes of the record. I want to direct the attention of the Chair to the character of the limitations which have heretofore been sustained by the Chair as limitations against points of order such as are made against this proposition.

For instance, it has been held that while it is not in order on an appropriation bill to require lettering on public vehicles, it is in order to withhold an appropriation from all that are not lettered. Now, if it would be in order to apply a limitation to an appropriation in the Post Office appropriation bill to the effect that no part of the appropriation should be spent for the maintenance of vehicles, we will say, unless they were lettered in a certain way, it would seem to follow in the same way that you might put a limitation upon an appropriation for the national forests providing that no part of the funds for that service should be spent in the national forests in which the grazing fees were less than a certain amount.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point that the effect of this limitation will be to require the cancellation of these contracts. Now, let me put it squarely to the Chair. Would the Chair say that the Congress would have no authority to say in this particular that no part of any appropriation made for the Forest Service in this act should be spent in any national forest in which the Forest Service had made a certain contract? I venture to say that the Chair would not so hold. It seems to me that it follows that the mere fact that the effect of this limitation is to require the cancellation of a contract does not of itself make this limitation subject to a point of order.

There is another decision which is even more in point than the one to which I have alluded. In volume 4 of Hinds' Precedent, paragraph 3995, it was held that the following paragraph was in order:

For transportation of mail by pneumatic tube or other similar devices, by purchase or otherwise, $225,000.

A point of order was made against that item on the ground that it was not authorized by law; that it was a change of existing law, because the Postmaster General had the authority to carry the mail anyway he pleased, and that this was a direction to him to do it in a certain way. Now, we have exactly the same situation in the national forests. The Agricultural Department has the power to require a fee to be paid for grazing. We simply say that that charge shall not be less than so much, upon the condition that the appropriation shall not be spent unless it is so much. It seems to me that the proposition which the gentleman from Iowa proposes is not a change of existing law or in violation of the rules, nor is it outside of the purview of the rules which apply to limitations upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. In citing the references in Hinds' Precedents in regard to the Post Office bill, how was the point of order finally determined?

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, it was held in that case that the item was in order.

Mr. HICKS. So that the limitation proposed to be placed in the Post Office appropriation bill was held to be in order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Absolutely. And there are a number of decisions going as far as this one does.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is not as happy as he ordinarily is in citing precedents. His first precedent cited a case where there was no law—no sort of law——

Mr. ANDERSON. There is not any here.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). In regard to lettering vehicles; and, therefore, it might very properly be said that a certain appropriation being made, it could not be applied to vehicles that were not lettered.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. There was no law affected by that. That was clearly a limitation.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman, of course, will not contend that you can make new law in an appropriation bill but you can not change existing law?

Mr. MONDELL. It was not new law. To simply say that this particular appropriation shall not be spent on a particular class of vehicles is not making new law at all. It is clearly a limitation—as clear as noonday.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in that particular instance the Chair held, in the form of legislation instead of in the form of limitation, it was legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well. The gentleman is urging that it was a limitation, and I was taking his word for it, and I think he was right about it. It was clearly a limitation on the appropriation. It did not propose to fix any law or provide any law or establish any rule of law or practice. He then quoted another case in which there was no law. And I think all three of the cases cited were of that character—for instance, the provision with regard to the pneumatic tubes. In the absence of any law, the appropriation might be made with a limitation; but, Mr. Chairman, there is a law on this subject, and the law is that the Secretary shall fix the fee. And an amendment has been offered under which the Congress fixes the fee at three times the present fee. It is a legislative fixing of a fee, and thereby it amends the law which allows the Secretary to fix fees, and it takes from the Secretary's discretion. Clearly this is an effort to change existing law and enact a new law, and to take from the discretion of an executive officer under the guise and pretense of a mere limitation.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the Chair will look at paragraph 3931 of Hinds' Precedents he will find the principle announced that legislation can not be proposed under the form of a limitation, and thereafter follow pages and pages of precedents in support of that general principle of parliamentary law. Apparently the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has thumbed his volume of precedents very thoroughly and has been able to find but two doubtful cases in support of the exceptional and ingenious argument he now is making. There can be no doubt but that under the standing rules of the House this amendment is not in order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. FRENCH. I wanted to develop the idea a little bit further by saying that if this could be held to be in order under the guise of a limitation you could attach a provision to any appropriation bill saying that unless the conditions there recited shall be enacted and complied with the appropriation shall not be expended. It is precisely what is done here, except it is done in a few words. There is existing law on the subject, and it is proposed to change it by increasing the fees 300 per cent arbitrarily.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard very briefly on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to cite the place in the precedents where the reference is to be found to which he called attention.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is in volume 4, paragraph 3953, and the Chair will find precedents along in the same order at about the same place. I did not cite them all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, conceding that this amendment would change the law, which I do not concede at all, because I think the gentleman from Minnesota is correct about it, I still think the amendment would be in order for this reason: I read now very briefly from a decision of Chairman Crisp, quoted on page 507 of the Manual:

The Holman rule provides an additional method of legislating upon an appropriation bill. The proviso to clause 2 of Rule XXI provides that legislation, the natural consequence of which is to retrench expenditures, is in order if it is proposed by a committee of the House having jurisdiction of the legislative subject matter of the amendment or by a joint commission.

Mr. HAYDEN. But it must be conceded that this amendment is not proposed by a committee having jurisdiction of the legislative subject matter, so that the rule which the gentleman from Iowa has quoted would not apply.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why not?

Mr. HAYDEN. The only way by which legislation that would be in order under the Holman rule can come before the House is by a report from a standing committee to the House. This amendment was offered from the floor by a Member of the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. It does not make any difference as to the form of the amendment if the committee has jurisdiction of it.

Mr. HAYDEN. To be in order such an amendment must be regularly reported to the House by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is a committee amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Iowa is mistaken. This is not a committee amendment. It is an amendment offered individually by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. It was not acted upon by the Committee on Agriculture and was not reported by that committee to the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I misunderstood that. I understood this was a committee amendment. If it is not a committee amendment, my remarks do not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which reads as follows:

Provided further, That no part of any appropriation in this act for the Forest Service shall be expended on any national forest in which the fees charged for grazing shall be at a rate less than 300 per cent of the existing rates.

To which amendment the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] makes the point of order that it is legislation changing existing law and is not proper to be placed on the bill.

The Chair has examined the precedents cited by gentlemen who have discussed the point of order, and the Chair believes that as a general proposition an amendment proposed as a limitation must be a limitation upon the appropriation, and should not be an affirmative limitation upon the official who may be vested with discretion or specific authority under existing law. In the view of the Chair, this limitation does not come within the rule laid down in the case of the public vehicles—the precedent cited by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]—where the appropriation was withheld for a certain class of public vehicles.

The Chair understands, as he referred to the authority yesterday, that the Secretary of Agriculture under existing law is vested with certain discretionary power. It is sought by this amendment to so modify that law, which gives him the general discretion or wide discretion, as to limit his discretion in the matter of the regulation of fees for grazing on national forests. In the opinion of the Chair this is a limitation which would forbid the whole of the appropriation made for the national forests from being expended, except upon the condition that an executive officer should take a certain specified course which he is not now required to take under existing law, and it is a limitation upon the discretion and authority of the executive officer rather than a limitation upon the appropriation. The Chair does not think that the amendment comes within the provisions of the Holman rule, and is therefore constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 35, line 13, after the figures "$1,000," insert: "Provided further, That no part of any appropriation in this act for the Forest Service shall be expended on or in connection with any national forest in which the fees charged for grazing shall be less than the appraised value of such grazing as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment just offered seeks, by an alleged limitation upon an appropriation, to change existing law.

The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota provides that there shall be an appraisal of the value of grazing on the national forests, and that unless such an appraisal is made—a duty which is not now imposed upon the Secretary—the appropriations made by this bill can not be used. The existing law authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to fix the grazing fees. This thinly disguised limitation seeks to take away from the Secretary a power that he now possesses.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the Chair, being a very distinguished parliamentarian, is familiar with the fact that very slight changes in amendments, at least changes which appear to be very slight on the surface, often constitute sufficient modification to bring a proposed item within the rule, where another item of very similar character would be outside of the rule.

Now, there is a very marked difference between the amendment which I have offered and the amendment which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] offered with respect to its status as a limitation. The amendment which the gentleman from Iowa offered did have the effect, perhaps, within reasonable grounds of argument at least, of changing the law in the sense that it affirmatively increased the fees which the Secretary was charging in the national forests under existing law. It fixed the charges at a higer rate than under existing law. The amendment which I have offered does not have that effect. It simply provides that no part of the appropriation shall be expended in a national forest in which the fees charged shall be less than the appraised value as determined by the Secretary.

Now, under the decision of the Supreme Court, the Secretary of Agriculture determines what is the value of the grazing. Under this item he would continue to determine what is the value of the grazing. He might determine that its value is exactly what he is charging now. I hope he will not do that. I hope he will change his basis of appraisal from a nominal basis to a commercial basis. But this does not require him to do that. It does not affirmatively require him to change the charges in a national forest at all. It certainly does not go any further than the item to which I referred the Chairman in my prior argument in case of the Post Office Department, where it was held that although the Postmaster General had the power to distribute the mails or carry the mails in any way he pleased, the item might direct him to carry them in a particular manner.

Now, I want to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no affirmative or specific law giving the Secretary of Agriculture the power to fix these grazing rates. What happened was this: The Secretary had general powers to make rules and regulations relative to the use of the national forests. Under that power he fixed the grazing charges in the national forests, and the Supreme Court, in a test case, held that the Secretary of Agriculture had that power. He still has it. He has it under my amendment. He can make the grazing fees exactly what they are to-day. But even if this amendment required him to make the charges on the basis of the appraised value in the sense of the commercial value of the grazing, I contend that the limitation is clearly within the precedent laid down in the case to which I referred touching the Post Office Department.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Minnesota concedes that the Secretary of Agriculture, under the law and decisions of the Supreme Court, now has the power to fix the grazing fees?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; and he can fix no fee at all.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Secretary is not limited by the existing law as to how he shall arrive at a determination of what the grazing fees shall be. But the gentleman's amendment limits the Secretary of Agriculture to an appraisal as the only method of determining the value of the grazing on the forest reserves. Therefore the amendment limits his discretion and authority to that particular way of arriving at the value of the grazing privilege.

Mr. ANDERSON. I say he has to arrive at it by some method now, and the mere fact that this designates the method does not make it subject to a point of order, because it is clearly within the limit of the rule laid down in the case I referred to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. It is very clear that the amendment offered limits the discretion of the Secretary, as just suggested by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. He may now arrive at his determination of what the grazing fees are to be through any process that seems proper to him. He may take into consideration any number of factors, and he should take into consideration a great variety of factors that ought to be considered; but the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] would limit him to the consideration of one factor of the equation in the determination of what the grazing fee should be.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; but under the existing law the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has the right to fix the grazing fees upon an Indian reservation without appraisal. He simply offers them to the highest bidder. That would be one method of fixing the grazing fees without any appraisal at all. The Secretary of Agriculture has the same authority.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have not the floor.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is a very simple test that may be applied to this amendment. Should it be adopted what would be the law then in force as compared with the existing law?

Under existing law the Secretary of Agriculture is not hedged about with any limitation upon his discretion. He is clothed with a discretion which he may exercise, not according to any prescribed rules, but upon the considerations that in his judgment are proper to be included in arriving at a decision. Will that be the situation of the Secretary if this amendment is adopted? Not at all. This amendment hedges him about in the exercise of his discretion. To hedge an official about in the exercise of discretion is to reduce that discretion, and to reduce one's discretion is to change existing law, for the manifest reason that as a result of this reduction the Secretary will have less authority under the law than he formerly enjoyed. Applying the principle of limitation to the expenditure of money it is perfectly competent for Congress to say that officials shall not have the benefit of money that we appropriate under circumstances specifically indicated. It is always competent for Congress to do this, but that is a very different thing from undertaking to say to an official that he shall not enjoy the benefits of an appropriation unless he does something or causes something to be done which requires the force of the amendment either to enable him to do or to compel him to do.

Mr. RAKER. And in addition to that, this amendment gives him no discretion, because it provides that there must be an appraisement.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have made that criticism of the amendment, that it hedges about the exercise of an otherwise unlimited discretion. The moment you do that, the moment you reduce the discretion which the Secretary enjoys at present, you thereby change the law. Apart from this amendment the Secretary possesses unlimited discretion to determine the elements proper to be considered in arriving at his conclusion. Pass this amendment, and in the future the Secretary can not do what he is now enabled to do. Something then will have been taken away from him, if his present power of discretion is curtailed. But the curtailment of official discretion is legislation. It is forbidden to legislate on an appropriation bill, in the guise of a limitation. This amendment is legislation in that guise, and is therefore out of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add one further suggestion. The amendment provides that no part of the appropriation for the Forest Service can be expended except under the limitation provided in the amendment that an appraisement shall be had to determine the grazing fees to be charged on any particular forest. Now, suppose the department is not able, prior to the time of the summer season, to go to any particular forest and make an appraisement. A forest fire breaks out in that forest. The Secretary can not expend any money in extinguishing that fire until he has appraised the grazing fees on that forest. Under the guise of limiting the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture as to fixing grazing fees the proposed amendment limits the authority of the Secretary and changes the law under which he can extinguish forest fires, and is clearly not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if the Chair has before him the law under which the Secretary of Agriculture has been acting, which law gentlemen say will be changed if this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is adopted.

As I understand it the law under which the Secretary has acted is the act of June 4, 1897, which says among other things—

He may make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservations, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use and to preserve the forests thereon from destruction.

I can not find any law which vests in the Secretary of Agriculture the absolute, unlimited authority to fix these grazing fees. It comes under his general authority to regulate, and it seems to me that it is not right to hold that any amendment suggesting to him a method of regulating is necessarily a change of law.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, either the gentleman contends that there is law or that there is no law. If there is no law there is a precedent in section 3812 of Hinds' Precedents which states that the enactment of positive law where none exists is construed as a provision changing existing law such as is forbidden in an appropriation bill. So the gentleman's argument falls to the ground in either event.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which provides—that no part of any appropriation in this act for the Forest Service shall be expended on or in connection with any national forest in which the fees charged for grazing shall be less than the appraised value of such grazing as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

To which amendment the gentleman from Arizona makes the point of order that that is not a proper limitation, in that it is legislation which changes existing law.

The Chair is advised by the memorandum submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, that the Supreme Court has held that the provisions of the act of June 4, 1897, giving the Secretary of the Interior authority and discretion in making provisions for the protection of forests against destruction by fire, and against depredations, to make rules and regulations for such service as will insure the object of the reservation and permit the Secretary to fix the charge for such use.

The Chair thinks the authority conferred by that act is very broad and general in its terms, and that it confers wide discretion on the Secretary of Agriculture. In the view of the Chair the limitation offered to the provision of the bill with reference to the Forest Service, making appropriations for that service, which might be construed as modifying the existing law limiting the wide discretion given by that law, must necessarily be held to be a change of existing law. And while the amendment does not positively establish the fee as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] did, still it directs the Secretary to act in a particular manner in arriving at the fee which he shall charge, and in that respect it limits his discretion and modifies the general provisions of the law contained in the act of 1897. For this reason the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by the Speaker of this House at Springfield last Sunday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address by the Speaker of the House delivered at Springfield, Mass., on Sunday last. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 35, line 13, after the colon, insert:

"Provided further, That the charge for grazing permits upon each of the national forests shall, under the rules and regulations authorized by the acts of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. L., p. 11), and the act of February 1, 1905 (33 Stat. L., p. 628), be not less than the appraised value of pasturage upon such national forests as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order. The Chair has covered the entire case in his last ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona makes a point of order. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this matter was before the Committee on Agriculture when this bill was being prepared, and being brought to the attention of the Chief of the Forest Service and of the Solicitor of the Forest Service, those gentlemen, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, prepared an amendment to meet the views of the committee and at the same time be free of the objection that it might be subject to a point of order.

The amendment, as I have stated it, was prepared by the solicitor, and if the Chair will pardon me, I will read what the solicitor says about it:

The act of June 4, 1897, referred to in the proposed amendment, originally authorized the Secretary of the Interior to administer the national forests. The part of that act which is pertinent, showing the authority to prescribe the rules and regulations, is as follows.

A part of that has been read by others, but in order to make the statement continuous I will, with the permission of the Chair, read in full what the solicitor says:

"The Secretary of the Interior shall make provisions for the protection against destruction by fire and depredations upon the public forests and forest reservations which may have been set aside or which may be hereafter set aside under the said act of March 3, 1891, and which may be continued; and he may make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservations, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use and to preserve the forests." * * *

This act did not direct the Secretary of the Interior specifically to make a charge for any uses or sales of any products. The act of February 1, 1905, however (33 Stat., 628), authorized the fixing of a charge when it provided for the disposition of receipts from the sale of any products or the use of any lands on the national forests. Section 5 of that act is as follows:

"That all money received from the sale of any products or the use of any land or resources of said forest reserves shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States." * * *

It should be remembered that the law referred to—the act of February 1, 1905—transferred the national forests and jurisdiction over them from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The solicitor says further:

The Attorney General of the United States held in 1906 that the above language gave the Secretary of Agriculture both the right to establish rules and regulations for the use of any national forest lands and the right to fix and collect a charge for such uses. The opinion of the Attorney General has since been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States and in several other courts of lesser importance. The Supreme Court decisions were United States v. Light and the Utah Light & Power Co. v. the United States (one of these cases is in 220 U. S. and the other can be easily located).

The solicitor adds:

This amendment, I believe, is not subject to a point of order, since the Secretary of Agriculture can now charge for grazing permits under rules and regulations authorized by existing law, and he can fix this rate of charge as the appraised value of the lands to be grazed as is proposed to be done in the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Did the committee question the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture as to his experience which qualified him as an expert on parliamentary law in the House of Representatives?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This matter was put up to him squarely, because we realized that if the amendment was subject to the point of order some gentlemen from the West, some of whom in the past, at least, have most deeply resented the suggestion that grazing fees should be increased, might now make the point of order, and we ought to be fortified by the opinion of those who have given very careful consideration to the subject.

Mr. HAYDEN. Did the committee consider that the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture knew more about parliamentary law than the members of the committee itself?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I offer the suggestion of the solicitor for what it is worth. I have perfect faith and confidence in the present occupant of the chair, and of course we will abide by his decision.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to be able to direct the attention of the Chair to decisions that he has not already read, but I want to point out that the strict ruling of the Chair made upon the last amendment I offered, and which perhaps might be applied to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, seems to me to be narrower than is justified by the later decisions of Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole upon questions of limiations on appropriation bills. I call the attention of the Chair to some language which appears in section 825 of the House Manual, where the rule is thus stated:

The limitation may not be applied prôperly to the official functions of executive officers, but it may restrict executive discretion so far as it may be done by a simple negative upon the use of the appropriation.

It seems to me that the amendment which the gentleman from Michigan offers does not seek affirmatively to legislate with respect to official functions of the Secretary of Agriculture. It seeks by a simple negative to limit his discretion with respect to a particular subject.

I call the attention of the Chair to a decision under the general rule to be found on page 657 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 6969:

On April 12, 1906, the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when Mr. Jesse Overstreet, of Indiana, offered this amendment: Page 15, strike out lines 6 to 16 and insert the following:

"For inland transportation by star routes, including temporary service to newly established offices, $7,100,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for continuance of any star-route service the patronage of which shall be served entirely by the extension of Rural Delivery Service, nor shall any of said sum be expended for the establishment of new star-route service for a patronage which is already entirely served by Rural Delivery Service: And provided further, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to provide difficult or emergency mail service in Alaska, including the establishment and equipment of relay stations, in such manner as he may think advisable, without advertising therefor."

That proviso sought, of course, to limit the discretion of the Postmaster General with respect to a matter over which, under the general law, he had absolute authority; and it seems to me that in the amendment which the gentleman from Michigan has offered all he has done is to limit the executive discretion with respect to the use of this appropriation by the simple negative upon the appropriation itself, and that it is within the rule which is stated in the Manual and within the decision which I have just quoted.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the concluding statement of the gentleman from Minnesota puts him out of court. He admits that the amendment is an effort to limit executive discretion. The limitation of discretion and the limitation of money are entirely different things, though they are frequently confused. When the effort is made to limit the discretion of an officer, as pointed out by the Chair in his former ruling, that is nothing, if effective, but legislation. According to the decision of the Supreme Court referred to, I think, by the gentleman from Michigan, the Secretary of Agriculture possesses at present unlimited discretion in this connection. I think a statement was read, coming from some solicitor and supposed to be in aid of the decision of the pending parliamentary point, to the effect that this amendment could not possibly be out of order, because the Secretary of Agriculture can do at the present time the things proposed by the amendment. That is perfectly true, but he is not compelled to do them. This amendment proposes to compel him in the future to travel this road and none other. He may at present, in the exercise of his unlimited discretion, do the very things proposed, but of his own free will. Pass this amendment, however, and for the future he can exercise his discretion in no other way. The effect of the amendment, therefore, is to circumscribe the discretion which the law now gives to the Secretary. Hence it is legislation and out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which provides that the charge for grazing permits upon each of the national forests shall, under the rules and regulations authorized by the act of June 4, 1897, Thirtieth Statutes at Large, page 11, and the act of February 1, 1905, Thirty-third Statutes at Large, page 628, be not less than the appraised value of pasturage upon such national forests as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time.

The language is not in the form of a limitation, in the view of the Chair, in that it relates to the appropriation made. It clearly is a provision which modifies the discretion and authority of the Secretary of Agriculture as contained in the two acts referred to, and does not come within the precedent cited by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], referring to the expenditure for the continuance of the star-route service. It clearly seeks to change the law——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman will permit an interruption, I did not prepare the amendment. It evidently was not completed. I took it from the chairman of the committee. It is evidently a draft of the purpose to be accomplished. The words making it a limitation or the words to the effect that no part of this appropriation shall be used "until" or "unless" were inadvertently omitted. Those words should precede the language of the amendment. If that would make any difference with the ruling of the Chair, I would ask consent to have the amendment modified.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that would change it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Then I shall not take the time to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment fixes what the charge shall be. The present law leaves that in the discretion of the Secretary. The mere fact that the Secretary can adopt this method of fixing a fee prescribing what the charge shall be under existing law, in the view of the Chair, does not authorize on an appropriation bill a provision establishing what the fee shall be and making that the authorized fee, and to that extent curtailing the discretion and power of the Secretary and thus modifying and changing existing law. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has pointed out, if this were done it would limit the discretion of the Secretary and say what the fee should be after the Secretary had done a particular thing. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 37, after line 8, insert: "For the purpose of protecting, improving, and securing the fullest possible use of the public grazing lands of the United States, and promoting the production of live stock, $50,000; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to establish, from time to time, by proclamation, grazing commons upon any of the unreserved, unappropriated public lands of the United States chiefly valuable for grazing; and thereafter such grazing commons shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the violation of which shall be punished as is provided for in section 56 of the Penal Code of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., p. 1900); and all laws applicable to the national forests, including appropriations for and the distribution of moneys received, the entry and survey of agricultural homesteads, and the right to prospect for and acquire mineral lands are hereby extended and made applicable to such grazing commons."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill. The amendment shows on its face that it is an attempt by the Committee on Agriculture to assume the jurisdiction now possessed by the Committee on the Public Lands. The amendment would extend the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture over the public lands of the United States outside of the national forests, which are now under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. I am free to confess that I am in sympathy with a proper regulation of grazing on the public domain, but I must insist that the committee of the House having jurisdiction of that subject matter should undertake the legislation and not the Committee on Agriculture, which has no such authority under the rules of the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. HAUGEN. I want to make a statement concerning this amendment. The average fee on the forest reserve now for cattle is 72 cents a head.

The total receipts for grazing are about $2,600,000. A 2-year-old steer, for instance, pastured all summer sells around $15 a hundred. If so, these people could well pay more for the grazing than they are now paying. What they pay for a year's grazing is about what we pay in my section of the country for one month's grazing. Yet these people object to a fee of 72 cents. They come before this committee to ask large appropriations. You are willing to take money out of the Treasury to expend in the forests, but you are not willing to increase the receipts a dollar to put into the Treasury. This proposition, if the amendment is adopted, will add more than $1,000,000 to your State treasury and will, in all probability, add two or three million dollars to the Federal Treasury.

Here is a revenue which we should avail the Government of, especially at this time, when we need it badly, and at a time when there are heavy demands on the Treasury. Consider the situation, gentlemen. Are you warranted in opposing this amendment, which properly will bring millions of revenue into the Treasury? It seems to me that it is an absolutely fair proposition that those using the forest reserves for grazing should pay a reasonable price for the privilege.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Iowa will concede this fact, that under the amendment which he has offered he is seeking to regulate grazing on 220,000,000 acres in the public domain, where nothing is now charged, and that the public domain entirely surrounds the national forests, where a grazing fee is charged.

Mr. HAUGEN. We are at present expending money to keep the cattle grazing on the public lands off the national forests. We are not getting a penny in return for allowing cattle to graze on the public land; not one cent is going back into the Treasury for that privilege, yet the gentleman is opposing this amendment. He is opposing this amendment proposing a fee for grazing on the public lands, which will not only put money into the State treasury but into the Federal Treasury as well, although he is perfectly willing to take money out by the millions to be expended in the forests and on the public lands. My friend, the receipts from the national forests from all sources are only a little over $4,000,000, while the expenditures on the national forests run over $9,000,000, leaving a deficit of over $4,000,000 per annum, and yet you oppose this amendment to increase the revenue.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me make a brief statement. If the Committee on Agriculture—and they are cordially invited to do so—will visit the forest reserves of the West and give the cattlemen, the woolgrowers, and other stock raisers an opportunity to be heard, will familiarize themselves with the actual conditions, and then report legislation to Congress which, after hearing both sides of the controversy, you have satisfied yourselves is just and fair, you will hear very little opposition from the West. But the situation is, if I may be bold to point it out, that there is but one Representative in Congress who is a member of the Committee on Agriculture who has in his district a national forest reserve.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. RIDDICK] is a member of the committee, and so is the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY].

Mr. HAYDEN. I had reference to the gentleman from Montana. No member of the committee, so far as I know, has ever made a tour of the West and studied the actual conditions on the national forests and therefore can speak from first-hand information. All that the members of the committee know is what somebody from the Department of Agriculture tells them.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman is assuming a great deal. There are members on the committee who have had as much experience in the cattle business as anybody here.

Mr. HAYDEN. That may be true, but not upon the forest reserves. Not a member of your committee has ever grazed a head of cattle or sheep in a national forest. The people I represent, the stock growers of the West, through their various organizations, are asking for an opportunity to present their side of the case to the Committee on Agriculture. There never was a controversy without two sides, and if this committee will call witnesses to Washington, or, much better, if the members of the committee will go out to the West and see the conditions for themselves, I am satisfied that legislation can be enacted which will bring revenue to the Treasury and at the same time protect the legitimate interests of the stockmen on the national forests. But it has been proposed to hastily and arbitrarily place a great burden upon them without even a hearing. I have, therefore, felt constrained, from a sense of duty to my constituents, to make points of order against all such amendments.

Mr. HAUGEN. The fact remains that in the Forest Service the expenditures are over $9,000,000, and the receipts from all sources are only slightly over $4,000,000. There is a deficit of over $4,000,000. We turn over 155,000,000 acres of land to the Forest Service to administer. The Secretary has authority to charge for grazing, for the timber, and for the water privileges as well, and yet there is a deficit of $4,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rather regret that the Committee on Agriculture has seen fit to attempt, in connection with the consideration of a very important appropriation bill, to vitally change the law affecting very large areas and vast interests. This committee is a legislative committee as well as an appropriating committee, and has the authority and it is the duty of the committee from time to time to take up the problems that properly come before it, examine them, and legislate upon them. The committee has not seen fit to do that in connection with the matters that have been discussed here, but placed in the bill a paragraph vitally changing the law with regard to a matter of very great interest to the people of an enormous area of the country, and without, I regret to say, that careful, painstaking consideration which the importance and the complicated character of the problem requires.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is all very well for a gentleman to consider the lush pastures of Kansas or Missouri or even of Maryland, and then attempt to compare them with the sparser forage of forest reserves, a considerable portion of which may be above timber line, a large portion of which is likely to be so steep and rocky that a goat can not climb the hillsides, and portions of which may be so inaccessible that it is exceedingly difficult to reach the pasture grounds. The areas of forest reserves that afford grazing are so varied in their character that they afford grazing all the way from 30 days to 12 months in a year. Parts of some of them are so remote, so difficult of access, that it requires from a week to a month for the flocks or herds to reach them, and a month to return home, necessitating the careful guarding of flocks and herds to prevent destruction by predatory wild animals. In many reserves there is the danger of an early fall or late spring snow that is liable to kill or greatly injure stock.

Now, I hope the gentlemen of this committee will visit the forest reserves. I hope they will go upon them and that they will learn of their character and of the conditions under which men utilize them, and that, having done so, if they think there should be any limit or any modification of the discretion of the Secretary, they will bring in a bill in the usual way, providing for such limitation or modification. Gentlemen, it is a peculiar and interesting thing that from the national forests—mark the words national forests—covering upward of 160,000,000 acres of land, the receipts from grazing are nearly double the receipts from the sale of timber. That in itself would, it seems to me, very properly suggest to the members of the Agricultural Committee not that they investigate the question of the grazing fees but that they investigate the question of the use and the sale of the timber taken from these great forest areas.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Do they not change the value of the stumpage on public lands occasionally?

Mr. MONDELL. I imagine they do occasionally, and they do change the grazing fees on grazing lands of the reserves, and they have changed them very recently. As a matter of fact, they have nearly doubled them in a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact, they have nearly doubled them in the last year, and while the fees from grazing have been nearly doubled, as I recall, in the last year or two, the fees arising from the sale of timber from 150,000,000 acres of forest reserves have remained practically stationary. We still continue to receive from the forests twice the amount of money for the use of the grass that we do from the sale of the timber.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. SNELL. Is that because they do not cut the timber or because they sell it for less than it is worth?

Mr. MONDELL. I am perhaps unlike some people. I try not to jump at conclusions.

The forest reserves extend all the way from Arkansas to the confines of the Bering Sea. I have not been over all of them. I do not know the conditions on all of them. I do not pretend to say whether there should be more sales of timber or whether the sales that are made should be at a higher price. I would not pretend to say without having made an examination. And so I suggest that gentlemen should not pretend to say without careful examination that grazing fees, from which we are now getting nearly $3,000,000 as against the little more than half that amount for timber, are only one-third or one-half of what they ought to be. I know many of these forest reserves. I have been over a number of them, and I know their character, and yet I am not prepared to say whether or not these fees are as high as they ought to be, and I would not pretend to say unless I had made a careful examination of the matter.

I still remember a man in my State who declined to accept an opportunity to graze his flocks on the lands of a national forest without any payment at all, because he said that the wild beasts were so dangerous that he could not afford to take his flocks there without the protection of fires by night, and there was no timber to build signal fires to protect his stock. He said he would have to haul timber so far in order to build the guard fires necessary to protect his flocks that he could not afford to graze even where no fee was charged.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. My time flies.

Mr. SNELL. I will ask that you have more time.

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad if you will.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be exteaded for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming may proceed for five additional minutes after the expiration of his time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand from the chairman of the committee, one of the things they had in mind was to revalue these leases and see if they were getting all from the grazing privileges that are necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact, that is just what the Secretary now does.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman any objection to that?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all. That is exactly what the Secretary is doing.

I recall that my local newspapers, as I scanned them last summer, contained many notices of meetings here and there in the vicinity of the forest reserves of the forest officers and the men who used the reserves. Stockmen and farmers and ranchmen came from miles around and met the forest officers and went over the reserves with them, and the whole question was thrashed out, and after full and free discussion on the ground, out of knowledge and understanding, the grazing fees were fixed, and they are being so fixed from time to time. Over a great portion of this area the fee has been raised in the last year, and, as I understand, the receipts within the last year or two have practically doubled.

Now, if in the opinion of the committee the department is not raising the fees fast enough and the committee can not go to the reserves, may I suggest to the committee that they call here the stockmen, the farmers who use the forests, a few from each locality—call them here some time and go over the matter with them carefully? It would be better if the committee could visit the reserves. I wish they might. I am sure all these gentlemen would enjoy getting out on the hurricane deck of a mountain bronco and going over those rugged mountains. They would see scenery such as never before blessed their view, and they would become familiar with the conditions under which the herders and flock masters and stockmen of that section utilize grasses which, if they were in this part of the country, would be going to waste. Why, gentlemen of the Committee on Agriculture, let me suggest this to you, that instead of being too much worried about what some one is paying for the use of a spear of grass away over yonder near timber line, many miles away from the nearest settlement on a forest reserve, the committee investigate the question why, over here in Maryland and over yonder in Virginia and the surrounding States, there are hundreds of thousands of acres accessible to settlement, with farms all around them, where the grass is not utilized at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished leader of the majority yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield, but my time flies.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not the gentleman afraid, if his suggestion is carried out, that it would end in a very expensive junketing trip?

Mr. MONDELL. No. I do not think it would cost too much. I do not think it would be a junketing trip. I have never considered trips by Members of Congress to scenes of Federal activity, to see the results of congressional appropriations, were junketing trips. I regret there are not more of them. I have not known of one of them that was not helpful and beneficial to the public service. The trouble is we are compelled to sit here and hear witnesses from a distance and take their ex parte statements and legislate more or less in the dark. I wish we had vacations long enough every summer to enable us to get about over the country and keep posted with regard to what Uncle Sam is doing and not be compelled to sit down at committee tables and take the word of departmental officers in regard to matters or the ex parte statements of interested witnesses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I suggest to the committee that they go into this subject, and go into it carefully, and then I shall be perfectly content with their judgment, whatever it may be. I am suggesting that this is not the way to do it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has just presented an amendment which proposes to put under the control of the Department of Agriculture all of the unentered public lands. In other words, it is a proposal to establish a leasing system on the public domain. Well, in one guise or another we have had that proposition presented to us ever since I can remember, and I always have been against it, and I expect to continue to be against it. As a boy I lived in northwestern Iowa on a homestead, and a mile beyond our home the prairie stretched away uninhabited for 60 miles to the Big Sioux River. There were counties without an inhabitant; and while these areas were settling the people there used the grasses, and Uncle Sam did not attempt to collect anything for the use of them. It was such a use as was helpful in the development of the country.

Later, as the remaining areas became more or less of a semiarid character, gentlemen began to say, "Let us have a lease law." And who wanted the lease law? Was it the settler who was coming in and establishing his home and a farm? Never. The big cattle barons, the big sheepman—good folks, splendid folks—they have done a mighty work in the development of that western country, and they are doing a mighty work yet. They have helped feed the Nation and they have utilized resources which but for them would have gone to waste. Taking all that into consideration, we had to look out for the settler who was coming. We had to look out for the man who would eventually make a home on the land, the man who would cultivate it, if it was fit for cultivation.

Our aim always has been to have every acre that is suitable for cultivation, with or without irrigation, turned with a plow and made to yield more, much more, than it would yield in its natural state.

We may have carried that idea too far. We may have invited people into areas where it is difficult to make a living by farming. There is only one way of testing it out. There is only one way in which it has ever been tested out. That is by having settlers try it. I have seen whole counties in the State of Kansas with scarcely a settler. I once helped to build a railroad in Kansas, in what is now one of the best parts of Kansas, 45 miles long, and the whole distance was across abandoned homesteads and across lands dotted with deserted sod houses; there was not a settler left except at the little towns at either end. There had been grasshoppers and drought, and they had all gone back to their wives' folks in Missouri or elsewhere. The railroad was built, some of the original settlers came back or new settlers took their places, and finally they conquered the desert, and if you were to ask any Kansas man about it who has not lived there long he would scout the notion that there ever was any question about that being a good farming country. Yet I have seen it when it was abandoned as a farming country. We have had to retain these areas for the farmer, for the coming home builder, and we could not retain them for him if we crystallized them into great feudal leases, even under the best-guarded law.

Now, we may be reaching a time when there are some areas here and there so clearly impossible of reclamation, so definitely permanent grazing lands, that it may be wise, carefully and judiciously, to arrange some way for their leasing; but we will have to be very careful that we do not tie them up in great leaseholds, lands that may have a future of greater usefulness against the day when somebody will be found energetic and forceful and intelligent enough to find some way to make them useful as cultivated areas. So I say to my friends that while this proposal looks well on the face of it, it has many sides. We of the West who have hoped for its development and who have watched it grow, who have seen the frontier recede back from the eastern Kansas line until there is no longer a frontier, do not desire to see land which can be utilized for homes withheld for other purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY, Mr. TINCHER, and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the disposition of the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that now.

Mr. HAUGEN. There are several gentlemen who want to speak.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have not moved a line in the consideration of this bill, and we have got to go on with it just a little, anyway. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the circumstances I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. No. I concede the point of order, but I believe these gentlemen should have an opportunity to be heard for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order. Let the gentleman discuss the item of the bill.

Mr. RUBEY. I move to strike out the section that relates to leasing. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no last word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RUBEY. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What paragraph?

Mr. RUBEY. The paragraph last read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have disposed of that.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment was offered to the paragraph beginning with line 1 on page 35.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; the gentleman offered his amendment as a new paragraph. It had no relation to the last one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the last amendment offered was to follow line 8 as a new paragraph. Therefore there is no paragraph before the House. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Missoula National Forest, Mont., $15,212.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In that connection I want to say that I have listened to the speech made by my friend the gentleman from Wyoming, in commendation of the western country, with a good deal of interest. His speech proves the truth of the prophecy I made the other day.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the proposition before the House.

Mr. RUBEY. I moved to strike out the word "Montana." That is the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. RUBEY. I am talking about the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who comes from a neighboring State.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I shall not insist on the point of order for five minutes, and that will allow the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] to be heard; but I give notice that I will insist on the point of order hereafter if this discussion is to be continued. What is the use? The gentleman introduced something that had no place in the bill, and we have not moved a line. I am not willing to stay here until next August to let gentlemen produce hot air.

Mr. RUBEY. As the gentleman knows, I have not taken up very much time in this discussion, and I would not take up any time now if it had not been for the fact that just a day or two ago, when we had before this House a proposition providing for the appropriation of a large sum of money to take care of the hog growers of the country, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] came onto the floor of the House and made a very ardent speech in advocacy of a decrease of $100,000 in that appropriation. I said then to the House that it would not be very long before the gentleman from Wyoming would be here opposing legislation that happened to affect the people of the West. Now, the Committee on Agriculture proposes a change in the plan of charging for grazing in the national forests—a change that will bring into the Treasury of the United States $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 additional every year. The gentleman from Wyoming was very anxious to reduce the hog-cholera appropriation $100,000 on the theory of economy, but when we want to put into the Treasury fifty times that amount by requiring the people out there in the West to pay a reasonable sum for the use of that grazing land the gentleman from Wyoming comes in here and opposes it. Another thing we desire is that the people who graze their stock upon the public lands of this country, and who are now getting free grazing on those lands, shall be required to pay a reasonable sum for that privilege and thereby put into the Treasury of the United States every year $4,000,000 or $5,000,000.

Not only that, but we want to protect the public land itself. The land is now wild. The cattle are running over it and it is deteriorating every day. The people are allowed to use the land without any restrictions or regulations whatever. They are absolutely destroying the public lands by the unrestricted use of the grazing privileges, and the gentleman from Wyoming objects to our protecting those lands. He not only objects to taking money out of the Treasury, but he also objects to putting money into the Treasury.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When the gentleman speaks about protecting these grazing lands from destruction, does he know that the public lands outside of forest reservations in some sections have been so denuded of all vegetation and injured by the animals that have grazed over them that there has been such erosion that some of the gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the position the gentleman is now taking have presented bills to this Congress asking for appropriations of millions and millions of dollars for the construction of reservoirs for the preventing of floods and further destruction caused by or resulting from the very policy which they are now defending and which we are trying to change?

Mr. RUBEY. That is absolutely true, Mr. Chairman, and if the Committee on the Public Lands, who have jurisdiction of this matter, would bring in a bill and give this Congress the opportunity to vote on it, there is no question what would happen. A number of bills have been introduced. Bills are pending before the Public Lands Committee to-day providing for a charge for grazing privileges upon the public lands, and yet the House gets no opportunity to vote upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. I want to oppose the motion to strike out. I agree heartily with what the gentleman from Iowa said——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment. I hope the gentleman will let us make a little progress before this subject is reopened.

Mr. RAKER. I just want to say this——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask that the gentleman be reasonable and let us make a little progress.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say this——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It appears that the gentleman is not willing to be reasonable about anything.

Mr. RAKER. That is unjust, unkind, and unmerited, and the gentleman knows he has no right to say it. There is no need of his volunteering those statements, and I have got tired of it, even if he is an old man.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not so old but that I am perfectly well able to take care of myself.

Mr. RAKER. I know you are able, but you do not use very good judgment in using your ability.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is not only out of order but out of temper as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the gentleman from California is not discussing the amendment. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RAKER. I move to strike out the section. I hope the Chair will permit me to proceed in order. I have not taken any occasion to interject remarks without addressing the Chair, but I have submitted to it repeatedly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment he proposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the gentleman from California is not discussing the amendment he proposes. Thus far the gentleman from California has not discussed his amendment, and the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. I was not discussing the point of order. I told the Chair I was not going to discuss the point, but I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed upon the subject under debate, on the Forest Service, for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection whatever to the gentleman from California expressing his views on this subject, if he will wait until we read a little way into the bill. We have not done anything on the bill at all. I wanted to make a speech upon the subject myself, but I have refrained from doing so, and I hope other gentlemen will follow that example.

Mr. RAKER. While the gentleman is reserving the point of order——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, let it go for a little while.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arapahoe National Forest, Colorado, $5,736.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Which item was read?

Mr. RAKER. The last one that we read, right after the California item.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I suggest the gentleman wait until we reach the bottom of the next page. If we read a page or two a day, I will not object to some discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California prefer a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman that we wait until we read another page.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the conduct of this forest and other forests of like character.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Wyoming——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to suspend until he can put the request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes upon the conduct of the forest in Colorado and other forests, line 18. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the item and discuss the question of forestry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to forests of this kind and to say that there is not ordinarily a great deal of timber in many of them, and that the collection of the fees on the forests is on the grazing land outside of the timber lands. As an illustration, you will find undoubtedly in this, and in many other forests, that where the timber occurs—that is, actual timber—there is but little land for grazing. It is unfortunate that the Committee on Agriculture does not appreciate that fact. The forests in the East are entirely different. There the grass grows and there is forage all the time of high quality and of large quantity. The fee comes from the balance of the forest lands upon which there is practically no timber, but a great deal of it is withdrawn for water and watersheds. While we are not necessarily objecting to that, the homesteader adjoining the forest reserve gets some benefit in the little grazing there is there. By virtue of this they have built up that country, and as I started out to say, and I hope I will not be prevented from saying it, I want to agree, and do agree, with what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has said upon this subject. The criticism of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] of the gentleman's statement is unjust, and is not borne out by the facts. I say it, and I say it unhesitatingly, that the committee while on the subjects with which they are familiar are doing nicely, but they are not familiar with this subject. They do not know what these people have gone through, what they are doing and the value that they have added to this country. The general purpose of the committee now seems to be to do away with all of the remaining public lands so that it will not be settled. I know, and the gentleman from Wyoming knows, what the situation out there is. As a boy I have ridden over that land for many miles, at times hundreds of miles, 50 and 60 miles, and 40 years ago there was practically no stock in the country, no grass growing upon it.

They say that by virtue of using it erosion has occurred and that it has been washed away. They do not know anything about it. They have not had any experience. The farmer there is developing it and making it a good part of this country, and building up a good citizenship all over the West. On that land that appeared to be an absolute desert they have gone 10 and 15 and 20 and 100 and 200 miles and brought in the water, and to-day you will see prosperous homes scattered all over there—houses, stock, alfalfa, horses, cattle, and sheep, all of which is a credit to any civilization. I am getting tired of this bickering and talking about what these western people are doing, and the fact that these lands should be put into a cow pasture. It is all nonsense, and it would not be heard upon the floor of this House if the men knew the facts and had the experience that these men in the West have had and know what they have done in regard to it.

Mr. CANDLER. Then the gentleman would agree with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Wyoming that the Committee on Agriculture ought to go out there and look at it?

Mr. RAKER. I would; and I want to say that for four years the Committee on the Public Lands have had this up before them, and they have had witnesses from all over the country, and every time they have unanimously turned it down they have agreed that the West should not be turned into a cow pasture, but should be left open for homesteaders. Under the last bill that came from the Committee on the Public Lands 80,000 homestead applications have been filed on that public domain, and they are assisting in building up their homes and improving the country. That is what is being done. I am in favor of grazing, but I am opposed to so tying up the remaining public land that the homesteader will have the same trouble in obtaining homesteads on that public domain that he has been having during the last 10 years in regard to the forest reserve. We want proper grazing, but still do not want to restrict homesteading. They should both go on in a proper method.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wyoming National Forest, Wyo., $5,089.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 9, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The foregoing appropriations for specific national forests shall be reduced by 20 per cent as to each of such forests in which the fees for grazing shall be less than the appraised value of such grazing, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is again an attempt to legislate upon an appropriation bill under the guise of a limitation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will not attempt to again cite the decisions upon questions of similar character. I direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Congress might very well desire to make the amount of the appropriations carried for each of these national forests dependent upon the receipts for grazing in such forests, and that is exactly what this does. It is not directed to the discretion of the Secretary at all. It simply says that in any forest where the charges are less than the appraised value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, there shall be 20 per cent less appropriated or used than is carried in the bill. That is not directed to the discretion of the Secretary; it is the action of Congress. The Congress might very well in the exercise of its legislative discretion determine that in a national forest where the charge for grazing was less than the appraised value of such grazing it desired to expend less than is carried in another forest where the charge is equal to or greater than the appraised value, and that is all that is provided by this amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As to the form of the gentleman's amendment, I understood the amendment undertakes to say that the amount of the appropriation is reduced.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We make the appropriations and we fix the amount. The amount is not reduced. The gentleman's amendment can not reduce the amount. I suppose what the gentleman means is that the amount of the appropriation which shall be expended shall be 20 per cent less than the amount of the appropriation unless certain things take place. For myself, I do not see why that would not be in order, but I doubt whether the amendment as it reads will amount to anything, because, as I understood it, it undertakes to reduce the appropriation by saying so, and that is not the intention at all, and that is not what it does.

Mr. ANDERSON. That may be true. What I am trying to do is to offer a limitation which is in order, and I have drawn the language with that idea in mind. Whether it is properly expressed or well expressed, of course, is another question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was trying to get at the form of the amendment, first, and whether it was in order; and, second, whether it should be agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that under section 5 of the act of February 1, 1905, Congress has provided that all moneys received from the sale of any products or the use of any land or resources of said forest reserves shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States. So that when the gentleman from Minnesota says that Congress may now desire to provide that the receipts from the national forests shall be devoted to other uses he is met by the fact that Congress has already expressed an opinion as to what shall be done with such funds, and he can not now by indirection change the existing law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How does this change the law? The Secretary has the same power as before. He can go ahead and fix the rates, if he wants to do so.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Secretary of Agriculture now has full power to fix the grazing rates.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And he would have even if this amendment were adopted.

Mr. HAYDEN. He would not. If this amendment were adopted, the Secretary must fix the rates on the appraised value of the grazing. At the present time he has authority to fix the grazing fees by competition at public sale to the highest bidder. He may base the grazing charge on the price charged for adjacent lands or on any other factor which he sees fit to consider. But under this amendment he must appraise the value of the grazing privilege and by that method alone fix the charge.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is entirely in error. This does not tell the Secretary to do anything. He can do as he wants to, absolutely, but if he does it in a certain way only a certain amount of this appropriation will be expended. He still will have the power, if this amendment carries, to do all those things the gentleman has stated. It does not restrict him in any way whatever; it does not take away his power or say that he shall not have power to do what he is doing now. It simply provides that this appropriation shall be reduced, and I think, as the gentleman from Illinois states, that part of the amendment ought to be modified in order to bring about the effect desired by the gentleman from Minnesota. It simply states that this appropriation should be reduced if the Secretary does these things, but it does not say he shall not do these things or that he shall do them in a particular way.

Mr. HAYDEN. This amendment seeks to exercise compulsion on the Secretary of Agriculture by indirection and force him to do something he is not now compelled to do under the law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the case under any limitation—to tell him to do something or not to do something.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the Chair is of the belief that the rulings which he made heretofore would decide a point of order on this amendment or not. Under the limitation it is not competent, generally speaking, to do indirectly what can not be done directly and to require a department official to do something not now authorized by law. And it has frequently been held also that under the guise of a limitation in many cases you can not affect the discretion of the department. On the other hand, it is quite within the power of Congress to say that it will appropriate $10,000 for a certain purpose, no portion of which shall be paid to a red-headed man or no portion of which shall be paid to any but a red-headed man. That, in a way, affects the discretion of the head of the department. We can make the appropriations with such limitations as we please, which are mere limitations. Now, this amendment proposes that only 80 per cent of the appropriation can be expended in a national forest where the appraised value of the grazing land is not charged. That is a pure limitation on the expenditure of the money. The Secretary of the Treasury has full discretion left in his power to charge what he pleases for the grazing lands under his power and to make regulations for the disposition of the lands. But this amendment only provides he shall not expend more than 80 per cent of the amount appropriated unless a certain condition of affairs exists. That may not be the exact language of the amendment, but that is the purpose of it, and I presume will be the amendment that will be offered if this is not in order.

Now, we can say clearly that no portion of the money shall be expended on a national forest if any of the timber thereon shall be cut during the fiscal year. It is plainly within our jurisdiction. We can say a great many different things in the form of limitations on the expenditure of money. We are not required even to make an appropriation for the maintenance of national forests. We can strike out the item entirely if we wish to do so.

Of course we can not, under the guise of a limitation, direct the Secretary of the Interior to do something the law does not provide for, or which he is not required to do, but we can say he shall not have the money unless a certain condition there arises, and we may say very reasonably that we do not wish to make this appropriation to be expended in the full amount under certain conditions, because we expect these forests to remunerate for their own expenditures. That is a limitation within our discretion, in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit an inquiry?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the amendment is that the foregoing appropriation for a specific national forest shall be reduced by 20 per cent, and the Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if that is a reduction in appropriation or retrenchment of expenditure?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment and offer another in lieu of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I confess I can not answer the inquiry of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, of course these are all subject to a point of order. Everybody is good-natured here, and everybody is perfectly willing that this Agricultural Committee shall spend all summer over an amendment to their own bill, and, of course, we shall not object to any amendment they may offer, or any modification or change they may desire in any amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 44, line 9, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"That of the foregoing appropriations not more than 80 per cent shall be expended in any national forest in which the fees for grazing shall be less than the appraised value of such grazing as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order that I made against the former amendment, because the object sought to be accomplished is the same, that is, that under the guise of a limitation and a reduction in appropriations the gentleman from Minnesota is seeking by his amendment to interfere with the discretion now lodged in the Secretary of Agriculture by existing law with respect to fixing the grazing fees on the forest reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Arizona permit an inquiry?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman find anything in this amendment which would preclude the Secretary of Agriculture from spending 100 per cent of the appropriation made?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly. In order to expend 100 per cent of the appropriation made the Secretary of Agriculture is required to do something that he is not now compelled to do under the existing law, and thereby the amendment interferes with his discretion. The Secretary must, before he can spend 100 per cent of the appropriation, make an appraisal of the grazing values upon any and all of the national forests. Otherwise the appropriation will be reduced 20 per cent. What is the primary purpose of the appropriation? It is to protect the national forests from fire and from trespass, to guard and protect public property consisting of timber worth millions of dollars. The adoption of such an amendment will seriously interfere with the ability of the Secretary of Agriculture to protect the national forests by reducing the sums available for that purpose, as estimated for by the department and allowed by the committee, because unless and until the Secretary shall take affirmative action, as directed by the amendment, and appraises the grazing values, all of the money appropriated will not be available for use in the manner intended. There can be no dispute about that; so it is apparent that this limitation is an attempt to legislate on an appropriation bill which is contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is similar to the amendments that have already been offered. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has exercised a good deal of ingenuity in attempting to get around the decisions of the Chair, that you can not, under the guise of a limitation, either change existing law or take from the discretion of an administrative officer.

What if this amendment should provide that "no part of the money should be used unless and until," and so forth? That would be a change of existing law, clearly. I do not think the gentleman who offers this amendment would deny that such an amendment would be a change of existing law.

You do not change the character of the amendment by providing that only a certain part of the appropriation shall be used except under a change of law or rule relative to fixing of grazing fees. Under the guise of a limitation on the use of the money, the attempt is made to change existing law relative to the fixing of grazing fees. That is exactly what is attempted to be done, an attempt to change the law relative to the fixing of grazing fees, to establish a new rule for the fixing of grazing fees. The rule now is that they shall be what the Secretary shall determine, using his discretion. This amendment says they shall be fixed on a certain basis; they shall amount to the estimated value, and so forth. That is a change of law. The situation is in no wise modified, changed, or affected by reason of the fact that the character of the limitation is modified somewhat. It is the same old attempt to change the law and the rule under which grazing fees are fixed, and to do it under the guise of a limitation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, certainly no one will deny that it is in our power to reduce all these appropriations 20 per cent in making them. Instead of providing for $5,089 for the Wyoming National Forest, Wyo., we could cut off 20 per cent of that amount. No one denies that.

Now, we can say that we appropriate 20 per cent less. Then we could have said that we appropriate 20 per cent, provided it is raised out of additional money collected. Maybe we could not do it in that way; but here is in effect what this amendment does: It proposes to say by way of limitation that 80 per cent of this appropriation may be expended, and then the other 20 per cent may be expended if certain fees for grazing are fixed upon a certain basis. We may think in making that limitation that this national forest shall contribute something to the Federal Treasury for the purpose of helping to pay its expenses. We simply say by the amendment that 20 per cent, practically, of the appropriation shall not be expended unless a certain limitation is agreed to and lived up to.

If we can not put that kind of a limitation in, I do not know what kind of a limitation that is a limitation you can put on any bill. This does not direct the Secretary to do anything that he is not authorized to do. It does not require him to do anything at all. He can do as he pleases about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Secretary acts upon the limitation, which is put in by the proposed amendment, would the gentleman understand that he can then expend the 100 per cent of the amount appropriated?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I so understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. And that does not retrench expenditure. Does the limitation retrench expenditures?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A limitation has nothing to do with the matter of limiting expenditures. Any limitation would be in order that directly retrenched the expenditures by reducing the amount carried in the bill. That has not been attempted. That limitation does not come within the terms of the Holman rule, of course, at all. It is a limitation in the appropriation bill, as when we say we give an appropriation "with a string tied to it." That is what all limitations are.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the Chair is inclined to be of the opinion that this limitation would reduce expenditures, permit me to direct his attention to the following statement, which appears on page 15 of the report of the committee on this bill:

> Reconnoissance of forest resources (p. 46, line 23): There is an increase in this item of $25,000. This amount will be required for the necessary estimating and appraising of the grazing resources of the national forests incident to the changed program provided in this bill.

The committee has actually increased the sum of money carried in this bill in order to conduct such appraisals. All moneys received from the national forests are deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and there is no possible way to prove that any part of the funds so received are directly used on the forest reserves.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rather emphasizes the fact that this is a change of existing law. He referred to the fact that as to 20 per cent of these appropriations they could not be used unless the Secretary proceeded under a change of law; unless he proceeded to fix grazing fees on a basis not now provided by law, and under a rule not now provided by law. Of course, if he did that his discretion, at least so far as that 20 per cent expenditure is concerned, would be limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment in the form of a new paragraph, to read as follows:

> That of the foregoing appropriations not more than 80 per cent shall be expended in any national forest in which the fees for grazing shall be less than the appraised value of such grazing as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] makes the point of order that that amendment is not in order, because it is in effect legislation which changes existing law.

This proposed amendment, if the Chair understands it, seeks to limit certain appropriations made for national forests which have been set out by name, so that before the amount appropriated in the bill can be used certain fees for grazing shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at a sum set forth in the amendment, not less than the appraised value of such grazing. Where the fees are less than the appraised value for grazing, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, only 80 per cent of the amount appropriated is to be expended on any of our forests.

It seems to the Chair that the amendment proposed is a limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, as fixed by existing law, and that unless it is plain and clear that the amendment will reduce expenditures or will decrease the appropriations in order to be in order under the Holman rule as an amendment, such an amendment, seeking to limit or modify the discretion and power vested in the Secretary by existing law, would not be in order. This amendment seeks to limit the expenditure to 80 per cent where the fees for grazing shall be less than the appraised value of such grazing, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. That is to say, the fees for grazing shall be determined in a particular way, and shall be determined not within the discretion as conferred by existing law. It seems to the Chair that this is such a limitation as is not permissible under the rules and does not come within the provisions of the Holman rule, and the Chair is therefore constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay that on the table.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not do that.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request. I changed my mind when I was on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. To strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the Clerk would have to read before that can be done. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Additional national forests created or to be created under section 11 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 963), and lands under contract for purchase or for the acquisition of which condemnation proceedings have been instituted for the purposes of said act, $76,850.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Consistent with a policy heretofore announced by me, I invited my constituents and the owners of industries in my district to call my attention to any criticisms directed against them, saying that if they brought the matter to my attention I would be very glad to present their side of the case to the Members of the House. As a result of that suggestion, I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. L. S. Swift, of Swift & Co., who takes exception to remarks on the floor of this House on February 5 by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]. I do not want to take up the time of the House, but I ask permission to incorporate this letter in the RECORD, so that those who are interested and who are not prejudiced may be informed and have the opportunity of reading both sides of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object. I do not think we should allow to be printed in the RECORD a letter that reflects on Members of Congress or that criticizes them, without knowing what is contained in the letter.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Then I will be very happy to read the letter.

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I do not object to the gentleman reading it. I would like to have the opportunity to answer Swift & Co.

Mr. TINCHER. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to state that I have no objection to any criticism which Swift & Co. may make of myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Without reading the letter, let me say that I have already discussed the contents of the letter with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]. My desire not to take up the time of the House prompted me to make this request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not like to interrupt, but I hope my colleague will not compel me to make a point of order. My colleague will have a chance to be heard later, and I hope he will not inject something that will take up the rest of the afternoon.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. There is no disposition on my part to interrupt the proceedings, but I have waited patiently since yesterday afternoon. I do not inflict myself very frequently on the membership of the House, and I really believe I am entitled to some consideration and repeat that my district is entitled to recognition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My colleague never inflicts himself. I hope he will allow us to proceed with the bill.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. In view of the gentleman's suggestion I will defer for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the use, maintenance, improvement, protection, and general administration of the specified national forests, $2,068,762: Provided, That the foregoing amounts appropriated for such purposes shall be available interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture for the necessary expenditures for fire protection and other unforeseen exigencies: Provided further, That the amounts so interchanged shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of all the amounts so appropriated.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The large amount carried by this paragraph, over $2,000,000, indicates a part of what we are losing on the national forests and a part of what we are losing by our failure to charge a reasonable rental for grazing lands. I very much regret that none of the amendments were found to be in order which would have provided that the appraised value of these grazing lands might be used as a basis of the rental charge. I do not know of any fairer basis that could be taken for that purpose, and I hope the Committee on Agriculture will find time later on to consider a bill on this subject and report it out.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Does the gentleman contend that this $2,000,000 used for the administration of these forests is all lost to the Government?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Does the gentleman contend that we do not return any of this money to the Treasury?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Some of these forests are paying more than the amount that is expended on them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Some of them are, but only a few of them.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I know those in my State are doing so.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who does not seem to be present just at this moment, that the Members from some of the Eastern States and the Central States are not so ignorant with reference to the character of these grazing lands as the gentleman seems by his remarks to indicate. I have ridden hundreds of miles over some of this land that is used for pasturing these cattle. Contrary to what the gentleman from California has stated, I have seen, right in some of these forests, the finest pasturage that I ever set my eyes upon; wild oats and wild grasses of various kinds, which afforded the most luxuriant feed I ever saw and best adapted for the growth of cattle. I do not know why a reasonable rental should not be paid for this grazing. The persons who are using these lands are mostly large owners of stock, some of them worth millions of dollars, and they might well pay the reasonable appraised value of these lands. For some reason they have shown no disposition to do that, but, on the contrary, they have shown a disposition to exclude the small holders, the man who owns a few head of stock, and to keep him off of these lands entirely. I regret to say that even seems to be the desire of the agents of the Department of Agriculture, because it is easier to handle these lands when they are occupied by big herds than when they are occupied by many small ones. But possibly if we had a fair appraisal of these lands the small holder, the man with only a few head of stock, would get somewhere near what is his due, because he could probably better afford to pay it than the big man. I hope the Agricultural Committee will take up this subject at the proper time and report a bill to the House.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do so for the purpose of addressing the committee on an entirely new subject, namely, the grazing of the national forests. Perhaps members of the Committee on Agriculture have not traveled over the national forests as much as some gentlemen would like to have us do, but there are some things of which we are aware. One is that we are appropriating Government money to fence the forests for pastures. Another is that we have been appropriating money from the United States Treasury to make surveys of the different forests, to ascertain how many acres are necessary for pasturing cattle. We are aware that the Government has received for the last two years only about 10 per cent of the value of these forests for the pasturage of these animals. I do not have to go out to your national forests and look them over to know what kind of pastures you have there. When I buy your cattle from those forests and receive them at my home and see them on the market, I know what kind of a pasture the Government is furnishing. I know also that you have the safeguard of a surveyor to find that you get the required number of acres in that locality, to see that your animals get the proper pasturage, and that this Government appropriates money to fence the pastures for you.

Now, I agree with my friend RUBEY, from Missouri, that it is rather far-fetched for men from Arizona or any other part of that territory to come here and fight the stopping of this leak in the Teasury. I want to compliment the chairman of this committee [Mr. HAUGEN] upon his position in fighting this leak.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Not now. I have something I want to say. I will yield later. Some gentleman on this floor the other day asked if the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture was a friend of the farmer.

I want to say to you that he is not only a friend of the farmer but he is a friend of the producer and a friend of the consumer. Why, gentlemen, he is a statesman, because he is trying to stop a leak in the Federal Treasury. [Applause.] And he is going to stop it. We may need a rule, we may not be able to stop the leak with a cotton plug, but we are going to stop this $6,000,000 leak in the Treasury, caused by the lack of proper return for the pasturing on the national forest reserves. I hope there is no feeling over this matter. To-day ought to be a joyous day in our history. To-day is the first day in the history of our great Nation that Mr. Pinchot has congratulated the floor leader on our side on his attitude toward conservation. To-day, my friends, is a great day for the public. I want to congratulate the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House to-day for having had the foresight and the courage and the manhood and the Americanism to throw off the yoke last night, and to declare yourselves for America and against compulsory military training. [Applause.] Thus, you have said to the public and to the world in general, "We refuse to follow the General Staff. We ignore the advice of Baker. We set aside the letter of the Chief Executive, and we decide to follow that great leader, Mr. MONDELL, on the question of compulsory military training. [Applause.] To-day is a day when we all ought to be happy, and I congratulate you. I have a personal pride in this, because my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] from my State, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, has been making this fight, and now you have agreed with him, and you have decided, over the protest of the Chief Executive, to back him up in his effort to prevent the Prussianizing of the American Army, and to stand for America. So I say to-day ought to be a day of general rejoicing. I congratulate you on the new leadership that you have voluntarily adopted by your vote last night in conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the selection, classification, and segregation of lands within the boundaries of national forests that may be opened to homestead settlement and entry under the homestead laws applicable to the national forests; for the examination and appraisal of lands in effecting exchanges authorized by law and for the survey thereof by metes and bounds or otherwise by employees of the Forest Service under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and for the survey and platting of certain lands, chiefly valuable for agriculture, now listed or to be listed within the national forests, under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 233), and the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stats., p. 1095), as provided by the act of March 4, 1913, $87,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is under this appropriation that some of the difficulties so eloquently spoken of by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] are sought to be overcome. It is true that in laying out national forests, in some of them originally, areas not strictly forest lands were included. The limits included lands more suitable for agriculture than for forestry. That was early realized, and money was provided for the employment of men to investigate just such conditions and for setting aside from the national forests lands more suitable for agriculture. As a result of this kind of work millions of acres have been eliminated from the national forests proper and have been made subject to homestead entry; millions of acres have actually been settled by homesteaders. The work is going on, other areas will be eliminated, and later they will be taken up and settled. It is to be hoped that this appropriation will be continued, so that the disagreeable situation, unfortunate on account of the haste in which the forests in the first place were laid out, may be speedily remedied.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Although additional new duties seem to be imposed by this paragraph, nevertheless the amount has been decreased. What is the explanation for that remarkable fact?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have not the figures before me showing just what the reduction is.

Mr. TILSON. It is $20,000. We find this language:

For the survey thereof by metes and bounds or otherwise by employees of the Forest Service under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

That is new language.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is new language, but is suggested by the two departments, and it is made in accordance with the law to save the survey by the other department.

Mr. TILSON. I wondered whether there were additional duties imposed, with a reduction in the item.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; we simply agreed that it might be legally done without a duplication of work.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. In the few short months that I have had the privilege of enjoying the companionship of the distinguished Chesterfield, the statesman and farmer from the sand dunes of Medicine Lodge, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], I have learned to appreciate him very much, but never more than I did a few moments ago, when he assumed the rôle of speaking for the Republican Party in congratulating the Democratic Party on following the Republicans in opposition to compulsory military service. Of course, the false assumption was apparent even to a schoolboy. The Democratic Party has not followed the Republican Party, because nobody knows what the Republican Party stands for on the question of compulsory military training. I presume the gentleman from Kansas extended the proper expressions of condolence to his next-door neighbor, Mr. HARRELD, of Oklahoma City, when he bowed to the blunt orders of the autocratic steering committee on the Republican side of this House, who vetoed his selection for membership on the Committee on Military Affairs because he is opposed to compulsory military service, and who said to him, "Unless you surrender your convictions and the convictions of your constituents upon the question of militarism, you must bow your head in shame and go out of public life," because everybody knows that kicking him off the committee meant his political death. That is what it meant—that HARRELD was crucified in order that the Republicans of this House might play their little double-crossing game on this question of universal compulsory military training. What is the game? What is the position of the Republican Party? You do not know, the gentleman from Kansas does not know——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will ask the gentleman to wait for a moment.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman make a true statement.

Mr. WINGO. That is what I want to do.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman evidently does not know what he is talking about or he would not make the statement that he has.

Mr. WINGO. What is that?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman just said that he bowed to the autocratic orders of the steering committee. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that no orders were issued from any steering committee.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, certainly not. The steering committee has grown so great on the Republican side that even the frown of the steering committee, a whispered suggestion that one will have to follow the wishes of the steering committee, is sufficient. It was stated, not in the public press, but was stated by a leading Republican, that Mr. HARRELD either must voluntarily get off "or we will kick him off." Let us see what the position of the Republican Party is. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] congratulated us on following the Republican Party. God knows I would hate to see the Democratic Party assume the attitude of the Republican Party in this House. Your attitude on universal compulsory military training is typical of your attitude on every public question. You have not a conviction on a single public question, or if you have a conviction you are afraid to take the American people in your confidence before election day. What are you trying to do—to follow MONDELL or JULIUS "CAESAR" KAHN? Are you following the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, while we are all very much regaled by the gentleman and always are interested in hearing him speak, yet in the interest of progress we ought to go along with the bill. We have made very little progress.

Mr. WINGO. Very well, I withdraw my request, hoping that some Republican will take that five minutes to tell us where the Republican Party stands on compulsory military service. You wiggle in and you wiggle out so that you do not know yourself where you stand. You do not know whether you are with WADSWORTH and KAHN or with MONDELL. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing and the testing of such woods as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, for investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States, and for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest products, and for commercial demonstrations of improved methods or processes, in cooperation with individuals and companies, $173,260.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the following portion of this paragraph:

For investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industry in the United States.

That is new legislation and is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is an item that has been carried for a number of years. It has been carried since 1912, starting with an appropriation of $177,000. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. It is new legislation, unauthorized by law; and the mere fact that in some previous appropriation bill such an item was carried, unless it is definitely shown that it was the intention of the Congress to make it permanent law, would not make it in order in an appropriation bill now. There has been no appropriation bill enacted indicating that this should be permanent law and that an annual appropriation should be made for it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman what his objection is?

Mr. BLANTON. To the investigation of foreign woods, because the Department of Agriculture could go to every foreign country after such woods and spend this $173,260 messing around in Europe. That is something I do not think this country wants done.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Why, the very language of the bill is that the tests are to be within the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but it does not prevent sending emissaries on junketing trips to the battle fields of France and to England to have a nice summer trip at some time, such as has been done by representatives of various other departments that I could name.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to this: We are talking about everything but the point of order, and if I may be permitted I want to say that this is one of the most valuable items in the bill to the people of America. Investigations that go on in connection with this provide for methods of discovering how you can veneer with high-class wood on the commonest kind of wood that we have. You can take any kind of wood and provide veneering and make it appear as artistic as anything I know in that line. And the continued examinations and investigations and tests made under this item have resulted in enabling the people of the United States to indulge in a higher class and a more artistics work of finish in buildings and homes and every kind of construction than they have ever been able to indulge in before, and it is more economical than can be done with the original timber.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman believe that this country is dependent upon foreign woods for that purpose? I maintain we have plenty of varieties of different kinds of woods in this country to perform our various experiments upon.

Mr. MADDEN. That may be the information of the gentleman, who is not an expert on that class of work; but the opinion of men who have had the experience in this line of work is that it is the most valuable aid to an economical work of construction and development of art that has ever been done at the expense of the Government in any of its branches. I am speaking from experience.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the argument be confined to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has made a point of order. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. My purpose, Mr. Chairman, is not to address myself directly to the point of order, but rather by your permission to address myself to the item against which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has made the point of order, namely, the appropriation of $173,260 for the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has made the point of order that this item is not proper legislation, because it appropriates money for investigations and tests of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Not that it is not proper legislation, but that it is new legislation, unauthorized by law.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is mistaken in his statement, and I contend his point of order is not well taken. The item in question does not provide for tests without the United States, as the gentleman from Texas seems to think, but does provide for tests within the United States of foreign woods which may be of commercial importance to our American industries.

Further, this is not new legislation, as the gentleman from Texas contends, as this very item has been carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill for several years past. It is, therefore, not a new item of legislation, but is old legislation regularly carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and therefore, in my judgment, comes clearly within the general purposes of the organic law.

Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has just said that "this is one of the most valuable items in the bill to the people of America." Mr. Chairman, I happen to be quite familiar with the work of the Forest Products Laboratory located at Madison, Wis., having been for 13 years a member of the board of regents of the University of Wisconsin and a member of the board when this laboratory was located at Madison in 1910. I can, therefore, speak with some degree of authority and with information gathered from observations of the work of the laboratory on the ground of operations. So strongly do I feel that this laboratory should be encouraged in its splendid work under the excellent supervision of its director, Mr. C. P. Winslow, ably supported by the assistant director, Mr. O. M. Butler, and the efficient members of the staff, who are men of high caliber and large scientific attainments, that were it not for the very strained condition of our National Treasury and the general slogan for retrenchment of expenditures I would, at the proper time, move an amendment to double the appropriation called for in the bill. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that we shall agree that it will be a matter of economy and conservation of our commercial, financial, and economical resources as a Nation to increase this appropriation in next year's budget to at least $500,000, so as to give adequate support to one of the most important scientific bureaus of investigations and tests carried on by our Government in the conservation of our natural resources.

The present lumber and wood prices are the highest that have ever been known in the United States, and are still rising. In spite of rapidly increasing prices, which are partly due to the growing shortage of materials, there is an appalling waste and loss of efficiency in handling, through practically every phase of wood manufacture and utilization, from the logging operations in the woods to the completion, shipment, and even in the use of the final product. Losses in the seasoning of wood in the United States at the present time are conservatively estimated to reach nearly $50,000,000 annually. Every dollar of this loss is an added cost in the production of lumber and every board foot wasted an additional drain on our rapidly diminishing forest resources. Several billion feet, worth in the neighborhood of $75,000,000, could be saved annually if full use were made of preservative processes for treating ties, poles, posts, piling, mine timbers, shingles, lumber, and other wood which is exposed to the weather and thereby subject to decay. A large percentage of the annual loss from fire in the United States of about $200,000,000 is in wooden structures, and this could be materially reduced through the development of fire-retarding paints and compounds and fire-resisting construction. A casual survey shows that the losses from faulty mill and shop practices in a wide range of industries amount to millions of dollars annually. Unnecessary losses through packing and shipment in poorly designed and constructed containers are variously estimated at from $40,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually for domestic shipments alone, and the packing methods used by American concerns in export shipments are reported by the Consular Service to be notoriously bad.

Practically every city in the United States has its own building code, and for wood as a material there is the greatest confusion and practically unlimited range in requirements. Reasonable uniformity would be of obvious advantage to both manufacturer and consumer. In structural timbers strength is ordinarily a prime requisite, yet for only two groups of timbers in the United States has a system of grading rules been developed which selects the wood on a basis of its strength. For lumber practically every species has at least one distinct set of grading rules and several species have more than one set, and this from the standpoint of the consumer results in a confusion which places the average consumer at a great disadvantage in his lumber purchases.

Of the material in the woods, only approximately 30 per cent appears in the form of seasoned rough lumber, and in the manufacture of the rough lumber there is a further waste which in some important wood-consuming industries reaches from 10 to 25 per cent, and in special cases even higher. In the bending of high-grade stock in vehicle making, for example, losses frequently reach 50 per cent. We are clearly falling far short of taking advantage of our opportunities for saving and utilizing this enormous waste.

Many of the industries which manufacture and utilize wood are among the oldest industries and as such have been very slow on their own initiative to improve their processes and cut down waste. The public is concerned as much as the industries, because inefficient methods and waste are exhausting our remaining timber resources and are increasing prices of all wood products to the consumer. The only effective solution of this situation lies in forest products research, provided for in the Forest Products Laboratory.

It was for the purpose of promoting economy and efficiency in the utilization of wood and in the processes by which forest materials are converted into commercial products that the Forest Products Laboratory was established in 1910 by the United States Forest Service at Madison, Wis., in cooperation with the University of Wisconsin. This laboratory is an institution of practical research, and with the exception of a similar, though much smaller, organization in Canada is the only institution of its kind in the world. Its organization of trained specialists conducts investigations into the mechanical, physical, and chemical properties of various woods and wood wastes and of processes and methods of manufacture and handling to secure greater efficiency and economy. When it is considered that the value of the products of the primary and secondary wood-using industries of the country aggregates over $10,000,000,000 annually, the importance of such an institution is apparent. Indeed, the hearings state that the lumber industry is the second or third largest industry of our country.

In the early years of its operation the laboratory's small organization of eighty-odd people devoted its attention primarily to the development of fundamental and correlated information of the properties of the varied available species of timber and to improvements in the better-known and standard processes and methods in its utilization.

At the outbreak of the World War the importance of forest products to a successful national defense program—from the airplane propeller to the charcoal in the gas mask and from the wood alcohol in the high explosives to the wooden container for the shipment of the shell—made necessary not only the use and application of the knowledge already gained, but a vast amount of further information which necessitated increasing the prewar organization. Since the close of hostilities, it has been found that the results of this work during the emergency are practically all applicable to industrial needs, and while lack of funds has made it necessary to reduce the organization over 50 per cent, the industrial requests for the wider effective dissemination and demonstration of the results already secured and also for further studies and investigations are sufficient to justify an organization far greater than is at present possible. These requests and opportunities are becoming increasingly broad and numerous, and failure to meet them is causing incalculable losses annually to the country. For example, one of the conspicuous lines of work which should be greatly expanded is the investigations to develop the general laws for box and container construction, the relationship between the size and contents of the box, the kind and thickness of material to be used, methods of nailing, strapping, and so forth, and, further, special tests to check the application of general laws to special classes of containers. Tests of this character with proper cooperation with producers and shippers will rapidly reduce unnecessary losses, now amounting to millions of dollars annually. As one example of the value of forest-products investigations, work of this character is known to have saved to the United States several times more than the total sum spent to date in all forest-products investigations.

A system of grading for structural timber which permits its selection on the basis of strength, the prime requisite, has been developed and commercially adopted only for the southern pines and the Douglas fir of the West. Similar rules should be developed for hemlock and for other woods used for purposes where strength is a controlling factor. The growing scarcity of timber and the difficulty of securing high-grade material in large sizes will result in the use of built-up timbers. Two years of war alone brought pronounced changes in this direction. If built-up timbers are to be used safely and economically, an extensive series of tests to develop the best designs and the most effective fastenings and joints is necessary.

In addition to structural timbers there are great possibilities in the use of laminated and built-up construction for many other purposes, such as wagon parts and smaller articles, like shoe lasts, and so forth. Any such development increases utilization and reduces the cost of material and the losses and time in drying. Fundamental strength tests should be completed for all American species, since only from these tests can be decided the comparative merits of various timbers, which are becoming scarce or high priced, and the possibility of using substitute timbers.

Plywood is a comparatively new wood product, and compared to other materials of construction little is known of its strength, of the comparative values of different species, the best methods of manufacture, the best glues and methods of gluing, and of its merits as compared with solid wood. Its use is increasing, and information along the lines indicated is greatly needed. The development of glues is necessary from the standpoint of plywood and also from the standpoint of many classes of laminated construction, and for those which are exposed to the weather and to moisture water-resistant glues are necessary. Before the war there were no recognized standard specifications for glue. An excellent beginning was made in investigations of glues and their proper manipulation during the war, and the results of the work with waterproof glues and plywood at the Forest Products Laboratory saved the country over $5,000,000 in the procurement of this material during the emergency; but the bulk of the field still remains to be covered.

For many purposes, such as furniture, vehicles, cooperage, and airplane manufacture, it is necessary to bend wood. Practically nothing is known as yet of the conditions under which this can be done most effectively and without the excessive losses at present common in commercial plants which waste high-grade, expensive materials.

On problems connected with the drying of wood, much progress has been made in the development of general laws and in their application to a few of our more common woods and a few additional woods which can not be seasoned easily. The work done has made it possible, for example, to kiln-dry wood with safety for airplane construction during the war. Much remains to be done in the determination of general laws and in the application of results to the remainder of American species in commercial use, especially to such important species as Douglas fir, western hemlock, and some of the more refractory hardwoods. While the more important field is in methods of artificial drying, there is room also for a great improvement in methods used in the natural seasoning of wood.

The life of the four to six billion feet of timber which decays in service each year could be lengthened from two to four times by preservative treatment. The work already begun to determine the efficiency of various preservatives under various conditions of exposure and when used with different species should therefore be hastened and completed.

Preservatives not only prolong the life of treated woods but make it possible to utilize the less durable species in the place of the more durable ones. Untreated piling of the best species when placed in exposed conditions is sometimes wholly destroyed in a few months. Work so far done indicates for this specific use the possibility of increasing the life to several years. Far too little has been done in the development of fire-retarding compounds for the impregnation of wood, and the possibilities are practically unlimited. Enough has been done in the study of methods of construction to show great possibilities in the reduction of fire risks by the development of slow-burning construction and of fire stops. During the war a cheap and practical wood coating was developed for airplane propellers which practically prevents the absorption of moisture and thus eliminated the shrinking, expansion, and warping which make airplane propellers useless. Investigations of this character should be extended to wood finishes and protective coatings in general, with the practical certainty of great benefits in durability and resistance to the absorption of moisture. There is a very general and urgent demand for the development of satisfactory coatings and finishes.

Intensive technical studies of the operations of mill and shop practices of lumber, pulp and paper, and the secondary wood-using industries such as veneer and cooperage plants, furniture factories, sash and door mills, vehicle and implement factories, and various kinds of specialty shops, by highly-trained technical men able to review the processes and problems of these industries in an entirely new light, can unquestionably bring about savings and increase efficiency amounting to many millions of dollars annually.

The greatest possibility for utilizing the two-thirds or more of the material in the woods which is now wasted before the final product appears is through the chemical industries. Of these the pulp and paper industry is the most important. Tests already begun to determine the feasibility of using other American species for pulp should be completed for all promising species. Further studies are needed to improve the efficiency of paper-making processes. The demand for specialty products made of pulp is rapidly increasing, and much work should be done on such products as fiber silk, twines, rugs, fabrics, and so forth. Losses through the decay of wood pulp in storage now amount to several millions of dollars annually, and the development of methods to eliminate this will benefit the supply, quality, and cost of print paper. Methods employed for the distillation of both hardwoods and softwoods are still primitive.

Comparatively few species are used, whereas there is a possibility of using many, and the use of waste material can be greatly increased. Much should also be done regarding the possibilities of utilizing the products of wood distillation.

Wood pulp made from spruce is now practically the basis for most of our news-print paper, and while the demand for news-print paper is increasing at an enormous rate the supply of spruce logs is decreasing at an alarming rate. Already the shortage is acute, and we are facing a paper shortage that threatens the suspension of many of our newspapers of the country. In the hearings on this bill we are told that 2,000 to 3,000 small newspapers face extinction unless the news-print supply is increased. No doubt other woods can supply the need. We should find by tests what they are. The Forest Products Laboratory, provided with adequate funds to carry on tests and experiments, would, undoubtedly, find some relief for the acute situation which now exists. Indeed, could Congress be made to realize and understand the importance of the pulp and paper division of the Madison laboratory alone it would gladly and promptly provide an adequate appropriation for its support.

An important phase of forest-products research is cooperation with industries and the public, to assist as fully as possible in putting promising laboratory results into practice, and this phase of the work should be developed in proportion to the investigations. It is as important to see that the results of the work are effectively utilized as it is to conduct the research; this can only be accomplished by the development of a group of specialists able to lend assistance of a practical nature at the plant or place of operation of the manufacturer engaged in the use of wood or its by-products.

In general the Forest Products Laboratory is practically the only institution of appreciable size in existence which is devoting its attention solely to wood and its by-products. Its work bears directly on the problems of industries manufacturing annually products valued at over $10,000,000,000. The application of the results of the laboratory's investigations has already resulted in direct savings to this country amounting to many times more than the total cost of maintaining the institution during the past 10 years.

There is an ever-increasing demand upon the laboratory organization for further work, and this has never been more acute and important than now, when the constantly rising cost of lumber and other wooden products is making economy in the utilization of forest products of increasing importance not only to the industries concerned, but to the public as a whole. It would seem, therefore, a shortsighted policy to restrict the activities of this institution, and that in any sound policy of economy adequate provision for the continuation and expansion of the work of this institution should be made.

Economy and efficiency in handling forest products, and a comprehensive plan for reforestration of our denuded waste-land areas, is a national necessity. One of the greatest and most important national problems to-day is the proper conservation and utilization of the products of our rapidly depleting forests. A national forest policy is one of the pressing needs in our reconstruction program. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the Chair indulge me just a moment on the point of order?

I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Forestry Service is, in the first instance, a great business institution. It is charged with the management, direction, and control of timberlands aggregating, I think, something like 110,000,000 acres. These timbered lands are of very great variety, and with respect to them the Forest Service is charged with very great responsibilities and with very great powers and duties. It has power to sell great portions of the stumpage on these lands almost without restriction. It has the power to reforest portions of these forests that have been denuded by fires or otherwise. It is necessarily, in the direction, control, and management of this enormous business, compelled to gather together for its own use and information of the employees and officers of the Forest Service great masses of information with respect to the utilization of timber in this country and in foreign countries. The item under consideration, against which the gentleman from Texas has made the point of order, is the item under which the experimentation and the investigation necessary to the management, direction, and control of these great timber resources are undertaken. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to some of the powers which the Forest Service has with respect to forest reservations. For instance, it is provided—

That said reservation shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior—

And permit me to say here that all the powers and duties originally invested in the Secretary of the Interior with reference to these forests are now transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture—whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonders within said reservation, and their retention in their natural condition.

How can he provide for the sale of timber in the forests under appropriate circumstances if he has not the powers and means to investigate the things which are related to the sale of timber and the management of the forests?

Now, it may be necessary in order to gather information with respect to the preservation of rare timber in the forests to investigate the methods of preservation of foreign timber. So it seems to me that the power, the authority to investigate into the methods of preserving the foreign woods, and so forth, is implied by the very extensive power which we have conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief of the Forest Service by the various enactments of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order to the language on page 46 of the bill, as follows:

For investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States.

The Chair would state, in considering the paragraph in which this language is found, in connection with the authority of the Bureau of Forestry, before and after its transfer from the Department of the Interior to the Agricultural Department, it seems that this activity on the part of the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Forestry, is one that is within the general purposes of the organic law. It does not provide for tests without the United States, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] suggested, but for tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to the industries of the United States. The Chair is inclined to the view——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I offer this further suggestion, that according to the Chair's ruling, under the general interpretation of the organic statute the Agricultural Department has the authority to send to France and secure horses over there and bring them over for experimental purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON. That has been done.

Mr. BLANTON. But not except by express authority of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, this does not involve that question. The Chair will state that he is inclined to think that this comes within the general authorization and purposes of the department, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, can we not finish this item?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, had come to no resolution thereon.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 20. Joint resolution giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CALDWELL, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 11, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pause a moment to worship Thee. With our very best intellect, with our hearts' highest aspirations, with our life's devotion we worship Thee. We pray that Thou wilt look upon us as we face the responsibilities of another day. Guide us so that our work may be to the praise and honor and glory of Thy name. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. SMOOT, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS (S. DOC. NO 215).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations in the sum of $238,500 required by the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year 1920, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. I present certain proposed amendments to the reservations in the reported resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany simply that they may be printed and lie on the table and that they may also be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The proposed amendments are as follows:

RESERVATION NO. 1.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italic.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend reservation No. 1 so that it will read as follows:

1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by [a concurrent resolution of the] the President or by Congress [of the United States] alone whenever a majority of both Houses may deem it necessary.

RESERVATION NO. 4.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italic.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend reservation No. 4 so that it will read as follows:

4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, tariff, internal commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs [and all other domestic questions] are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or the assembly of the League of Nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

RESERVATION NO. 6.

[Omit the part in brackets.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend reservation No. 6 so that it will read as follows:

6. The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles [between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan].

RESERVATION NO. 7.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italic.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Strike out all of reservation No. 7 and substitute the following:

[7. The Congress of the United States will provide by law for the appointment of the representatives of the United States in the assembly and the council of the League of Nations, and may in its discretion provide for the participation of the United States in any commission, committee, tribunal, court, council, or conference, or in the selection of any members thereof, and for the appointment of members of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences, or any other representatives under the treaty of peace, or in carrying out its provisions; and until such participation and appointment have been so provided for and the powers and duties of such representatives have been defined by law, no person shall represent the United States under either said League of Nations or the treaty of peace with Germany, or be authorized to perform any act for or on behalf of the United States thereunder; and no citizen of the United States shall be selected or appointed as a member of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences except with the approval of the Senate of the United States.]

No person is or shall be authorized to represent the United States, nor shall any citizen of the United States be eligible, as a member of any body or agency established or authorized by said treaty of peace with Germany, except pursuant to an act of the Congress of the United States providing for his appointment and defining his powers and duties.

RESERVATION NO. 9.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italic.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend reservation No. 9 so that it will read as follows:

9. The United States shall not be obligated to contribute to any expenses of the League of Nations, [or] except the office force and expenses of the secretariat, or of any commission, or committee, or conference, or other agency, organized under the League of Nations or under the treaty, or for the purpose of carrying out the treaty provisions, unless and until an appropriation of funds available for such expenses shall have been made by the Congress of the United States.

RESERVATION NO. 10.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italic.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Strike out all of reservation No. 10 and substitute the following:

10. [If the United States shall at any time adopt any plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the League of Nations under the provisions of article 8, it reserves the right to increase such armaments without the consent of the council whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war.]

No plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the League of Nations under the provisions of article 8 shall be held as binding the United States until the same shall have been accepted by Congress.

RESERVATION NO. 11.

[Omit the part in brackets.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend reservation No. 11 so that it will read as follows:

11. The United States reserves the right to permit, in its discretion, the nationals of a covenant-breaking State, as defined in article 16 of the covenant of the League of Nations, residing within the United States [or in countries other than that violating said article 16,] to continue their commercial, financial, and personal relations with the nationals of the United States.

RESERVATION NO. 14.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italic.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend reservation No. 14 so that it will read as follows:

[14. The] Until part 1, being the covenant of the League of Nations, shall be so amended as to provide that the United States shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to that which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate shall be entitled to cast, the United States assumes no obligation to be bound, except in cases where Congress has previously given its consent, by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate have cast more than one vote.

The United States [and] assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

RESOLVING CLAUSE.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italic.]

Amendment proposed by Mr. LODGE to the reservations to the treaty of peace with Germany, viz: Amend the resolving clause to read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution of ratification which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted [by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan] as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by the allied and associated powers and a failure on the part of the allied and associated powers to make objection to said reservations and understandings prior to the deposit of ratification by the United States shall be taken as a full and final acceptance of such reservations and understandings by said powers.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING. I present a number of telegrams and letters protesting against the bill of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] terminating the wheat guaranty. As the bill has been reported, I ask that they lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Washington, February 9, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I inclose for your information copy of a telegram received to-day from Mr. John H. Rich, chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis. The bill to which Mr. Rich refers has not been brought to the attention of the Federal Reserve Board, and I am unable to advise you as to the views of the board in the matter, but believe that you will be interested in learning the views of the officers of the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis.

Very truly, yours,

W. P. G. HARDING, Governor.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate.

MINNEAPOLIS, February 9, 1920.

HARDING, Washington:

Press reports indicate that Senate committee has favorably reported the Gronna bill terminating the wheat guaranty and appropriation, making it effective upon its passage. The committee has apparently acted without sufficient investigation of the disastrous effects which this bank feels will certainly follow. Senator GRONNA stated that in his opinion wheat would sell higher without the guaranty, and therefore appropriation and administrative organization is not now required. Course of wheat prices since his statement have been diametrically opposed to his judgment. We can not agree with his views. Termination of guaranty would be a substantial repudiation of national pledge, which still has four months to run. Previous telegrams with reference to car situation outlined in detail the hazardous position of the farmers having grain to market and the grain and milling interests. Continuance of guaranty until June 1 can do no harm, and its withdrawal might and probably would seriously disrupt entire financial situation in this district. All present contracts and commitments were based on guaranty, and inability of farmers, grain and flour dealers to liquidate is not because of unwillingness on their part, but because of inability of railroads to move grain and flour products. Feel sure that board's views upon this exceedingly important matter will have great weight in Senate, and that its influence will contribute materially toward avoiding a dangerous financial situation. Gov. Young and directors within reach agree and concur in these views.

RICH, Federal Reserve Agent.

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., February 9, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We believe termination of Government wheat guaranty will have disastrous results and urge you to defeat passage of Gronna bill.

FARMERS' GRAIN DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF SOUTH DAKOTA.
CHAS. H. EYLER, Secretary.

GROTON, S. DAK., February 9, 1920.

Senator THOMAS STERLING,
Washington, D. C.:

We hereby protest the action of the Senate Agricultural Committee in reporting favorably on the Gronna bill terminating the wheat guaranty and appropriation as a repudiation of the Government's sacred obligation and as doing not only a direct blow to the grain and milling interests, who have pledged their good faith and capital upon the Government's guaranty, but is a menace to all business of the country. Before this measure is enacted into law we respectfully request that a full hearing be given to the grain and milling interests, who are vitally affected by this bill.

Hon. THOMAS R. STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We urge you to do all within your power to prevent enactment of Gronna bill terminating wheat guaranty, which would be repudiation of Government's agreement. Would leave the milling and grain interests of the country exposed to great uncertainties and hazard. Might readily result in paralyzing trade, causing enormous damage to the whole country.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., February 7, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following message has just been forwarded to Senator GRONNA: "We urgently request your assistance in securing the hearing mentioned. The press reports the Senate Agricultural Committee favorably reporting your bill terminating, on passage, the wheat guaranty and the appropriation making it effective. The committee apparently acted without investigation of the disastrous effects which would certainly follow. On the very day your bill reached the Senate the collapse of the wheat price, even in the Minneapolis market, carried certain grade within 5 cents of the Government guaranteed basis. The withdrawal of the underlying assurance of Government readiness to purchase at the guaranteed price might produce a further decline below the guaranty, and this termination would be a substantial repudiation of a national pledge still running for four months, while 200,000,000 bushels of wheat is still on the farms and 200,000,000 bushels more in the hands of farmers' elevator companies, independent dealers, and terminal elevator operators and others. In addition, there are large stocks of flour on hand. The producers, grain dealers, and millers have relied upon the assurance of the Government buying to the end of the pledge, June 1. The banking interests have financed the purchase of this wheat, also largely relying upon the Government guaranty. With all the security possible the marketing machinery is exposed to great uncertainty and hazards, as illustrated in the collapse of the overseas exchange, suspending export trade even in foodstuffs. We urgently request that before further action is taken the Senate Committee on Agriculture grant a hearing to the representatives of farmer organizations, farmer elevator associations, grain dealers' associations, and affected interests."

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF MINNEAPOLIS,
By WILLIAM DALRYMPLE, President,
JOHN G. MCHUGH, Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a large number of letters and telegrams from citizens in different parts of the State of Kansas remonstrating against what is known as the Gronna wheat guaranty legislation. The bill has been reported from the committee and is on the calendar, and I move that the letters and telegrams lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the National Association of Commissioners and Departments of Agriculture, remonstrating against the repeal of the tax-exemption features as applied to land banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate bill 2775 to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator move that it be taken up?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it be taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title to the bill and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, and lands containing such deposits owned by the United States, including those in national forests, but excluding lands acquired under the act known as the Appalachian Forest act, approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 961), and those in national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas, to municipalities: Provided, That the United States reserves the right to extract helium from all gas produced from lands permitted, leased, or otherwise granted under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in the extraction of helium from gas produced from such lands, it shall be so extracted as to cause no substantial delay in the delivery of gas produced from the well to the purchaser thereof: And provided further, That citizens of another country, the laws, customs, or regulations of which, deny similar or like privileges to citizens or corporations of this country, shall not by stock ownership, stock holding, or stock control, own any interest in any lease acquired under the provisions of this act.

"COAL.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the completion of any qualified applicant shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States, outside of the Territory of Alaska, into leasing tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such tracts, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing tract, and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, upon the request of any qualified applicant or on his own motion, from time to time, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and shall award leases thereon by competitive bidding or by such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any qualified applicant: Provided, That the Secretary is hereby authorized, in awarding leases for coal lands heretofore improved and occupied or claimed in good faith, to consider and recognize equitable rights of such occupants or claimants: Provided further, That where prospecting or exploratory work is necessary to determine the existence or workability of coal deposits in any unclaimed, undeveloped area, the Secretary of the Interior may issue, to applicants qualified under this act, prospecting permits for a term of two years, for not exceeding 2,560 acres; and if within said period of two years thereafter, the permittee shows to the Secretary that the land contains coal in commercial quantities, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease under this act for all or part of the land in his permit: And provided further, That no lease of coal under this act shall be approved or issued until after notice of the proposed lease, or offering for lease, has been given for 30 days in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the lands or deposits are situated: And provided further, That no company or corporation operating a common carrier railroad shall be given or hold a permit or lease under the provisions of this act for any coal deposits except for its own use for railroad purposes; and such limitations of use shall be expressed in all permits and leases issued to such companies or corporations, and no such company or corporation shall receive or hold more than one permit or lease for each 200 miles of its railroad line within the State in which said property is situated, exclusive of spurs or switches and exclusive of branch lines built to connect the leased coal with the railroad, and also exclusive of parts of the railroad operated mainly by power produced otherwise than by steam: And provided further, That nothing herein shall preclude such a railroad of less than 200 miles in length from securing and holding one permit or lease hereunder.

"SEC. 3. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure modifications of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

"SEC. 4. That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the existing lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

"SEC. 5. That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest will be subserved thereby, lessees holding under lease areas not exceeding the maximum permitted under this act may consolidate their leases through the surrender of the original leases and the inclusion of such areas in a new lease of not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands.

"SEC. 6. That where coal or phosphate lands aggregating 2,560 acres and subject to lease hereunder do not exist as contiguous areas, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, if, in his opinion the interests of the public and of the lessee will be thereby subserved, to embrace in a single lease noncontiguous tracts which can be operated as a single mine or unit.

"SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall not be less than 5 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each third month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall not be less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of diligent development and continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may permit suspension of operation under such lease for not to exceed six months at any one time when market conditions are such that the lease can not be operated except at a loss.

"SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue limited licenses or permits to individuals or associations of individuals to prospect for, mine, and take for their use but not for sale, coal from the public lands without payment of royalty for the coal mined or the land occupied, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interests: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to any corporations: Provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 320 acres for a municipality of less than 100,000 population, and not to exceed 1,280 acres for a municipality of not less than 100,000 and not more than 150,000 population; and not to exceed 2,560 acres for a municipality of 150,000 population or more, the land to be selected within the State wherein the municipal applicant may be located, upon condition that such municipal corporation will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit to residents of such municipality for household use: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the holding of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

"PHOSPHATES.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any applicant qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States containing deposits of phosphates, under such restrictions and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisment, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulation adopt.

"SEC. 10. That each lease shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys, if surveyed; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such survey; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose; and any excess deposits shall be repaid to the person, association, or corporation making such deposits or their legal representatives: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width.

"SEC. 11. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each third month succeeding that of the sale or other disposition of the phosphates or phosphate rock, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions shall be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may permit suspension of operation under such lease for not exceeding 12 months at any one time when market conditions are such that the lease can not be operated except at a loss.

"SEC. 12. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates, or phosphate rock, under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits.

"OIL AND GAS.

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill one or more wells for oil or gas to a depth of not less than 500 feet each, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered. The Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that the permittee has been unable with the exercise of diligence to test the land in the time granted by the permit, extend any such permit for such time, not exceeding two years, and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought a monument not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of posting said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits not more than five in number may be granted to any qualified applicant for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within three years from date of the permit and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within four years from date of permit: Provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

"SEC. 14. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit: Provided, That the permittee shall be granted a lease for as much as 160 acres of said lands, if there be that number of acres within the permit. The area, to be selected by the permittee, shall be in compact form and, if surveyed, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such surveys; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose, and any excess deposits may be repaid to the person or persons making such deposit or their legal representatives. Such leases shall be for a term of 20 years upon a royalty of 5 per cent in amount or value of the production and the annual payment in advance of a rental of $1 per acre, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year, with the right of renewal as prescribed in section 17 hereof. The permittee shall also be entitled to a preference right to a lease for the remainder of the land in his prospecting permit at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent in amount or value of the production, and under such other conditions as are fixed for oil or gas leases in this act, the royalty to be determined by competitive bidding or fixed by such other method as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary shall have the right to reject any or all bids.

"SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for lease to the one-quarter of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

"SEC. 16. That all permits and leases of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so permitted or leased, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the permittee or lessee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells driven by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the permit or lease, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 17. That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same, not subject to prefereatial lease, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior to the highest responsible bidder by competitive bidding under general regulations to qualified applicants in areas not exceeding 640 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such bonus as may be accepted and of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall not be less than 12½ per cent in amount or value of the production, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods. Whenever the average daily production of any oil well shall not exceed 10 barrels per day, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reduce the royalty on future production when in his judgment the wells can not be successfully operated upon the royalty fixed in the lease. The provisions of this paragraph shall apply to all oil and gas leases made under this act.

"SEC. 18. That upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed prior to July 3, 1910, and continuously since by the claimant or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting placer mining law to any oil or gas bearing land upon which there has been drilled one or more oil or gas wells to discovery embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment as royalty to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost, from such land, the claimant, or his successor, if in possession of such land, undisputed by any other claimant prior to July 1, 1919, shall be entitled to a lease thereon from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent of all the oil or gas produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area, but in no case to exceed 3,200 acres, within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provision of this section when the area of such geologic oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor, subject to this limitation, shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to, but not in excess of, said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure, but not more than 3,200 acres.

"All such leases shall be made and the amount of royalty to be paid for oil and gas produced, except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost, after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all like claims situate within any naval petroleum reserve the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder or any part of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"No claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section.

"Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest," approved March 2, 1911,' approved August 25, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them as shall be deemed just. All leases hereunder shall inure to the benefit of the claimant and all persons claiming through or under him by lease, contract, or otherwise, as their interests may appear, subject, however, to the same limitation as to area and acreage as is provided for claimant in this section: Pro- vided, That no claimant acquiring any interest in such lands since September 1, 1919, from a claimant on or since said date claiming or holding more than the maximum allowed claimant under this section shall secure a lease thereon or any interest therein, but the inhibition of this proviso shall not apply to an exchange of any interest in such lands made prior to the 1st day of January, 1920, which did not increase or reduce the area or acreage held or claimed in excess of said maximum by either party to the exchange: Provided further, That no lease or leases under this section shall be granted, nor shall any interest therein, inure to any person, association, or corporation for a greater aggregate area or acreage than the maximum in this section provided for.

"SEC. 18a. That whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum placer claim under preexisting law to land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized at any time within 12 months after the approval of this act to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds of operation.

"SEC. 19. That any person who on October 1, 1919, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands under a claim initiated while such lands were not withdrawn from oil or gas location and entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within six months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions, and limitations as to acreage, as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery, he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That where such prospecting permit is granted upon land within any known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field, the royalty to be fixed in any lease thereafter granted thereon or any portion thereof shall be not less than 12½ per cent of all the oil or gas produced except oil or gas used for production purposes on the claim, or unavoidably lost: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant for a permit or lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section.

"All permits or leases hereunder shall inure to the benefit of the claimant and all persons claiming through or under him by lease, contract, or otherwise, as their interests may appear.

"SEC. 20. In the case of lands bona fide entered as agricultural, and not withdrawn or classified as mineral at the time of entry, but not including lands claimed under any railroad grant, the entryman or patentee, or assigns, where assignment was made prior to January 1, 1918, if the entry has been patented with the mineral right reserved, shall be entitled to a preference right to a permit and to a lease, as herein provided, in case of discovery; and within an area not greater than a township such entryman and patentees, or assigns holding restricted patents may combine their holdings, not to exceed 2,560 acres for the purpose of making joint application. Leases executed under this section and embracing only lands so entered shall provide for the payment of a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent as to such areas within the permit as may not be included within the discovery lease to which the permittee is entitled under section 14 hereof.

"OIL SHALE.

"SEC. 21. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any person or corporation qualified under this act any deposits of oil shale belonging to the United States and the surface of so much of the public lands containing such deposits, or land adjacent thereto, as may be required for the extraction and reduction of the leased minerals, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as he may prescribe; that no lease hereunder shall exceed 5,120 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the United States, at the expense of the applicant, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to methods of mining, prevention of waste, and productive development. For the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the oil or other minerals covered by a lease under this section the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as shall be specified in the lease and an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year, at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum, for the lands included in the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year; such royalties to be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products from shales the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any royalty and rental during the first five years of any lease: Provided, That any person having a valid claim to such minerals under existing laws on January 1, 1919, shall, upon the relinquishment of such claim, be entitled to a lease under the provisions of this section for such area of the land relinquished as shall not exceed the maximum area authorized by this section to be leased to an individual or corporation: Provided, however, That no claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: Provided further, That not more than one lease shall be granted under this section to any one person, association, or corporation.

"ALASKA OIL PROVISO.

"SEC. 22. That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, who, or whose predecessors in interest, prior to withdrawal had complied otherwise with the requirements of the mining laws, but had made no discovery of oil or gas in wells and who prior to withdrawal had made substantial improvements for the discovery of oil or gas on or for each location or had prior to the passage of this act expended not less than $250 in improvements on or for each location shall be entitled, upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States within one year from the date of this act, or within six months after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent, to a prospecting permit or permits, lease or leases, under this act covering such lands, not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each: Provided, That leases in Alaska under this act whether as a result of prospecting permits or otherwise shall be upon such rental and royalties as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and specified in the lease, and be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period of the lease: Provided further, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products in Alaska the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any rental or royalty not exceeding the first five years of any lease.

"No claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section.

"SODIUM.

"SEC. 23. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of sodium dissolved in and soluble in water, and accumulated by concentration, in lands belonging to the United States for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands in San Bernardino County, Calif.

"SEC. 24. That upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 23 hereof has been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit and that such land is chiefly valuable therefor the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for one-half of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of the amount or value of the production, to be taken and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if the land be not surveyed by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. The permittee shall also have the preference right to lease the remainder of the lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of the amount or value of the production to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. Lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 23 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, except such lands as are situated in said county of San Bernardino, shall be held subject to lease, and may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres; all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty of not less than one-eighth of the amount or value of the production as may be fixed in the lease, and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre for the first calendar year or fraction thereof and $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period, upon such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be incorporated in each lease or prescribed in general regulation theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to mining methods, waste, period of preliminary development, and minimum production, and a lessee under this section may be lessee of the remaining lands in his permit.

"SEC. 25. That in addition to areas of such mineral land which may be included in any such prospecting permits or leases, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee of lands containing sodium deposits, and subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than 25 cents per acre, the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 40 acres in area, for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper developments and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, AND GAS LEASES.

"SEC. 26. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit, and shall insert in every such permit issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him.

"SEC. 27. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease in any one State; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of the same producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, for any kind of mineral leased hereunder, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres of the respective kinds of minerals allowed to any one lessee under this act. Any interests held in violation of this act shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any ownership or interest forbidden in this act which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18, 18a, 19, and 22 or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines of railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same: And provided further, That if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of, or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, or sodium entered into by the lessee, or any agreement or understanding, written, verbal, or otherwise to which such lessee shall be a party, of which his or its output is to be or become the subject, to control the price or prices thereof or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of the amounts of lands provided in this act, the lease thereof shall be forfeited by appropriate court proceedings.

"SEC. 28. That rights of way through the public lands, including the forest reserves, of the United States are hereby granted for pipe-line purposes for the transportation of oil or natural gas to any applicant possessing the qualifications provided in section 1 of this act, to the extent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 25 feet on each side of the same under such regulations as to survey, location, application, and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and upon the express condition that such pipe lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers: Provided, That the Government shall in express terms reserve and shall provide in every lease of oil lands hereunder that the lessee, assignee, or beneficiary, if owner, or operator or owner of a controlling interest in any pipe line or of any company operating the same which may be operated accessible to the oil derived from lands under such lease, shall at reasonable rates and without discrimination accept and convey the oil of the Government or of any citizen or company, not the owner of any pipe line, operating a lease or purchasing gas or oil under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no right of way shall hereafter be granted over said lands for the transportation of oil or natural gas except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this section. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located in an appropriate proceeding.

"SEC. 29. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit upon such terms as he may determine to be just, for joint or several use, such easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for the use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease: And provided further, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

"SEC. 30. That no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease, and may with like consent surrender any legal subdivision of the area included within the lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency; provisions prohibiting the employment of any boy under the age of 16 or the employment of any girl or woman, without regard to age, in any mine below the surface; provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase; provision requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary to insure the sale of the production of such leased lands to the United States and to the public at reasonable prices, for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare: Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated.

"SEC. 31. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

"SEC. 32. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act, also to fix and determine the boundary lines of any structure, or oil or gas field, for the purposes of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have, including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee of the United States.

"SEC. 33. That all statements, representations, or reports required by the Secretary of the Interior under this act shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified by him, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require.

"SEC. 34. That the provisions of this act shall also apply to all deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas in the lands of the United States, which lands may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States such deposits, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by such laws reserving such deposits.

"SEC. 35. That 10 per cent of all money received from sales, bonuses, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts; for past production 70 per cent, and for future production 52½ per cent of the amounts derived from such bonuses, royalties, and rentals shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress, known as the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902, and for past production 20 per cent, and for future production 37½ per cent of the amounts derived from such bonuses, royalties, and rentals shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as 'Miscellaneous receipts.'

"SEC. 36. That all royalty accruing to the United States under any oil or gas lease or permit under this act on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas.

"Upon granting any oil or gas lease under this act, and from time to time thereafter during said lease, the Secretary of the Interior shall, except whenever in his judgment it is desirable to retain the same for the use of the United States, offer for sale for such period as he may determine, upon notice and advertisement on sealed bids or at public auction, all royalty oil and gas accruing or reserved to the United States under such lease. Such advertisement and sale shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to reject all bids whenever within his judgment the interest of the United States demands; and in cases where no satisfactory bid is received or where the accepted bidder fails to complete the purchase, or where the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that it is unwise in the public interest to accept the offer of the highest bidder, the Secretary of the Interior, within his discretion, may readvertise such royalty for sale, or sell at private sale at not less than the market price for such period, or accept the value thereof from the lessee: Provided, however, That pending the making of a permanent contract for the sale of any royalty, oil or gas as herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior may sell the current product at private sale, at not less than the market price: And provided further, That any royalty, oil, or gas may be sold at not less than the market price at private sale to any department or agency of the United States.

"SEC. 37. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals, including lands and deposits described in the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming,' approved August 1, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 1346), shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws, including discovery.

"SEC. 38. That, until otherwise provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to prescribe fees and commissions to be paid registers and receivers of United States land offices on account of business transacted under the provisions of this act."

And the House agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF ROUGE RIVER, MICH.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred Senate resolution 279, submitted by Mr. SHERMAN on the 13th ultimo, directing the Committee on Appropriations to investigate and report to the Senate concerning the subject of the improvement of Rouge River, Mich., and the connection of Henry Ford therewith, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, which was agreed to.

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. KIRBY. Senate bill 3371, authorizing Gordon N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the White River, was passed by the House with amendments. The Senate disagreed to the amendments and requested a conference, and it was granted. The conferees were appointed on the part of the Senate and have concluded that the House amendments should be agreed to. In order to avoid making a report to each House of Congress and obtaining action thereon, I move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3898) authorizing the Klamath Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 3899) to appropriate $5,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen in the drought-stricken areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3900) authorizing the adjustment of the boundaries of the Ochoco National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3901) for the allotment of lands on the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, among the members of the allied tribes occupying the said reservation and composed of the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and the Yahooskin Bands of Piute Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. OVERMAN:
A bill (S. 3902) granting a pension to Joseph R. Owens (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:
A bill (S. 3903) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes," approved February 24, 1919; to the Committee on Finance.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to crave the indulgence of the Senate for about five minutes; I think not more. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate certain bills with reference to the pay of the personnel of the Army and Navy. The status of those bills I will state very briefly.

In the House a bill was introduced by Mr. KELLEY of Michigan providing relief for a part of the enlisted personnel of the Navy. That bill went to the House and was passed by a practically unanimous vote. I think there were only 10 votes in opposition out of between 300 and 400 votes cast.

The bill came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. About the same time a bill was brought up by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in regard to the pay of the personnel not only of the enlisted men of the Navy but the entire personnel, commissioned and enlisted, of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service. I believe that bill was unanimously reported to the Senate, and it passed, as I recall it, without any objection.

I believe if there is any bill before Congress to-day that demands early consideration it is a bill which pertains to the pay of the personnel of the boys who are doing our fighting for us. If Senators could be where I have been for the last two weeks and heard the appeal from the boys who are really suffering because of their needs for food and raiment, they would agree with me, I am sure, that something ought to be done and that something ought to be done now.

In view of this situation I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 11927) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation. The bill comes before us from the Committee on Naval Affairs amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" the Wadsworth bill. We believe there is no other way by which this legislation can be taken care of except in conference, and it is for that purpose that the Committee on Naval Affairs have thought it wise to request this action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. GRONNA. Reserving the right to object, I wish the Senator would state briefly the provisions of the bill. We have so many military and naval bills that it is difficult for one who is not a member of either of the committees to know what they are.

Mr. PAGE. The status of the bills which are before us now practically are the Navy bill introduced by Representative KELLEY of Michigan, and the Army bill introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. The Navy bill proposes to increase the pay of the personnel of the enlisted men of the Navy, not including a few of the apprentice seamen. It does not in any way touch the Army. It does not in any way touch the commissioned personnel of the Navy. It simply refers to a part of the enlisted men of the Navy.

The bill introduced by the Senator from New York provides for a general increase of the Army, the Navy, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service. I do not wish to be understood at this time as particularly advocating all those features of the Wadsworth bill which we have before us, but rather that we should take such action as will bring the matter into a conference committee, that we may there thrash out the differences and try to get some bill and get that bill at the earliest possible moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11927) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the base pay of all officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service, contract surgeons, warrant officers, Army field clerks, and field clerks Quartermaster Corps be, and the same is hereby, increased 10 per cent per annum; and the pay of all enlisted men and of members of the female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy is hereby increased 20 per cent: Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of May 11, 1908, the act of May 13, 1908, the act of May 12, 1902, and the act of August 14, 1912, as respectively specifically limit to $5,000, $4,500, and $4,000, the pay of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major in the Army and Marine Corps; and captain, commander, and lieutenant commander in the Navy; and captain commandant, senior captain, and captain in the Coast Guard; and assistant surgeon general, senior surgeon, and surgeon in the Public Health Service are hereby repealed: Provided, That the base pay of all chief petty officers while holding active appointment shall be $99 per month, and those holding permanent appointment shall be $126 per month: Provided further, That commissioned officers, warrant officers, and petty officers and other enlisted men of the Coast Guard shall receive the same pay and allowances and bonuses as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed for corresponding grades or ratings and length of service in the Navy, and the grades and ratings of warrant officers, chief petty officers, petty officers, and other enlisted persons in the Coast Guard shall be the same as in the Navy, in so far as the duties of the Coast Guard may require, with the continuance, in the Coast Guard, of the grade of surfman, whose base pay shall be $70 per month: And provided further, That the senior district superintendent, the three district superintendents next in order of seniority, the four district superintendents next below these three in order of seniority, and the junior five district superintendents shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, first lieutenant, second lieutenant, and third lieutenant in the Coast Guard, respectively.

SEC. 3. That all officers, contract surgeons serving full time, warrant officers, Army field clerks, and field clerks Quartermaster Corps, and members of the female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy, shall, at all times be entitled to the number of rations per diem, or commutation thereof, that equal the number of rooms now authorized by law or existing regulations as quarters for the rank or rating of such officers, or other persons above specified. All noncommissioned officers of the Army and Marine Corps of grade of color sergeant and above as fixed by existing Army Regulations, and all chief petty officers of the Navy and Coast Guard shall be entitled to one ration or commutation therefor in addition to that to which they are now entitled; and the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury may, by regulations, authorize the issuance of a further additional ration or payment of commutation therefor to such noncommissioned officers and chief petty officers above mentioned, of the forces under their respective departments, as they may deem proper. The commutation value shall be determined by the President on July 1 of each fiscal year, and for the current fiscal year the value shall be computed on the basis of 55 cents per ration.

SEC. 4. That the compensation of all officers and enlisted men on the retired list shall hereafter be computed on the pay established by this act, and on all allowances provided for officers and enlisted men of corresponding rank and rating on the active list: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall operate to reduce the pay or allowance of any officer or enlisted man now on the active or retired list.

SEC. 5. That in lieu of compensation now prescribed by law, commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed for officers of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank as prescribed in the act of May 22, 1917, entitled "An act to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes," including longevity, which shall be based on the total service in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Army, and Navy; and all laws relating to the retirement of commissioned officers of the Navy shall hereafter apply to commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

SEC. 6. That hereafter when any officer, enlisted man, or other person named in this act is ordered to make a permanent change of station, the United States shall furnish transportation in kind from funds appropriated for the transportation of the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service to his new station for the wife, children, and dependent parents of such officer, enlisted man, or other person: Provided, That if the cost of such transportation exceeds that for transportation from the old to the new station the excess cost shall be paid to the United States by the officer, enlisted man, or other person concerned.

SEC. 7. That the rights and benefits prescribed under the act of April 16, 1918, granting commutation of quarters, heat, and light during the present emergency to officers of the Army on duty in the field are hereby continued and made effective after the termination of the present emergency, and shall hereafter apply equally to officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service: Provided, That such rights and benefits as are prescribed for officers will apply equally for enlisted men now entitled by regulations to quarters or to commutation therefor.

SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act during the current fiscal year under the several appropriations respectively chargeable.

Mr. PAGE. The substitute is the same as the bill which passed the Senate the other day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont upon what theory the officials of the Public Health Service are placed in the same category as officers of the Army and Navy, and why we should increase their compensation 30 per cent? If we increase their compensation 30 per cent, I see no reason why all other officials of the Government should not be similarly treated.

Mr. PAGE. Because the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service are all regarded as a part of the Army or Navy, and whether their pay should be increased or not is a matter which, with the aid of the Senator from Utah, who is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, we hope to pass upon in a deliberate way and reach some conclusion, not necessarily to give any of these additional pay but rather to get the matter into conference, in the only way we can get it there fully, and that is by substituting the Army pay bill for the bill which passed the House.

Mr. KING. The explanation just submitted by my distinguished friend fails to convince me of the wisdom or propriety of retaining the provision giving Public Health Service officers the same increase that is given to the officers of the Army. Assurances were given by the Senator from New York, as I recall, when his bill was before us, that the compensation of the officers of the Army and Navy is substantially the same now as that fixed many years ago. It was stated that many officers of the Army and Navy were resigning because of the inadequate pay which they were receiving, and that it was imperative that something be done in order to retain sufficient officers for the Army and the Navy.

Responding to arguments and requests of the Committee on Military Affairs, a bill was passed a few days ago which is practically the same as the one just reported by the Naval Committee. Let me say in passing that I voted against the bill, because I felt that it was unwise to grant so large an increase in the compensation of the beneficiaries named in the bill. I did not approve of an increase of 30 per cent in the compensation of officers, and believe that our action in passing the bill was a mistake. I know of no reason why the Public Health Service should be singled out from the hundreds of thousands of civilian employees of the Government for an increase of this magnitude.

I understand there are between 3,000 and 4,000 doctors in the Public Health Service; there may be more. I know the ambitions of that organization are unbounded, and there are being brought into the service as many employees as Congress will make appropriations for; and I am informed that the personnel has been increased without authority of law and appeals made to Congress to cover the expenditures involved in general deficiency appropriation bills.

Conceding for the moment that it was proper to increase the pay and allowances of the officers of the Army and Navy, there is no reason that I can see why the compensation of the employees in the Public Health Service should be increased. Their compensation was not fixed upon the same basis. The Public Health Service organization is the creature of recent years, and its swollen proportions, as we now behold them, have been attained within a few years. As I understand, many employees in the Public Health Service are paid out of lump-sum appropriations and not by statute. I think it is indefensible to give to the officials of that organization the same increase that it is proposed to give to the officers of the Army and Navy, whose compensation was fixed many years ago, and upon a basis very different from that employed in determining the compensation allowed officers in the Health Service.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. We passed the other day what is called the Wadsworth bill. That increased the pay of the officers in the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service, and it increased the pay of the enlisted men in the Army but made no provision for the enlisted men in the Navy. It is the purpose of this legislation, as I understand the Senator from Vermont, to give an opening for an increase to the enlisted men of the Navy as well as the enlisted men of the Army. Am I not correct?

Mr. PAGE. I think the Senator is not correct.

Mr. NELSON. Is not that the whole purpose of this bill?

Mr. PAGE. I think the Senator is not correct, for the Navy bill does not take into account the apprentice seamen. For reasons which were explained the other day in the Senate when the bill of the Senator from New York was under discussion, that has not been taken into account.

Mr. NELSON. But it takes in seamen in general?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. All the enlisted seamen are taken in, except the apprentice seamen?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. And it is the purpose to give them the same pay as the enlisted men of the Army?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. That is my understanding.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Minnesota does not appreciate the objection and criticism which I was urging against this bill.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that we have already passed the bill increasing the pay of all of these officers. That bill was called the Wadsworth bill.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. NELSON. The pending bill is only for the purpose of correcting a defect in the Wadsworth bill. That bill not only provided an increase of compensation for all of the officers, but also provided an increase of compensation for enlisted men in the Army. However, it made no provision for the enlisted personnel of the Navy. The whole purpose of this bill is to provide for the enlisted men of the Navy as we provided for the enlisted men of the Army. The bill covers all but apprentice seamen; it does not propose any change whatever of the Wadsworth bill as to the officers of the Army or Navy, the Coast Guard, or the Public Health Service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am afraid that the criticism which I am making is not fully understood by Senators. I am inquiring of the Senator from Vermont what reason there is for including in the Wadsworth bill and in this bill provisions for increased compensation for the employees of the Public Health Service?

I have insisted that the reasons which might justify an increase in the pay and allowances of officers of the Army and the Navy would not justify an increase in the compensation of employees of the Public Health Service; that one of the arguments urged for an increase in the salaries of the officers was that they were fixed many years ago, and, with but few exceptions, there had been no increase; that many of the officers now, because of the high cost of living and the inadequate compensation which they are paid, were resigning, so that the service of the Government in the Navy and in the Army was suffering materially.

I believe there should be some increase in the salaries of the officers of the Army and the Navy; but I do not believe that it should be a 31 per cent increase. I think the Wadsworth bill was wrong in making such an increase. I voted against it, as I shall vote against this bill now. But I am inquiring of the Senator from Vermont why it is necessary to duplicate the wrong which was committed in the Wadsworth bill by inserting in the pending bill a provision to give to the Public Health Service this tremendous increase.

I have stated that no reasons have been submitted warranting this course, and the dissimilarity in the service is so great, and the conditions under which the Army and Navy service developed are so variant from those which produced the Public Health Service, that it is absurd to claim any relationship or any such integration as to require similar treatment in the matter of fixing salaries and compensation.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Can he see any better way to reach a proper adjustment of all these matters than to pass these two bills into conference, where, better than anywhere else, we may take up each individual item which the Senator has suggested and decide as to what should be done in order to make a perfect bill? We all understand that, so far as the other House is concerned, they probably will not consent to the passage of some of the items referred to by the Senator from Utah, but when the matter gets into conference we shall then have an opportunity to pass upon those items as best we may. The bill will then come back into the Senate, where the opportunity to amend may be had by the Senator as well as now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Vermont is in error in stating that when the bill comes back from the conference to the Senate that opportunity will then be given us to amend as now. We know that there is not one chance in a hundred after the conferees have agreed upon a measure and it is brought back to this body to secure a rejection of the conference report. Separate items can not be attacked. We take the bill and the report in their entirety. We must accept or reject. We do not amend.

Mr. PAGE. If I may interrupt the Senator there, is it not true that this matter has been thrashed out and that when the Wadsworth bill was finally passed there was no objection heard, so far as I remember? The Senator from Utah may have made an objection, but if he made an objection I rather think that was the only objection which was then made. The matter has been thrashed out by the whole Senate and by practically unanimous vote the Wadsworth bill was passed. All we now seek to do is to bring the Wadsworth bill into conference so the Senate and the House may get together and do what they believe is just and right. I think we ought to take it there now, because in no other way are we going to get as good a bill as we shall get from a conference.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Who will be the conferees on the bill representing the Senate? Will they be selected from the Naval Committee or from the Committee on Military Affairs? Which bill will be in conference? Will the bill that is now before us be the one which will be in conference or will it be the so-called Wadsworth bill?

Mr PAGE. The bill before us will ultimately be the bill in conference. The Senator asks me who will be the conferees on the bill on the part of the Senate. I suppose the conferees will be appointed by the Vice President.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows—at least, I fancy he knows—whether they will be named from the Military Affairs Committee or from the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. PAGE. If I could have my views about the matter adopted, I would have the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] appointed as conferees on the part of the Military Affairs Committee, and three Senators appointed from the Naval Affairs Committee. I have not conversed with members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate about that, but I shall do so. However, the conference committee will be a good committee, I will say to the Senator from Utah; I have no doubt about that.

Mr. KING. Whoever are appointed from the Senate, of course, they will be a satisfactory committee; I raise no question about that; but I was wondering which committee would take charge of the matter—the Military Affairs Committee or the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. PAGE. I have only expressed my opinion that if I were to decide about the matter I should, because of the fact that it is a composite measure, have a committee of conference made up of members of both the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the opinion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is entitled to great weight, but I am not converted by the argument which he has made. I think it is improper to include the Public Health Service officials in this bill, which is essentially one dealing with the Army and the Navy and with salaries fixed many years ago. The reason for increasing the compensation of the officials of that service does not rest upon the same basis as the reason for increasing the compensation of the officials of the Army or the Navy. I think we ought to amend this bill by striking this provision out. If it goes to conference, the conferees having the whole subject before them, if they deemed it proper, could reinsert the provision.

Mr. PAGE. But having come before the Senate and received practically a unanimous vote of the Senate, is it not better now to let it go to conference and take the chance of getting a good bill out of conference than to amend it here at this time?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand, if unanimous consent is granted, that the Senator from Vermont is objecting to the consideration of any amendments that may be proposed?

Mr. PAGE. I beg pardon; I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. HARRISON. If unanimous consent is granted to substitute the Wadsworth bill for what is known as the Kelley bill, that came over from the other House, the Senate has got to consider any amendments that might be offered. Is not that true?

Mr. PAGE. No unanimous consent has been given to do anything except to take up the bill for consideration now.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator from Utah could move to strike out the provision, could he not?

Mr. PAGE. I know of no reason why that could not be done.

Mr. HARRISON. I expect to offer an amendment to increase the pay of the nurses of the Army and the Navy, because I think the increase provided for them in the bill is unfair. It is only a 20 per cent increase and it should be more, in my opinion.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator from Mississippi see any way in which we can reach a better conclusion or reach it in a better way than to send the bill to conference, and then, when the bill comes back, bring up the matter to which he refers?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is very wise to substitute the Wadsworth bill for the Kelley bill, but I also think the measure ought to be considered here again. I do not think it will take very long to consider it; but when it goes to conference and a conference report is agreed on, then we shall have to vote the conference up or vote it down, and there will be no opportunity for any amendment at that time.

Mr. PAGE. I do not desire to debate the matter any further. I have said all I care to say.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the committee, on line 23, page 5, by striking out the words "and Public Health Service."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 2, of the amendment proposed by the committee, it is proposed to strike out the words "and of members of the Female Nurse Corps" and insert, in line 1, page 6, after the word "annum," "the pay of members of the Female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy is hereby increased 31 per cent."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I would have offered an amendment to increase the pay of the enlisted personnel from 20 per cent to 31 per cent and to strike out the proviso if it were not for the fact that when the Wadsworth bill was before the Senate for consideration the Senate passed upon that proposition on several roll calls and decided that they did not desire to increase the percentage. For that reason I have not offered an amendment carrying out my views on that proposition. I believe that the enlisted personnel should have an increase such as is provided for the officers in this bill, and I believe that the officers were entitled to the increase provided.

There was no consideration, when the Wadsworth bill was before the Senate, of an increase for the nurses in the Army and Navy. It has been shown that they are now getting about $60 a month. If they were engaged in private work they would be getting probably $5 a day, or at least $125 a month. It seems to me that the pay of the nurses of the Army and Navy is grossly inadequate, and that we should increase their pay more than is provided by the bill, which is 20 per cent. The amendment that I have offered touches only the proposed increase of pay for the nurses of the Army and the Navy. It puts the increase provided for them on a par with the increase provided for the officers of the Army and Navy, to wit, 31 per cent. It seems to me that it is just and fair that the nurses of the Army and the Navy, who are now being inadequately paid, who did not receive the large increase referred to by the proponents of this legislation, which was granted to the enlisted personnel some years ago, should be provided for in this bill. I hope that there will be no opposition to the amendment which I have proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent, on account of the illness of his wife. I have promised to take care of him by pair during that time. Not knowing how he would vote, I do not feel at liberty to vote; but if I were at liberty I should vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent because of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to transfer my standing pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and allow my vote to stand. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona is absent on account of business of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand I can transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I do so, and vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CAPPER] on official business.

I wish also to announce the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] on business of the Senate.

I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are detained from the Senate by illness in their families.

The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	Harrison	Overman	Trammell
Calder	Henderson	Phelan	Underwood
Culberson	Hitchcock	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further amendment to be proposed to the amendment? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service."

Mr. PAGE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PAGE, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland conferees on the part of the Senate.

CAR SHORTAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further morning business?

Mr. GRONNA. I call up Senate resolution 302, which went over under the rule on day before yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be stated.

The Reading Clerk read Senate resolution 302, submitted by Mr. GRONNA on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate instruct the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to investigate the alleged lack of supply and failure to supply an adequate number of stock cars and cars for transporting grain and other farm products during the period of Government operation of railroads and the charges of willful interference by certain officials of the Railroad Administration with the successful operation of the railroads by the Government and to report the findings to the Senate as soon as possible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the Senator from North Dakota submitted that resolution, a couple of days ago, I objected to its consideration unless he would move to amend it by referring the resolution to the appropriate committee, namely, the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I stated then that I should vote for the resolution if it were appropriately referred. The Senator did not see fit to accept the suggestion or to have the resolution referred to the appropriate committee. I now move to strike out, on line 2, the words "Agriculture and Forestry" and to insert "Interstate Commerce."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 2 of the resolution it is proposed to strike out "Agriculture and Forestry" and in lieu thereof to insert "Interstate Commerce," so that if amended it will read:

Resolved, That the Senate instruct the Committee on Interstate Commerce to investigate—

And so forth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question for information. This will involve some expense from the contingent fund of the Senate. Has the resolution been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that I do not think it will involve any additional expense; at least, it will involve only a very small expense.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the rules of the Senate provide for just two things that can not be done even by unanimous consent of the Senate, and one of those two things is expending a single dollar out of the contingent fund of the Senate in an investigation unless previously the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has recommended the expenditure; so I suggest to the Senator that he amend his resolution so that it may go first to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and then may go afterwards to whatever is the appropriate committee.

The reason for this rather queer rule is this: The House has a Committee on Accounts. The Senate has a Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. A law was passed which required that all expenditures from either the House fund or the Senate fund must be approved by the respective bodies; and that law can not be overcome even by a unanimous-consent agreement in the Senate or in the House.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I assure the Senator from Mississippi that I do not want to violate any law; but when I say that there will be very little expense, I mean, of course, that the only expense there can possibly be will be the printing of the hearings.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg to call the Senator's attention to the fact that even if it involved only the expenditure of 50 cents from the contingent fund of the Senate, according to the law there must be a hearing by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and a favorable report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has already been authorized by the Senate to hold hearings during this session of Congress, and therefore there is no necessity for this resolution to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate act upon this resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. No; but the resolution that they did act upon authorized the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to hold hearings, and the expense of those hearings was provided for in the usual form.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does any of it come out of the contingent fund?

Mr. SMOOT. It all comes out of the contingent fund. It is so authorized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the rule is very plain.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the rule is very plain, and I know that no unanimous-consent agreement can pass a resolution that asks for money out of the contingent fund without its being referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. If the resolution to which I have referred had not been already referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate at this session of Congress, and that committee had not authorized the necessary expenditure for hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry during this session of Congress, then the Senator from Mississippi would be absolutely right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I asked the Senator a moment ago whether the resolution to which he called attention—the former resolution—had been referred to the committee——

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair make an inquiry? What is the use of this resolution if the committee has already been authorized to hold these hearings?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not discussing that subject. The point I was trying to get at was this: I want to know whether this general resolution, under which the power was granted, has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and has been acted upon by them. If it has not been, evidently doing another wrong thing contrary to law can not excuse having already done a thing contrary to law.

Mr. SMOOT. The practice of the Senate has always been for each of the committees to introduce a resolution at the beginning of the session of Congress authorizing it to hold hearings during that session. There is a regular form for that purpose. Take the Committee on Finance. The Committee on Finance has had such a resolution passed.

We hold hearings during the whole session, upon any question that is referred to the committee, without coming back for an authorization for every hearing; and so it is with this committee. I think there is no necessity for this resolution, because I think the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry already has the authority to investigate this very thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator, if I understand him, is right, and perhaps if I understand him better I am wrong; but while it has been the rule to come in and get the authorization of the Senate for this, that, or the other committee to hold hearings, and to pay for them out of the contingent fund of the Senate, it has also been the requirement of law that in every such case that authorization must be submitted to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Take the Finance Committee, for example. I happen to know that a resolution for that committee was submitted to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and was approved by that committee; and every other one of these resolutions must be approved by that committee in this body or by the Committee on Accounts in the House under a law which admits not even of a unanimous-consent agreement in either separate body setting it aside. Now, the question I wanted to ask the Senator was whether the resolution to which he refers did go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. The original resolution, authorizing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to hold hearings during this session of Congress, went to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. And was approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. And was passed by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, if that be the fact—and of course if the Senator states it, I take it for granted that it is; I have not served upon that committee at this session—then, of course, minor resolutions involving the same general idea of investigation, and only directing their course, would be controlled by the original resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that the Senator from Utah has presented an amendment the effect of which would be to send this resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Speaking for that committee, I desire to make a statement.

There is a car shortage in the United States, a very serious shortage in equipment of that character. The shortage has been long known, for it is of long standing. The Interstate Commerce Committee has investigated the subject many times; in fact, it has been in continuous investigation of the subject for more than two years, and it knows all that there is to be known with regard to the matter.

When the railways of the United States passed into the hands of the Government there was then inadequate car equipment, and at short intervals during the years before there was a car shortage, so that the commerce of the country could not be moved with promptitude and efficiency. It is pretty well known that in order to maintain the car equipment as it existed at the time the Government took possession, it was necessary to supply 100,000 cars each year, and that simply to maintain the existing facilities. Even that addition each year would not provide for the growing commerce of the country. During the two years of Federal control, for reasons which I need not particularize, the Government has not furnished the 100,000 cars each year necessary to maintain the then standard of equipment, and naturally and inevitably we are now suffering from even a greater car shortage than we were when the Government took possession.

These are facts which are perfectly well known and the details of which have been developed before the Interstate Commerce Commission many times, and with all due deference to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I desire to say that nothing could be accomplished by referring the resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is one line in the resolution about which I should like to ask a question to obtain information. I do not know whether the Senator from Iowa has read the resolution or not. It speaks of "charges of willful interference by certain officials of the Railroad Administration with the successful operation of the railroads by the Government." Have those charges ever been investigated by the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. That subject, too, has been now and then exploited before the Interstate Commerce Committee, but, personally, I do not think that that is true. There may have been an employee here and there, a few employees, who have desired to discredit Government operation by infidelity or inefficiency, but I do not think that any such practice has been general or prevalent enough to be really worth while investigating.

However, I am not speaking against the passage of the resolution or its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. All that I say is that it would simply involve the Committee on Interstate Commerce in further labor without any result. I know there is a car shortage, and the committee knows about what the car shortage is, and we are doing everything in our power in the construction of a new railroad bill to put the railways of the country in a position so that they may supply themselves with the cars that are absolutely necessary in order properly to do the business of the country. I hope, if the resolution passes at all, that it will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry rather than to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, because we can not aid the Senate in any further investigation of that question.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am occupying the time of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield while I ask a question of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. KING. As I understand the position of the Senator from Iowa it is that the matters to which reference is made in the resolution have been fully investigated by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not say that the allegations or charge sometimes made, that there have been certain officials or employees of the railroads or of the Railroad Administration who have sought to discredit Government operation by inefficiency and inattentive work, have been fully investigated by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, although we have often heard suggestions of that kind as hearings have progressed. But I know nothing about it and the committee knows nothing about it. So I do not think it would care to investigate the subject, because I do not believe there is any real foundation for the charge.

However, so far as car shortage is concerned, that has been under continuous investigation by the Interstate Commerce Committee for three or four years, and all that can be said about it is that it is a fact. We have not enough cars, and the sooner we put the railway companies in position to supply themselves with the necessary cars the sooner the great injury which the western country is suffering will be repaired, and it can not be repaired until additional equipment can be secured.

Mr. KING. May I ask one further question? The Senator concedes, does he not, that if an investigation of the charge so serious in character as that contained in the latter portion of the resolution is necessary, namely, the charge that there has been a willful interference by certain officials of the Railroad Administration with the successful operation of the railroads by the Government, that the investigation under the rules of the Senate ought to be made by the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. It may be that that is true, but the railways are about to be returned to their owners, and I am infinitely more interested in the preparation and passage of a bill that will enable their owners to operate them successfully than I am in investigating a charge that during the last two years there has been some inefficiency or some intentional effort on the part of employees to discredit Government operation.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator in his laudable purpose to present legislation to the Senate that will deal with this important question, but I am also interested in seeing that the committees of the Senate are properly respected and that they are not deprived of jurisdiction which under the rules has been given to them.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator from North Dakota for yielding.

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Utah for a question, but I did not yield to him for a lecture.

Mr. KING. The Senator may construe it as a question or a lecture, just as he pleases.

Mr. GRONNA. May I say to the Senator from Utah that I am going to read from a report of an actual transaction, and I think I can convince the Senator from Utah that it is the duty of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman to examine into the matter? I would be the last man on earth to interfere with the business of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. There is not a Member of the Senate whom I respect more highly than the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and I certainly would not ask any privilege or take from him or from his committee any work which properly belongs to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish the Senator from North Dakota to understand that, so far as I am concerned, I would not regard it as any invasion of the province of the Committee on Interstate Commerce or any disrespect to me personally if the resolution went to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure of that, Mr. President, and I wish to thank the Senator from Iowa for the statement which he has made and the information which he has given to me and the other Members of the Senate. The Senator always makes a statement so clear that no one can misunderstand him.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from North Dakota before he proceeds allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa along the line that has just been discussed?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Iowa is so well posted on this subject that I know he can give the information I desire. It was intimated to me this morning in a letter I received from Mississippi that we have a bad situation down there touching car shortage, and I want to know what the Senator thinks about the suggestion. My correspondent inquires of me as follows:

> Do you suppose that as the time approaches for the return of the railroads to the owners that lines which own cars and have a good supply of cars on their tracks are holding them, as far as possible, for their own use instead of following orders which have been issued with the idea of having an equitable distribution of equipment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no information on that subject. I have oftentimes been called into conference with the Director General with regard to the distribution of cars in the country, and I have always found him to be exceedingly anxious to get cars to the point at which they were most needed. Whether within the last few days, or since the President issued his proclamation indicating a return of the railroads on the 1st of March, the present Government employees, who will shortly be probably railway employees, are trying to hold their cars in particular localities, I do not know.

Mr. HARRISON. Then there may be something in that suggestion?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no information upon that point at all.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, when I examined the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota I thought its scope ought to be broadened a little. In the complaints which I have heard in regard to car shortage it has been attributed not to actual interference on the part of the officials of the Railroad Administration, but to the willful neglect of those officials or of the employees themselves. I should like to suggest an amendment to the Senator from North Dakota. After the word "Government," in the eighth line of the resolution, insert the words "or of the willful neglect of any of the officials or employees of the Railroad Administration in the performance of their duties in the operation of the railroads."

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection whatever to the proposed amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I move that amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be very glad to accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Iowa I desire, at least, to try to show the reason why I am asking that the resolution should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I desire to read a paragraph from a letter from the Vandusen Harrington Co. They are one of the largest grain corporations of the country and are very reliable people. The letter is addressed to the Farmers' Grain Co., of a certain place in my State, under date of February 6, 1920. I shall read only one paragraph:

> The receipts of wheat here to-day were 162 cars. The early demand was a little better than yesterday, but later in the session the demand slowed up quite a little. This was on account of an order issued by the Railroad Administration that mills here would not be allowed to reload cars with flour from which they had unloaded wheat.

Mr. President, even a farmer ought to know that a ruling of that sort is wrong. Everybody knows or ought to know that cars ought to be hauled both ways loaded. A law was passed the 4th of last March, as an amendment to the food law, which expires by limitation on the 1st day of June, providing for funds to make good the guarantee of the price of wheat. I am not explaining this as fully as perhaps I should, but I do not wish to take any more of the time of the Senate than is absolutely necessary. I believe I am free to say that an effort has been made to force whatever grain there is left upon the farms and in the bins or in the elevators of the country into the market at one time. If the millers are not allowed to ship out their flour but simply to fill their elevators with wheat, where is the farmers' market going to be? If there is no market for wheat, prices must of necessity be reduced. It is an effort to obtain the small amount of grain there is left upon the farms and what may be stored in the country elevators at as low a price as possible.

Those are among the things I want to investigate. It is alleged, and I have the original letters, which show that a conspiracy of this sort is going on. I do not say who is responsible for it, but the Committee on Agriculture has the right and it is its duty to make an investigation of the whole matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no information in regard to any particular order that may have been issued by the Railroad Administration upon the subject suggested by the Senator from North Dakota. I simply wish to reaffirm that so far as the general car shortage of the country is concerned there is no use referring any resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, because it is not only known to that committee but it is known to everybody, and an investigation would simply be an accumulating of evidence that is not only already conclusive but admitted everywhere. I wish to repeat that so far as referring the matter to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is concerned, I have no objection whatever.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the subject ought to be investigated, I hope it will go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I inquire if the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce have been published?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; published and republished.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. We have a great car shortage in the lumber industry in my section. The figures show that we are getting less cars than any other section of the country. I might say that day before yesterday the officials of the Railroad Administration told me that they were bringing back empty cars from my section to carry them into the grain section, not allowing us even to use the cars down there that go loaded with stuff. They make them go back empty.

I hope the Senator will not object to including in his resolution an investigation of coal and lumber products, because it is a very serious situation with us, and if we are going to investigate the proposition from one viewpoint we ought to investigate it from every viewpoint. I shall offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will permit me, in addition to what my colleague has said——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have received communications lately, notably one which came yesterday, in which I was informed that two lumber companies in southern Mississippi were compelled to close down because they could get no cars for the shipment of their product; that they have their yards full and meanwhile are not selling and could not pay their labor until they could sell something and negotiate their bills of lading and drafts.

If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, because I do not want to take up time unnecessarily, I think that when the forefathers established this body they intended it to be mainly a body for the enactment of legislation, but here lately the body has become mainly one for making investigations of various sorts by committees, most of which investigations are taken down in shorthand and published and are never read by anybody except the man who offered the original resolution to have the investigation made and some few people in trade or in commerce in sympathy with the purpose.

We can render a lot better service if we quit the business of investigating every failure which has occurred, most of which failures occur because they were necessary in an absolutely novel and untried situation, where human industry as previously organized and human ability as previously trained could not cope with the situation.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Mississippi, of course, has a right to his own opinion; but if the Senator will give me his attention for just a moment I will say to him that the hearings which have been held before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry are read. I remember that the hearings on the packing bill, which had been very extensive, were printed, and I had to ask for a reprint of those hearings three times. Requests from the Senator's own State and throughout the entire United States have come to my office. Of course, the hearings belong to the public, and we have been glad to send them out. But I am not going to discuss that. I wish to say just a word further and then I shall not delay the Senate any longer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator leaves that point I wish to say that, of course, my quota of the hearings have been put at my disposal. I have not had more than two demands for any of them, and I shall be very glad to give the Senator from North Dakota my quota.

Mr. GRONNA. The committee will be very much obliged to the Senator if he will do that. I only want to say this and then I shall close: We passed a resolution day before yesterday directing the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate the question of alleged charges that the Federal reserve banks refused to make any further loan or to extend loans to farmers and elevator men upon grain securities. That resolution went to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and, while I know that the statement made by the two Senators from Mississippi is absolutely true and that there is a shortage of cars, yet let me say to the Senators that there is a different situation with reference to wheat. The price of wheat has been greatly reduced during the last two weeks. The last report I had was that during this week the price was reduced 70 cents a bushel. With reference to the commodity of which the Senator from Mississippi speaks—lumber—I am a small dealer in lumber, and I know the prices of lumber, and I know that common, ordinary dimensions are commanding $49 a thousand; common, ordinary drop siding has gone to $77 a thousand—300 per cent higher than the price before the war—and the prices are still going up; there seems to be no danger that they are going down.

It is different with the article of wheat, which is a food product. Spring is coming on. Are we going to discourage the spring-wheat farmer so that he will not plant the wheat which he ought to plant in order to supply us with food? It seems to me that is an entirely different question.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. I sympathize with the Senator from North Dakota in the wheat situation; I think the wheat should be removed from his section as quickly as it can possibly be done. But, touching lumber, when we can not get the cars to the plants the plants are closed down, men are thrown out of employment, and children go hungry. That is the situation down there.

Mr. GRONNA. I am not a manufacturer of lumber, but I have seen lumber camps. As a rule, lumber industries have good credit; there is always plenty of land upon which to stack lumber; it does not deteriorate, but it improves, and the freight thereon is thereby lessened. The lumber will keep, though it may cost the manufacturers a few cents more of interest. There is no substantial loss to that industry by a short delay. But as the Senator perhaps knows as well as I do, there might be ruination to hundreds and thousands of farmers and grain dealers throughout the country if the existing situation is not met. It is for that reason that I have introduced the resolution.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senate for a few moments on the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I am not going to oppose the resolution. I do not care who investigates this matter if an investigation is desired, but I wish to say that the Interstate Commerce Committee has investigated the whole subject repeatedly. For the past year we have had information from all sources on this subject, and I should like to take the time of the Senate for a few moments to explain just what the car shortage is and the cause of it.

In 1918, when the railroads were taken over, the Interstate Commerce Committee began an investigation relative to the legislation then recommended by the President, and this subject was looked into at that time. At the beginning of January, in 1919, the Interstate Commerce Committee again commenced the investigation with a view to legislation ultimately returning the roads. The questions of car shortage, the condition of the railroads, and facilities to enable them to handle the commerce of the country, have been fully and carefully investigated. Briefly, it appears that from 1907 to 1916, according to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the testimony of the commissioners, there was not a shortage of cars. During those years there was a surplus of cars, except, perhaps, for a very few months, once or twice, when there was a rush of business. The years 1913, 1914, and 1915 were poor years in railroad business in this country and the consequence was that there was a surplus of cars. Then came the tremendous increase of business which followed our entry into the war, and, of course, naturally there was a shortage of cars.

It appears, as stated by the chairman of the committee, that it requires about 100,000 new freight cars a year to keep the equipment up to standard, since there are a hundred thousand cars a year which wear out entirely. So if the roads purchase 100,000 cars a year they will simply keep their equipment up to standard, and will not keep up with the increase of business. I now send to the desk, and ask that it be made a part of my remarks, a statement showing the purchase of cars by the railroads for five years before the Government took them over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

Freight cars.

	Added.	Retired.
1913	162,670	96,825
1914	150,813	96,985
1915	86,012	90,347
1916	88,254	109,996
1917	117,208	[1] 62,250
Total	604,857	456,403
Average	120,991	91,281
Net addition per year	29,700

[1] Estimated.

Mr. KELLOGG. It appears that the average purchase of cars by the railroads for the five years was, in round figures, 120,000 cars a year; that the retirements were slightly under 100,000 cars a year, or 91,281 cars, leaving a surplus or an increase of substantially 30,000 cars a year to meet the increase of business. Those figures are for the five years before the war. Undoubtedly the increase in the number of cars was not great enough, but, considering the condition of the business, it was perhaps all that the railroads could be expected would purchase. Then, as I have said, came the tremendous increase of business during the war. Business increased 50 per cent in this country over 1915. For two years and two months the Government has purchased only 100,000 cars. Of course, when the railroads were taken over by the Government the railroads were prohibited from buying cars; their business was taken out of their hands. The 100,000 cars have been less than half that were necessary to take care of the ordinary replacements; in other words, there has been a decrease in the number of cars of at least 100,000. Then what cars have been in service have been overworked and have not been maintained as they should have been. I am not blaming anybody for it; it is a condition which has occurred on account of the war. Of course, what the Government should have done when it took over the roads was to have said to every railroad, "Get all the cars you can have manufactured at once." Instead of that, the Railroad Administration spent five months trying to standardize cars and locomotives and to start a general system of centralization and standardization. They lost five months. Material went up, shops got busy, and they never got the cars. That is the real fact of the matter.

There is now a car shortage, and I am afraid there is going to be a greater shortage, because the railroads are going back into private ownership, not earning money enough now to pay their operating expenses and the interest on their bonds, lacking $60,000,000 a year. Of course, it will be difficult under any law to get the credit and the cars in time to save the commerce of the country. The Senator from North Dakota knows that in our section of the country, with, I think, less than half a crop, the country elevators are full of grain, and I doubt in many places if a farmer can sell his grain on account of inability to move that grain to the terminals.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I wonder if the Interstate Commerce Committee has investigated the charges of the willful delay on the part of railroad employees and trainmen in the movement of trains, and whether or not that is not responsible to some extent at least for the shortage of cars?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, Mr. President, I do not think it is responsible for the shortage of cars. We have had hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee during the last year. Committees of employees, merchants' associations, and everybody else who desired have been heard, and occasionally the charge has been made that the railroad employees were trying to discredit Government ownership, but there has never been any testimony to substantiate such a charge.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the charge has been made, not that the employees as a rule were seeking to discredit Government control and operation of the roads, but, rather, that they felt sure of their positions and pay and that they could do as they pleased while the roads were under Government control.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is a different proposition. I do not think the Railroad Administration or the officers working under them for the Government have willfully failed to perform their duty. I do think that the great central, cumbersome organization in Washington, trying to operate 260,000 miles of railroad, is impossible and inefficient; and it could not be otherwise, with all due respect to the ability and integrity of the men who were trying to perform the task. The fewer bureaus we have trying to run the business of this country, the better we will be off. But that these gentlemen have been willfully disregarding their duties, I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. President, I know something about the grain situation of the Northwest and the coal situation and the lumber situation, because as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce I have received complaints from all parts of the country about the failure to furnish cars and concerning the shortage of cars. It is true, as the Senator from North Dakota has said, that there was a very great car shortage preventing the movement of grain from the country elevators to the terminals and to the mills, and also affecting the movement of flour from the mills to the markets. The Senator from North Dakota; my colleague, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]; and others have received many messages from the elevator lines and farmers' elevators and associations in the country begging for cars, and from mills in Duluth, Minneapolis, and other places throughout the Northwest urging that they be given cars for the movement of their manufactured product or they would have to stop. The Federal Reserve Board took action and urged that cars be supplied, and we all urged it in every way possible. The Railroad Administration finally did send a man to Chicago to supervise distribution, and a priority order became effective for 10 days in supplying cars for the movement of grain.

Now there is a dispute as to whether those cars should have been sent to the terminals to move away the flour—I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if I am correct——

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Or whether they should have been sent into the country to move the grain away from the line elevators, which were choked with grain. Mr. Barnes, I believe, thinks that the Railroad Administration made a mistake; but I do not know the facts.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, certainly if they were sent there to be on the ground they must have done what they could. They have not done as much for any other section of the country, so far as I know.

Mr. KELLOGG. Oh, yes; they have sent special agents to many sections of the country to investigate, to give directions, and so forth. I know that occurred in Oklahoma, and I think the Senator from North Dakota will bear me out that it has occurred in many places in the West.

Mr. HARRISON. It gives me a cue. Perhaps we may be able to get one sent down our way.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is a good suggestion for the Senator to follow.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. All of which illustrates that it is a mistake to attempt to run the railroads in the way they have been run. A man here in Washington can not know the necessities of the communities all over the country, and, without in the slightest degree impugning their motives or disparaging their efforts, for they have probably done the best they could——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think that the Senator from Minnesota is entirely correct about that. I have in mind a situation that has developed within the last two or three days at Memphis, Tenn., where, under a ruling as to empty cars being sent to the grain districts, a number of cars have been ordered to those districts, the result being that business is actually paralyzed at Memphis, which is a large distributing point. The business men there, judging from the telegrams coming to me, are almost in a panic about it. It is true that the Railroad Administration has assured me that the order will be modified in such a way that it will not stop business down there; but it shows that the Senator from Minnesota is entirely correct; that this matter can not be handled from Washington, but that local conditions in the various sections of the country must be considered in handling it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, there is another reason which I think the Senator from North Dakota has suggested. There are 150,000,000 or 175,000,000 bushels of wheat in this country which must be sold—am I correct in the amount, I will ask the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. About 150,000,000 bushels.

Mr. KELLOGG. If that is sold it has to be moved when it is needed, or we will find the Government at the end of four months with the wheat on its hands, and Europe unable to take it and pay for it. I am not sure Europe can pay for it anyhow, owing to the condition of foreign exchange.

I am not saying what I have said to oppose any investigation by any committee which wishes to investigate the subject, but I think the Interstate Commerce Committee has given pretty careful study to the matter of car shortage and has about all the information available.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand unanimous consent has been granted to consider this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; and the resolution is under consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is pending.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that that amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 2 of the printed resolution it is proposed to strike out "Agriculture and Forestry" and in lieu thereof to insert "Interstate Commerce."

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Utah if he will not allow us to perfect the resolution before the motion is put to change the committee which shall have jurisdiction of the investigation?

Mr. KING. My amendment is in the interest of perfecting the resolution, but I am perfectly willing to withdraw it temporarily for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Mississippi to offer his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason I make the suggestion is——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I sent to the desk a while ago an amendment which I desire to offer, and I should like to have that amendment read.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no desire to try to displace anyone. I made the suggestion to the Senator from Utah because I want to include some other products, and it may be that there will be a greater reason for a change of the committee proposed in the resolution if my amendment should be adopted than there is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah temporarily withdraws his amendment. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is now before the Senate. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 8, after the word "Government," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or of the willful neglect of any of the officers or employees of the Railroad Administration in the performance of their duties in the operation of the railroads."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota if it is his purpose by the sweeping amendment just suggested to provide for an investigation of every employee of the Railroad Administration and of the alleged neglect or delinquency of every employee, regardless of his position?

Mr STERLING. That is hardly the purpose of the proposed amendment. I suppose that would be in the discretion of the committee to which the matter is referred. They could go as far as they deemed practicable in that line; but my thought in offering the amendment was that we were really reaching the real evil, that it is a case rather of neglect—perhaps willful neglect—on the part of the officials and employees of the railroads, rather than their active interference with the operation of the roads; and I think the resolution should be broadened so as to cover cases of willful neglect on the part of either of these employees.

Mr. KING. I shall not oppose the amendment, although I think it is too sweeping; but the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, if adopted, emphasizes the propriety of referring this resolution to the proper and appropriate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution on line 4, after the word "products," by inserting "coal, lumber, and other products."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the word "railroads," in line 5, the following:

The recent order of the Director General directing empty cars to the grain districts, the reasons therefor, the interference with normal business caused thereby in other districts where cars are now, and report full information in regard thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not know whether there is any widespread trouble in regard to this matter or not. There has been a great deal of confusion in my own home town, and if there has been confusion in other places in the country I think it well that the committee should look into that also. For that reason, while not criticizing in any way what has been done, because I am not sufficiently well acquainted with it to know what was done, out of an abundance of caution it seems to me that that might be looked into also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I now renew the motion submitted a few moments ago, and which I temporally withdrew, to strike out the words "Agriculture and Forestry" and insert "Interstate Commerce."

After listening to the observations submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce [Mr. CUMMINS] and the statements made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] respecting the investigations which have been made and the information elicited by those investigations, it is quite apparent that this resolution calls for a work of supererogation. There is no necessity whatever for duplicating work which has already been performed, and ably performed.

I do not think there is a committee in this body that has been more diligent in the discharge of its duties than the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It has been practically in continuous session for years investigating transportation problems in all of their variations, not only rail transportation problems but the problems incident to water transportation, and since we entered the war the committee has been in constant session, and every aspect of the transportation problem has received consideration.

Particularly has it been necessary that that be done, because of the action of the United States in taking over the railroad system of the country and because it was apparent that with the termination of the war provision must be made for the restoration of the railroads to their owners. The Interstate Commerce Committee has accumulated a vast amount of data concerning the operation of the railroads, the number and character of cars, and locomotives. Indeed, every phase of the railroad question has been investigated. A very full investigation was made by the committee of the House as well as the committee of the Senate, and in that investigation it became necessary to examine into the very questions that are involved in this resolution. They have been investigated, and the information which the Senator desires is available, if he cares to examine the reports of the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committees.

As I remember the observations made by the Senator, I think his inquiry should relate to the grain elevator companies, the grain warehouses, and the millers of the country rather than to the railroads. The Senator contends that there is or has been a conspiracy for the purpose of forcing down the price of wheat. That may be true; and I want to say here and now that the farmer has not been duly considered by the American people in connection with postwar problems. There have been unwarranted attacks made upon the farmers and most erroneous statements have been made as to the profits made by them. The agriculturists have for decades borne heavy burdens, and legislation has often discriminated against them. We may soon awaken to a realization of the fact that the farmers are not producing what the country needs, first, because of the shortage of labor, and, secondly, because of a failure to get an adequate return for their investment and for the efforts which they are compelled to make. We are talking constantly about labor, but we forget the long hours of service performed by the agriculturists and the heavy burdens of toil borne upon their bowed forms. So my sympathies are entirely with the Senator from North Dakota, and I shall do anything within my power, if there has been a conspiracy to injure the farmer, to aid him in determining who the culprits are and in bringing them before the bar of justice.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the Senator from Utah will not think that I have intended to reflect upon the membership of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and I said so a few moments ago. I know that the members of that committee rank among the ablest men in the Senate. I simply wanted my resolution to apply to the industry of which the committee of which I happen to be chairman has jurisdiction. It seems, however, that additional honors have been thrust upon the committee, which I do not want the Senator to lay up against me or against the members of my committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course, I acquit the Senator from North Dakota of any desire to invade, directly or indirectly, the province of any other committee, or to reflect upon the personnel of any committee of the Senate; and yet my good friend will pardon me if I suggest to him now—and I do it with the kindliest feelings—that I think his resolution in its present form is ill-timed. I think there is no necessity for it, and I further think that if there is any necessity for the investigation, with the accumulated evidence which the Committee on Interstate Commerce has—because it has touched some phases, if not all phases, of the question—it could, with very little additional investigation, supply the Senate with all of the information which is desired, and if this resolution is passed in this form there will be unnecessary duplication. I have followed the action of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, though I am not a member of it, and have read, I think, every word of the testimony that has been given in the House and in the Senate for the past two or three years. I have appreciated the tremendous importance of the transportation problem. Though not a member of the committee, I felt that it was my duty, as a Member of the Senate, to acquaint myself so far as I had the opportunity with the ramifications of a problem that so vitally affects the welfare and the prosperity of the American people. So I can say, with some little knowledge of the subject, that the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate on interstate commerce have given a great deal of attention to the question of car shortage and the problems of transportation; and if this resolution shall be passed and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry are empowered to go into this subject, they will be duplicating the work of two committees, one of the House and one of the Senate, and traversing very largely ground which has already been fully exploited. Therefore I say that there is no necessity for the passage of this resolution; but, if there is any necessity, it ought to go to the committee that is charged with the responsibility of making these investigations. If the Senator seeks to have his committee investigate the alleged efforts to improperly reduce the price of wheat made by grain elevator corporations or grain warehouses or millers, I shall support his efforts.

As I was saying, however, Mr. President, the gravamen of the charge of the Senator seems to be a conspiracy upon the part of brokers and dealers in wheat, and some of these terminal elevators.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not say that I charged the brokers or dealers in wheat with a conspiracy. I did not use those words.

Mr. KING. No; the Senator did not use those words, and yet I got the idea from the statement made by the Senator that there was a conspiracy for the purpose of forcing down the price of wheat. The Senator referred to the warehouses, elevators, and millers, as I understood, in connection with the charge which he made; and I deduced from the statement which he made that some of the vendors of wheat, the brokers, the middlemen, those who intervened between the farmer and the ultimate consumer, were parties, directly or indirectly, to this conspiracy. But be that as it may, acquitting the brokers of any delinquency in this respect, the gravamen of the charge of the Senator is that there has been a conspiracy to force down unduly the price of wheat. Now, if the elevators have been conspiring for the purpose of forcing down the price of wheat, I think, perhaps, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would have authority to make the investigation, without coming to the Senate for additional power. But, Mr. President, this resolution goes farther than an investigation of the shortage of cars. Let me call attention to its language. It instructs the committee—to investigate the alleged lack of supply and failure to supply an adequate number of stock cars and cars for transporting grain and other farm products during the period of Government operation of railroads, and the charges of willful interference by certain officials of the Railroad Administration with the successful operation of the railroads by the Government.

Then follows the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], which increases the work of the committee, and they are to report their findings to the Senate as soon as possible. That means a full and complete investigation of the control of the entire railroad situation by the Government.

Mr. President, conceding that the Senator is right, that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry could investigate the shortage of cars because that shortage affects wheat, clearly there is no power in the Agricultural Committee, and we ought not to give the committee the authority, to investigate generally the conduct of the Government in the operation of railroads. That is a subject so clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate Commerce that no one could contend otherwise. I might not object to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry investigating the shortage of cars, as that shortage affected the transportation of wheat, and yet clearly that comes under the cognizance of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, but I do object to conferring upon that committee the authority to investigate the entire subject of the control and operation of the railroads by the Government during the past two years. It seems to me that the Senator ought to consent to the elimination of those words from this resolution. They are not at all germane to the subject which he had in mind and are not logically connected with the complaints which he urged as the basis for the introduction of this resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to assure the Senator that so far as I am personally concerned I do not intend to go into the phases which have already been investigated. Of course, it is for the committee to decide how far they shall go; but there are new matters, I will say to the Senator, which ought to be gone into, and I do not believe that the Committee on Interstate Commerce would ever object to it; at least, the chairman of the committee has so stated.

Mr. HARRISON. May I suggest that it is only 3 minutes of 2? Can we not vote on the resolution before the morning hour is closed?

Mr. KING. Of course, we can vote if we want to vote and if no Senator has any further observations to make and no further amendment to offer. I have the floor, and I have not quite concluded my observations.

Mr. President, there is one other point which I want to make. Within a few days it is quite likely that the railroads will be returned to their owners. If not, they ought to be. As I understand, the conferees have agreed upon a measure which will be reported within a day or two to the House and to the Senate. If the measure as reported by the conferees shall be enacted into law, then within a very few days the railroads will go back to their owners. Long before any investigation which the committee could make has been concluded the railroads, in all human probability, will be out of the hands of the Government and back in the hands of their owners, so that the work which we are by the resolution assigning to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will all be for naught. They will be investigating, if they continue the investigation, something that is of no importance and that can bring no results.

It seems to me that it is a very futile thing to pass the resolution, and certainly if we do pass it we ought to respect the organizations of the Senate. What are committees for? Why do we have a Committee on Military Affairs, a Committee on Naval Affairs, a Committee on Agriculture and Forestry? We have the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to consider matters relating to the important questions connected with agriculture and forestry. That committee may also, by authority of the Senate, inquire into matters pertaining to agriculture and forestry. It would be a transgression of our rules and an invasion of the rights of that committee if we were to take away from it the investigation of matters that properly come within its jurisdiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1699.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McKellar	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	McNary	Sterling
Brandegee	Henderson	Myers	Sutherland
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Thomas
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Townsend
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Underwood
Dillingham	Keyes	Page	Wadsworth
Fernald	King	Phelan	Walsh, Mass.
France	Kirby	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Pittman	Williams
Glass	Lenroot	Pomerene	Wolcott
Gronna	McCormick	Sheppard
Hale	McCumber	Smith, Md.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

[Mr. SMOOT addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. MYERS. I renew my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McNary	Robinson
Calder	Harris	Myers	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	New	Sterling
Curtis	Kellogg	Norris	Sutherland
Fernald	Kendrick	Nugent	Thomas
Fletcher	Kirby	Overman	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	Lodge	Phipps	Watson
Glass	McCormick	Pomerene	Williams
Gronna	McKellar	Ransdell

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. LENROOT and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. FRANCE and Mr. DILLINGHAM entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. KING entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to occupy merely a few moments of the time of the Senate. I will be very brief in the statement which I desire to make.

On day before yesterday the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] stated that the overhead charges for training a man for four months would be less than for training him a whole year, "because for that work we use the Regular Army officers who are already on the roll." I stated to the Senator from New York then that he was mistaken in that statement, because his bill provides for an immense increase in the Army officers, in some cases going as high as 300 per cent. I promised to furnish the figures in reference to the matter, and I now give them.

According to the latest Army List and Directory issued by the War Department, the total number of officers of all grades permanently authorized by existing law for the entire Army, exclusive of all temporary or emergency officers, is 11,734. The pending bill proposes to increase that number to 18,025, an increase of 54 per cent. This includes medical officers, chaplains, and professors. Excluding these, the increase proposed for all other officers is from 9,630 to 15,316, or 59 per cent.

Extravagant as this total increase is, it is found to be quite modest when compared with the increases proposed for the higher individual grades. These increases for all grades are as follows: Major generals of the line, increased from 7 to 20—186 per cent; major generals of the staff, from 11 to 12—10 per cent; all major generals, from 19 to 32—68 per cent; brigadier generals, line, from 34 to 50—47 per cent; brigadier generals, staff, from 2 to 11—450 per cent; all brigadier generals, from 37 to 61—65 per cent; colonels, from 278 to 609—119 per cent; lieutenant colonels, from 287 to 685—138 per cent; majors, from 781 to 2,283—192 per cent; captains, from 2,969 to 4,566—45 per cent; first lieutenants, from 3,024 to 4,339—43 per cent; second lieutenants, from 2,234 to 2,740—22 per cent. The total increase proposed for all medical officers is from 1,905 to 2,457—29 per cent; for all chaplains, from 194 to 245—26 per cent.

The highest increase that we have in any one grade is even larger than I stated on day before yesterday, being 450 per cent in the case of brigadier generals on the staff.

Another remarkable thing about the bill as reported by the majority is that while the general increase in officers provided for in the bill is 59 per cent, the general increase of men over those authorized by the national defense act of 1916 is 17 per cent. Thus, it is seen that the statement I made that the overhead expenses must be vastly increased because of universal military training is proved beyond the peradventure of a doubt by the provisions of the Senator's own bill.

But this is not all. Again, I quote from the Senator's own act, section 45:

> Reserve officers may be appointed and commissioned in grades from second lieutenant to major general, inclusive, and may be assigned to any duty without regard to age, except that the laws and regulations concerning the relation between age and retirement which apply to officers of the permanent personnel in active service shall also apply to reserve officers.

And it is further provided that all those officers, from second lieutenant to colonel, may be appointed by the President alone, and only brigadier generals and major generals have to be approved by the Senate.

Certain figures were brought in by the distinguished author of the bill to show that this bill would only cost the first year, I think, $143,000,000, and the second year $94,000,000 or maybe the third year $94,000,000. How can any accurate estimate be made under a blanket section of the kind just read which gives the President—which means, in actual practice, the Chief of Staff—the right to increase at will, without any limit except the blue sky above us, the number of officers put on the reserve list and assigned to active duty with pay wherever the Army sees fit? And all those officers, mind you, from second lieutenant to colonel, do not have to have confirmation by the Senate at all. We are asked to authorize their appointment without regard to confirmation by the Senate. The Senate does not have to confirm the appointment of anyone except brigadier generals and major generals, under the provisions of this bill. Why, it is just absolutely impossible for any man to present figures from the War Department or anywhere else as to the cost of such a bill as that, and I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to it in this connection.

Under this provision the department might appoint 100,000 officers, and nobody can say them nay; and when you put on the reserve list of the Army for annual mobilization as many as 5,000,000 or 10,000,000 young men of this country you are going to have need for perhaps the 100,000 officers that can be provided for in this bill, and more. This would mean a cost of $400,000,000 for this item alone. We can not afford to adopt any such provision as this, and it is in line with many other provisions of this remarkable bill.

I want to call attention now to section 47 of the bill:

> Assignment of officers to temporary rank: The President, in the Army at large, and Army and Corps commanders within their respective commands, are authorized to assign officers to any temporary rank appropriate to any assignment to tactical units or other organizations or to Army, Army corps, or division staffs. Such officers, in time of peace, shall receive the pay and allowances of their respective permanent grades, except that an officer assigned to duty requiring him to be mounted shall be entitled to the allowances appropriate to such duty in the temporary grade then held by him.

That is a small limitation when it comes to assignments, too.

> Provided, That in time of war officers assigned to temporary rank shall receive the pay and allowances of such rank: Provided further, That in time of war the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint to the temporary rank of lieutenant general and general such officers as may be necessary for appropriate assignments during such emergency, and officers so appointed shall receive the pay and allowances of their temporary grades.

Why should we authorize beforehand the appointment of lieutenant generals and generals? I think the Senate ought to pass upon these matters when they come up, and that no man ought to be appointed full general in the Army of the United States without the approval of Congress. We have kept our hands on it in the past, and it has worked well. Why should we change our policy now?

But perhaps the most remarkable provision of this whole bill, Senators, is the last paragraph of section 45, which is as follows:

> To the extent provided for from time to time by specific appropriation, persons specially qualified in educational, scientific, sanitary, hygienic, professional, technical matters, including transportation, production, and finance, may be appointed by the President alone, under such regulations as may be prescribed, to cooperate with and assist the General Staff or one or more of the services. The President shall have power to fix their compensation, not exceeding the pay and allowances of a colonel, and prescribe their functions and duties, which may be regular, periodic, or occasional.

Does the Senate realize what power is conveyed in that simple provision? Again, there is no limit. How can any Army officer, whatever his gifts in mathematics may be, figure beforehand what will be the cost of such a provision as that? The only limitation upon it is that the compensation shall be the pay of a colonel; and his duties may be regular, they may be periodic, or they may be occasional. They may be very occasional, and yet he will receive a colonel's pay; and the Chief of Staff by that provision is given the right to build up a civilian institution that no power in this country may overcome. Why, it is a power that Congress never ought to permit any department to have. By the way, I will repeat a statement that was more or less famous in my State a number of years ago. I quoted it once before: "Such a power is a power that no good Chief of Staff ought to want and that no bad Chief of Staff ought to have." I am not referring to the present Chief of Staff, either, because he is a man for whom I entertain the highest respect and esteem, and in whom I have great confidence.

I was very much interested day before yesterday in the figures put in the RECORD by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. He accused me of not putting in all the items of cost. He said that I had left out the militia, and the National Guard provision was so involved that I had left out the National Guard of the various States. I do not know how it could be accounted for under the terms of his bill, and I do not think anybody else can find out accurately. But there were no figures in the Senator's estimate, brought down from the finance department, in reference to the two sections that I have just read. They may cost the Government $100,000,000 a year each, or much less or much more, but there is no record here for them, and nobody can tell how many men a Chief of Staff would want—civilians, technicians, experts, transportation men, men learned in production, whatever that means. That will take them all in, if they want to put them in—just such a civilian organization as they deemed necessary to carry anything through. Such is the power, and no man can estimate the cost thereof.

Again, the Senator's figures apparently do not take in the cost of section 80, under which it is provided—think of this!—that retired officers may be assigned to duty with active-service pay and allowances as professors of military science and tactics, assistant professors of military science and tactics, and military instructors at educational institutions. Now, all these provisions were put in this bill for some purpose. They cost money, and if we pass them we must realize just what they mean.

So far as I am concerned, I am not willing to vote for any such provision. I see that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is interested in this matter. I know he is interested, because he does not believe in these lump-sum appropriations or blanket authority to spend money at will; and yet, if we pass this bill, I say to him and to the other Members of the Senate, we pledge future Congresses to appropriate just so much money as it will take to carry out these provisions. Again I quotingly say, "Only the sky is the limit."

One other matter, and I believe I am through, because I do not want to detain the Senate.

I want to read articles 173 and 177 of the proposed treaty with Germany. Mind you, as I explained the other day, and as we all know, we went to war to crush out German militarism, and our boys did it, and here is what has been provided in the treaty of peace:

ART. 173. Universal compulsory military service shall be abolished in Germany.

The German Army may only be constituted and recruited by means of voluntary enlistment.

And, again, in article 177:

Educational establishments, the universities, societies of discharged soldiers, shooting or touring clubs, and, generally speaking, associations of every description, whatever be the age of their members, must not occupy themselves with any military matters.

In particular they will be forbidden to instruct or exercise their members, or to allow them to be instructed or exercised, in the profession or use of arms.

The world has been struggling in a deathlike grip with German militarism for nearly five years, and American boys, without previous universal military training, crushed out that system, and American statesmen put in the wise provision that universal military training should not be established in Germany again; and yet a year has hardly passed in our own free country when it is proposed to establish here a militarism seven times as expensive and of much larger proportions than ever militarism was had in Germany! If it is a bad thing for Germany to have universal military training now—and we say so in our treaty—how does it happen that it is a good thing for free America to have it now? I can not believe that it can be seriously urged in this body or in any other body that we should adopt this system which we crushed in Germany and which we provided in the treaty of peace that she should never reestablish. Americans are just as good as Germans and much better. Why should we not protect them as we protect the Germans?

One other matter and I am through.

I noticed in yesterday morning's paper that a statement was made that the American Legion was in favor of the Wadsworth universal military training bill. We all have the greatest respect for that organization. Now, it seems that organization had a representative meeting of some kind in Indianapolis, and I will read from the Associated Press dispatch as reported in the Washington Post, and we will see what that situation really is. I made the statement the other day, and I think it is true, that while probably a majority of the officers—I do not even know that—may be in favor of conscription in time of peace in this country, I did not believe that a majority of these boys who had fought in Europe believed in that doctrine. There must be some little doubt about it in the minds of the officers of the legion, for here is what they say. With the headline, it reads as follows:

LEGION TO SUPPORT UNIVERSAL TRAINING—MODIFICATIONS IN THE WADSWORTH BILL FAVORED—DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS NOTIFIED.

INDIANAPOLIS, February 9.

The Wadsworth Army reorganization bill, carrying a provision for universal military training, will be supported by the American Legion, with modifications, it was announced this evening at the close of a conference of State commanders of the legion from all parts of the country. After an all-day discussion of the bill National Commander Franklin D'Olier was authorized to appoint a committee to cooperate with the legion's legislative committee and present the suggestions of the conference to Congress.

During the session a telegram was sent to the chairman of the caucus of Democratic Members of the House of Representatives, in Washington, announcing the legion's support of the bill, and this telegram was supplemented by several messages from State commanders to Representatives of their respective States who were attending the caucus.

These provisions, classed as modifications, include elimination of control of the Military Establishment by any exclusive military organization or caste, provision for a thorough house cleaning of inefficient officers and methods, preservation of the National Guard, democratization of the General Staff, and insurance of a military system based on democratic and American principles of obligation and opportunity for all.

Oh, what a change has come over the dreams of the officers of this splendid organization. They are not as strong now for the Wadsworth bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just a moment. It must be that they, too, have learned that that thing which was sufficient to make this great country of ours go into a foreign war, to send our boys 3,000 miles across the seas to crush Germany, was a thing that we would not want willingly to reincarnate on our own shores as soon as the war was over.

I will finish reading the article, and then I will yield to the Senator from New York:

Another change recommended would provide that an appointee to the United States Military Academy must first have served his initial training period of four months, three years in the National Guard, or one year in the Regular Army.

Thomas W. Miller, chairman of the legislative committee of the legion, took issue with Representative MONDELL'S statement in the House recently that the training system provided for in the Wadsworth bill would cost $1,000,000,000, and declared that operation of the system under the bill would actually cost but $645,000,000, including the cost of maintaining the Regular Army.

Mr. President, I bring these three or four facts before the Senate at this time because I deem them of importance, because of the fact that it has been claimed that the bill will not cost the amount that I believe it will cost. I wanted the Senate to have the percentages of increase in the Regular Establishment—54 per cent for the officers of the Regular Establishment, as provided for by the bill, and 450 per cent increase for brigadier generals of the staff. Of course it is going to take an increase in the Regular Establishment. I had stated it would be 300 per cent in the highest case, but my figures were too low. When you come to gather together and organize the great number of young men that will be organized under the provisions of the bill, we will have a larger body of officers than we formerly had in our entire Army when the war with Germany came on.

I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire merely to interject a brief observation. The Senator has referred to the action of the American Legion. It may be proper for me to state that the American Legion first indorsed at its national convention in Minneapolis the principles set forth in the bill which the Senator has been discussing, and that that convention was made up of a very large number of both former officers and former enlisted men. The subcommittee conducted quite lengthy hearings with the committee of the American Legion appointed at that national convention, and a description of that convention is contained in the subcommittee hearings as printed and which are available to any Senator. It might be well to state that a large proportion of the delegates to that convention were former enlisted men and not by any means predominantly officers.

The Senator from Tennessee, in reading the newspaper dispatch a moment ago, mentioned the fact that a committee of the legion had met at Indianapolis the other day and indorsed the bill with certain modifications. It also may be of interest to him and to other Senators for me to say that before the bill was finally whipped into shape the committee of the legion sat for many hours with the subcommittee, and all the modifications mentioned in the dispatch were put in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that was done to the satisfaction of the committee—and I am assuming that is correct—how does it happen that this body at Indianapolis passed resolutions providing for the reservations which they knew were already in the Senator's bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee that met in Indianapolis was different in personnel. I am inclined to believe that the newspaper dispatch is inaccurate in stating that they asked for further modifications.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement, of course, though the Associated Press is usually very accurate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No member of the subcommittee has heard of further modifications being proposed by the American Legion. But it is a fact that after many hours of conference with members of the committee appointed by the National American Legion provisions for the democratization of the General Staff have been inserted in the bill. I shall not discuss them now. Suffice it to say that no such democratic proposal has ever been made in any kind of military legislation in any country on earth. Also provisions adequately guaranteeing the existence and maintenance of the National Guard upon a status more independent and more secure than they have ever occupied before were put into the bill at the request of the committee of the legion. The provision for limiting nominees to the West Point Military Academy to those men who have taken training is in the bill now. That is another modification.

On the matter of central control, which was another one of the modifications mentioned by the Senator in reading the newspaper dispatch, it will be found upon reading the bill that the control of the training is decentralized from Washington to a remarkable degree. That provision was also put in at the earnest request of the committee of the legion and also at the earnest request, I may say, of a large number of former citizen officers who are veterans of the recent war.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if we have settled the Army, I will return to the bill before the Senate. I desire to say that I approach the subject with a great deal of reluctance because I can not bring myself, under all the circumstances now existing, to vote for the pending bill. I am and for several years have been in favor of retirement legislation, and therefore I realize that I run the risk of being misunderstood in the attitude which I shall take now on the bill.

Ever since I have been in Congress there has been agitation on this subject. A few years after I came to Congress, in a moderate way and in the limited time that I had, I commenced to study the various propositions for civil retirement. I began the study at a time when I was opposed to any such legislation. I have changed my views on it principally because I finally reached the conclusion that such legislation would in the end bring efficiency and even economy to the Government service. I am in favor of legislation of the kind principally upon that ground.

As a fundamental proposition I do not believe that any civil employee of the Government is entitled to a pension, and yet I think there are other reasons besides the one I have mentioned why such legislation ought to be enacted. To quite a degree it will bring justice to a great many employees of the Government who are, to some extent at least, denied it under existing conditions. It is easy to say that when a person in the employ of the Government gets old he should be discharged. It is an entirely different proposition to enforce that kind of a law. Questions of humanity have always interfered with the enforcement of that kind of a law and always will. Regardless of whether the employee has properly used his money and cared for his income in order to have a competence when he becomes old and incapacitated for further work, no official has the heart to turn him out in his old age, knowing that he would become a public charge. Of course, they would not all become public charges, but many of them would.

They are suffered to remain on the rolls when as a matter of fact they are not earning the salary that the Government pays. The fact that they are there interferes with what I believe to be the right of other employees who are competent and denies them the promotion and the advancement which under ordinary circumstances they would receive. The fact that employees are denied this promotion will, either consciously or unconsciously, interfere even with their competency.

So on the whole it seems to me that in the long run the Government that provides a proper retirement law for civil-service employees not only does justice to worthy employees, but as a matter of fact in the end saves money for the taxpayers and makes the Government more efficient.

We are, however, Mr. President, it seems to me, confronted with a condition that should cause us all to hesitate. We are paying now on our national debt an amount of interest greater than was the entire expense of the Government five years ago. It has been necessary, and will be absolutely necessary, that we should increase the salaries of a great many employees of the Government—practically all of them—on account of the high cost of living. We are trying now to avoid the issuing of another lot of bonds by the Government. We are all fearful that we may be driven to that desperate remedy yet, and we are fearful of what the consequences will be if we are.

There never was a time in the history of our Government when economy in all lines and in all branches was as necessary as it is now. Patriotic people, regardless of their position in life, if they will give the subject careful and honest thought, must reach the conclusion that whatever may be the demand and the clamor upon Congress, Congress will not do its duty unless it cuts appropriations to the bone. The extravagance of war always breeds extravagance in civil life. Incompetency and corruption in public affairs always have their effect in business and in private affairs. We are dumfounded when we scratch almost anywhere, any department of the Government, to find the incompetency and the corruption that exist in the expenditure of public funds. This extravagance is almost like a disease, and, to use a common expression, "everybody is doing it." It is true, although the people may be unconscious of it. We here in the Senate and in the House realize it more fully than other people because upon us is directed the fire from all quarters, from all States, from all communities, from all kinds of organizations and men, demanding the expenditure of public money.

I confess, Mr. President, that I feel discouraged when I realize what our duty is and how difficult it is going to be to perform it and to perform it properly. The other day I had seven or eight applications in one mail from my State, from business men's organizations, commercial clubs, good-roads associations, communities that wanted public buildings. As far as I remember now, in that list of seven I think there was, at most, not more than one proposition involved in it that under ordinary circumstances I would not have been in favor of. I happened to know something about it. There was none of them, however, that could not be postponed. I answered each one of them. I declined in each case to support the proposition, giving as my reason the substance of what I am saying now.

We are driven to search everything for the purpose of getting something to tax to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government. We are going to be crowded further, and the time will come, although it may be when we are gone—this very fever may engulf all of us and put us out of public life—when the people have been paying these exorbitant taxes for a while, that all patriotic people will realize that the public official who stands and turns his face against this extravagance and this public expenditure of money even for good things will be the real patriot.

The bill, if enacted into law, is going to cost a great deal of money. It seeks to do a worthy thing. In my judgment we ought not to consider it now. It can wait. I know it has waited. A great many other things have waited that will still have to wait longer, because it is going to be a physical impossibility to have all of the good things that we would all like to see done under ordinary conditions. Under present conditions it is impossible; it can not be done.

The people who would benefit by the legislation must bear their share of the burden, although it may be hard. It is one of the various items of expenditures in themselves small as compared with the size of our country. It is a trifle; all say that it does not amount to much; but, as Macaulay said, "Trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle." Our Government in the main, as far as its expenditures are concerned, is made up of trifles. We must begin with the trifles to cut down. We must cut everywhere. I know that we have passed bills which, in my judgment, were extravagant and against which I voted but which I would be in favor of under ordinary circumstances. However, it seems to me that we ought to form a resolution that no public money shall now be used for anything that is not absolutely necessary to keep the Government going or to preserve its honor.

We are going to be called upon to pay in various ways large sums of money to the returning soldiers. As between giving a pension to a soldier and to a civil employee, while I might want to give each one of them a pension, if I have not money enough to pension them both I will select the soldier, however worthy the case of the civil employee may be. To a great extent the employment of the civil employees has been voluntary; the persons were selected from various applicants, and those who did not get an appointment envied the ones who did. I know that is poor consolation, Mr. President, but it is something. The one who did not get the appointment stands no show to be retired to private life, but he does have to help to pay the taxes. We have reached the point now where practically everybody, rich and poor, is taxed almost to distraction. Unless we commence to halt on the little things as well as on the big things—it is more important, I admit, to halt on the big ones—the little things will be used as precedents to get money for bigger things. So it seems to me there is only one way, and that is to stop at the beginning, as nearly as we can.

The surprising thing to me is that the demands for large expenditures of public funds come from leading business men in the community. It is not a popular thing to oppose an appropriation. It used to be considered sometimes that almost the only ability required of a candidate for Congress was success in securing large appropriations of the public funds. Some sentiment of that kind yet exists, and men who are honest in asking for some particular appropriation are going to be peeved if they do not get it. They will, perhaps, be influential; they will be strong politically, socially, and financially. The civil-service employees represent an army of people, and all of those people, Mr. President, are patriots. I am not questioning the honesty of any of those who are making these demands; in the main these things are asked by honest men; but if they are honest and fair and Congress says to them, "We can not even get the money to carry all these projects forward"—and they know it can not be done if they will give it a moment's thought—they are going to say in their own hearts that Congress is right. But right or wrong in their estimation, Mr. President, it is our duty, it seems to me, to put on the soft pedal, to stop it, and to stop it now.

This bill, it is true, if we wanted to take one particular course, might operate for several years without costing any money; but it can not do that unless we borrow the money to make the payments. It is just as bad business to borrow money to provide for employees a retirement fund as it is to borrow money to pay any other expense of Government. The people of the country, when they once understand, will not excuse Congress, if, in order to meet the expenses of the Government, and those expenses are in any way extravagant, money is borrowed in order to do so. When we borrow money to pay the running expenses of the Government, eventually we must not only pay back the money which we borrow, but we must pay interest on it; and we are back to the circle increasing the cost of living and increasing taxation upon everybody.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that, regardless of what the consequences may be, the Congress of the United States can not perform its duty properly unless it cuts down appropriations. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who preceded me, referred to another bill, an Army bill, that provides for universal military training. That bill would cost more money than would this bill; but, regardless of what any individual Senator's opinion may be on the abstract proposition of universal military training, it seems to me he ought to turn his back to it now. Under present financial conditions it is one of the big things that we ought not to do. We should be inconsistent, it seems to me, if we refuse to pass the bill for the retirement of the Government employees and then pass a universal military training bill. It is another place where we ought to put on the soft pedal; it is another place where we ought to stop. The man who is in favor of universal military training, and who conscientiously believes in it, ought to join now in calling a halt, for no man wants to put the Government of the United States in a position where it will approach bankruptcy. That bill alone would not do it; this bill alone would not do it; but that bill and this bill and a hundred other bills like them would do it.

It is no answer for Senators favoring one of these bills to say, "This particular bill will not hurt; we can get along with this." The very fact that we pass one such bill is going to be used as an argument to pass every other one. We shall not be faced with many of these demands if we start out with the proposition that there is going to be no show in this Congress for anything of that kind.

I am not going to argue now on the general proposition, under ordinary conditions, of universal military training; I shall have to be convinced before I favor it under any circumstances; but, Mr. President, believing as I do about the general financial condition of our country, and, indeed, of the world at large, if I favored it, I should feel that I was not doing my patriotic duty should I support the proposition now. I presume I should feel the same way next year.

We are going to be several years in getting on our feet, in a financial sense. All kinds of expenses in every department of Government ought to be cut down as much as possible, and wherever an opportunity serves, wherever under any fair construction we can get along without an expenditure, we ought to eliminate it entirely.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not a fact that the Government of the United States is nothing more nor less than an aggregation of individuals?

Mr. NORRIS. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. What would any sane man do, taking his income into consideration, if he were running behind at the same rate as the Government of the United States is doing to-day? In my opinion there is only one thing he would do. He would call a halt, and wherever an expense in his household could be eliminated he would eliminate it. We are but the guardians of the people, and we are responsible for the appropriation of their money. Is it not the duty of every Senator and of every Representative to say that there shall not be one cent of money appropriated that is not absolutely necessary?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, and that is what I have been trying to say; but the Senator from Utah realizes, as does every other Senator, that what he suggests is a very difficult thing to do and that we shall fail in doing it completely; there is not any question about that. Even if we start out with the same resolution we shall not always agree, and a great many things will slip by. However, we ought to approach the ideal just as nearly as we can; I am particularly anxious to convince the Senate that there is only one way to do so, and that is to stop every expenditure that can be stopped if there be any possible way of getting along without it.

If it were left to me to provide for the levying of taxes, it seems to me that, without any particular hardship, I could draft a law that would bring in enough taxes to pay even the enormous expenses that are being incurred; but, Mr. President, I realize that I am not going to have my way. If I had my way, I would enact a law at once that would provide for a progressive inheritance tax, leaving a considerable portion of an inheritance, $50,000 or $75,000 or something of that kind, entirely exempt from any taxation, but after that advancing the rate rapidly until I took as high as 75 per cent of the largest inheritances. Such a law would bring an enormous amount of money into the Treasury. I presume a great many Senators would say that it was almost revolutionary, and yet, in my judgment, such a tax is the easiest and the most just tax that can be levied. I know from past experience that I can not secure the enactment of such a law; I am not going to be able to do so; the Government is not going to be able to get the money that easily; and so I am particularly interested in seeing that the expenditures are cut down so that what money we do have will be sufficient to meet the demands upon us and may be raised without any more hardship than is possible. We are going to find that practically impossible, Mr. President; we are going to be compelled to levy taxes that none of us like, that under ordinary conditions we would not support and would not vote for, just because we must have the money, and to get the money we have got to go where the money is; people have got to sacrifice, and when the paying time comes we are going to hear the other song.

We ought to be able to say to the people, "We are not doing what you want us to do now in the expenditure of money, but you are going to get the benefit of it when it comes to paying your taxes." They will see the point. The American people are fair when they understand a question, and they do not want anything but what is fair and what is honest; and, after all, down in their hearts, they expect Congress to cut down the appropriations to the very bone. They expect that, Mr. President, more than they have ever demanded it in the history of the country; and while a large portion of our people will be disappointed if that program is carried out, because they will not get what they can demonstrate is just, the fact is, unless we run the risk of bankrupting our Government, we can not provide for everything, even when the demand is just and fair.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I had not expected to say anything on this bill, and I am not now going to discuss its provisions, but the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska have caused me to review again the general reasons I have for favoring this kind of legislation. I am very certain that I am not looking at it at this time from the standpoint solely of the benefit to the employees. Indeed, if that were the only or chief reason for its passage at this time I could agree with the Senator that duty to the country would compel my opposition. I have favored it, however, because I thought it was a good financial thing for the Government to do, and if a policy is good for the Government financially, measured by results to the Treasury, it seems to me that it would be poor economy to withhold spending the money necessary to adopt it.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is almost constantly besieged by employees demanding increased salaries. That is true, I presume, of many other committees. Such demands in many cases are most appealing, for they are based upon real present needs; but their salaries and wages have been increased within the year, and I have felt that other employees could do as I do—sacrifice and economize for our common Government. I have said to the various employees who have asked me for an increase of pay at this time that it could not be granted them, not even though I know the Post Office Department is losing men and women from its service because private employment can pay them much more than can the Government, and be it said to their credit that the representatives of these employees have almost without exception recognized the condition of the Treasury and will await the time when relief can be granted them. I do not think that the Government will ever be in a position where it can compete with private or corporate interests which are engaged in business for big profit; but I have urged that there were certain compensating attractions attached to employment in the Government service which, I hoped, would supply it with sufficient help under ordinary conditions.

I have urged the fact that retirement for faithful employees was inevitable and that I was in favor of enacting into law a bill to that effect. Every man and woman worth while contemplates his future, and present sacrifice is justified if it promises a desirable future. I believe that a proper retirement law would retain people in the Government service at a lower wage in emergency, such as the one we are now passing through.

than could be done without such a law. So I think it would be economy on the part of the Government to pass a retirement bill at this time, if by so doing we conserve the money in the Treasury of the United States, and thus, possibly, make it unnecessary to increase taxation for larger salaries.

The fact that we fail to appropriate a certain sum of money to-day, which, if appropriated, must be met by taxation, does not mean that it is done in the interest of economy. It may be a paper economy; it may show on the record that we have withheld appropriating money and thus saved it; but, I repeat, if it can be shown, as I think it can be frequently, that the very withholding of it has been an extravagance, because it has induced the spending of more money than otherwise would have been expended, then I think we ought to act, and without hesitation, although I agree very largely with what the Senator from Nebraska has said, and no one feels the situation more, I think, than I do as chairman of a committee which is besieged on every side by demands for appropriations, all supported, more or less, by very strong logic and reasoning.

In looking at these demands for appropriations, however, I have tried to bear in mind what I have said: Is it economy for the Government to appropriate the money?

Take a man who is pressed financially in his private business; that is, he is very much in debt. He is engaged in a business that requires money, and he says, "I am so deeply in debt that I will not borrow any more money, even though I have the opportunity to make money by borrowing it." Sometimes that is the shortest and quickest road to ruin—simply to refrain from borrowing money and investing it in a line of business that will bring returns and place the borrower upon his feet again. This is an imperfect illustration but it may make my point clear. Of course, the business question now is, Will the appropriation truly conserve the Treasury or deplete it without compensating return?

I had not expected to say even this much, but I have been greatly disturbed over the question of our finances, and in the presence of such tremendous demands for appropriations I have been trying to settle the matter, so far as I am concerned, not solely nor very largely by the benefits which may come to individuals or to special communities or concerns, but by what will be the result upon the general welfare of the country, which must be conserved and promoted in hard times and in the midst of stress of circumstances just the same as when we are prosperous and our taxes are low. Indeed, it will be our investments as well as our withholdings that may make for real economy. Our Government must be conducted properly. In this financial crisis good business methods should be employed. I am advocating retirement because I believe it is such a method. At a time when people who have grown old and are now useless, or practically so, in the service, and who, Senators admit, can not be discharged, is it not wise to place them on the retired list at a comparatively nominal price and fill their places by people who render a return for what they receive? Is it not wise to offer this future reward rather than increase the present pay roll? It is my belief that this bill will if enacted create a balance in favor of the Treasury.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I shall not take the time at this late hour to reply at length to the arguments on the other side, and especially the argument of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I shall, however, at the first opportunity after to-day attempt, at least, to reply to his argument, especially that part of it relating to the cost to the Government of the system provided for by the pending bill.

I desire, however, to refer just briefly to the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. He has not assailed the principles of the bill, but his argument against the bill is based on the ground that it will entail upon the Government a burden which, considering the times and the burdens aside from anything like this, the taxpayers of the country will have to bear.

Mr. President, if I thought this bill meant an appropriation of millions of dollars now by the Government, I do not think I would be found here supporting it. I do not think it means that; but, on the other hand, I think it means economy and a saving to the Government from the very outset.

In proof of that I want to call attention briefly to the statement made by the head of the Bureau of Efficiency in his report of 1912. It is from the book entitled "Retirement of Superannuated Civil-Service Employees." Beginning on page 181, he says as follows:

> As noted on page 13, an effort was made a few years ago by the Civil Service Commission and the National Civil Service Reform League to determine what loss the Government was then sustaining through superannuation. Schedules were prepared and sent out to the various departments, and from the returns made on these schedules it was found that the loss in the District of Columbia amounted to approximately $400,000 a year. Assuming that employees at various ages possessed the same degree of efficiency in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, it was found, by applying the percentages obtained for the District to the employees elsewhere, that the Government was sustaining an annual loss in the District and elsewhere of $1,200,000. This estimate was made in 1906, when the service was considerably smaller than it is now, in 1911, and, of course, much smaller than it will be in future years. It is obvious that unless a retirement system is adopted the actual number of superannuated employees in the service must increase with the growth of the service. It is obvious also that unless the growth of the service continues at no less rate hereafter than it has in the past, the proportion of superannuated to active employees must also increase. That the service is likely to continue to grow may be assumed without argument, but that it will continue to grow at the rapid rate of the past 30 years is debatable.

I think we will now agree that it has continued to grow at a more rapid rate than was anticipated by the author of this statement.

> The present superannuated employees represent the residue of the active service of 30 or 40 years ago. The superannuated employees 30 or 40 years hence will represent the residue of the present active service. Thirty or forty years ago the service was composed of not more than 30,000 employees. To-day the classified service is composed of about 200,000 individuals.

What is it now? Two hundred thousand individuals in 1911, when this was written; 300,000 is the estimate to-day; 300,000 is the number upon which we make our estimates as to the cost to the Government now of this system.

> If the residue of 30,000 employees of 30 or 40 years ago is now costing the Government $1,200,000 annually, then the cost of superannuation 30 years hence may fairly be estimated to be as 30,000 is to 200,000, or nearly seven times as great as at present. This estimate is, of course, based on the assumption that the rate of separation from the service by resignation and death will continue the same, which would seem to be a fair assumption, and perhaps more than fair, since commercial opportunities outside of the service are likely to be no greater than they have been in the past, and therefore to attract away no greater proportion of the service, and the rate of mortality at the ages up to about 70 years is known to be steadily decreasing. On this basis the cost of superannuation 30 or 40 years hence would be approximately $8,000,000 annually, or more than twice the maximum amount required to be appropriated in any one year for back services under the Perkins bill.

That was a bill, I think, pending in the Senate at that time. So the Senator can see from this statement what superannuation costs the Government each and every year, or, if not in figures exactly, the tremendous amount that it costs the Government each and every year without a retirement system; and this is corroborated by what is stated by Mr. Beach in his letter to Dr. Mosher, of the Reclassification Commission. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Nebraska was present the other day when I made the statement as to Mr. Beach's present position, which is that of statistical accountant of the Pension Bureau. He is detailed by the Secretary of the Interior to aid in the work of the Reclassification Commission. He calls attention to conditions in the District of Columbia, and says:

> Taking the lowest average as a basis for calculation, and assuming that all who are eligible will retire at once, we find that the expenditure on account of annuities during the first year would equal $1,830,000.

That is, $610, which is the average annuity, multiplied by 3,000, the number of those in the employ of the Government in the District of Columbia who will retire, making a total of $1,830,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. A moment ago the Senator read from an article written by Dr. Brown in 1911 or 1912.

Mr. STERLING. The report is dated 1912, but the figures in the body of the article refer to 1911.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well. Of course, he was discussing, in a general way, the subject of superannuation.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. He did not, of course, have in mind the pending bill.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly not.

Mr. POMERENE. And the pending bill, of course, seeks to retire the employees at the ages of 60, 62, and 65. He was at that time, I think—I am not entirely clear about this—discussing the retirement of employees at the age of 70, was he not?

Mr. STERLING. He may have had that in mind, and perhaps it is a fair inference that he had that in mind from the concluding statement in the matter that I read, in which he says:

> This estimate is, of course, based on the assumption that the rate of separation from the service by resignation and death will continue the same, which would seem to be a fair assumption, and perhaps more than fair, since commercial opportunities outside of the service are likely to be no greater than they have been in the past, and, therefore, to attract away no greater proportion of the service, and the rate of mortality at the ages up to about 70 years is known to be steadily decreasing.

I think it is a fair inference that he referred to 70 as the retirement age.

Mr. POMERENE. I think so; and I do not think there are very many of us who would care to be classed among superannuates when we get to be 60 years old. I would not have very long to serve if that were the case.

Mr. STERLING. No; and there are not many, now, if the Senator will simply be fair in regard to that proposition——

Mr. POMERENE. I want to be.

Mr. STERLING. In the first place, it is a very limited number, as compared with the whole service, that are subject to retirement at 60 years of age, and even then they are not subject to retirement, if they show efficiency, for four years after they are 60 years of age.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, I know that is true; there are such provisions.

Mr. STERLING. Let us have all of the facts before the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to have them, too; but when I think of retiring them below 70 years of age, at 62 and 65, and so forth, I remember that if that were the test probably two-thirds of the members of the Supreme Court would be regarded as superannuates, and I would not want to say how many Senators would have to be retired.

Mr. NORRIS. There would not be a quorum left, probably.

Mr. POMERENE. No; there would not be a quorum left, I am quite sure.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves those figures and goes to something else, I want to ask him about what he read from Mr. Brown, and I want to compare Mr. Brown's conclusions and Mr. Beach's conclusions with the present bill.

If I understood the Senator correctly, he deduces from what Mr. Brown said in the 1912 report that the loss by superannuation now would be somewhere in the neighborhood of $8,000,000 a year.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; 30 or 40 years from the date of this report. It was $1,200,000 in 1906, when the estimate was first made.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator himself drew the conclusion that I have stated.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I read the language here.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, let me ask the Senator about Mr. Beach's figures. He takes his figures from this bill, and therefore I suppose he can tell just exactly, based on the exact figures, the number of those that would be retired under this bill if it were passed now. Is not that correct?

Mr. STERLING. No; he simply refers to the probable retirements in the District of Columbia, and confines his figures to that.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give the number of employees that would be retired if this bill were enacted now?

Mr. STERLING. There probably would be about 3,000 retired in the District of Columbia. The estimate varies all the way from 6,500 up to 9,000. Mr. McCoy thinks there may be, probably, a retirement of 9,000. The estimate he makes is 6,500.

Mr. NORRIS. The loss now could not exceed the salary that is paid to those who would be retired; and, in fact, I do not see how it could be that much, because it is conceded that they do perform some work.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. So, assuming that those who would be retired are 50 per cent efficient now—it seems to me that is the figure that was given the other day, though I may be wrong about that, but, of course, it is only an assumption—assuming that they are 50 per cent efficient now, we can tell just exactly what the loss would be by subtracting that from their salaries.

Mr. STERLING. I referred to that the other day, and if the Senator will permit me, at another time I will refer to the same proposition again. But the Senator from Nebraska made his argument on the ground of economy. I am calling attention now to what the saving to the Government will be right here in the District of Columbia under the estimate of Mr. Beach.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand; but I do not see how the saving could exceed 50 per cent. It could not, because to get what the actual saving would be next year you would have to take the employees who would be retired under the bill and the salary which they draw and deduct that from what they would get——

Mr. STERLING. In annuities.

Mr. NORRIS. In annuities, and also what it would cost to do the work which they are now doing, whatever it may be. The balance would be the loss to the Government.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Beach gives the figures in regard to that. Of course the number of replacements made is more or less speculative. They could not determine it exactly, but I think Mr. Beach's figures are very conservative in that regard.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota if it is not true that a great many people are now being carried on the rolls and paid a salary whose places would not necessarily have to be filled by new employees?

Mr. STERLING. That was the testimony before the committee by different heads of departments. Mr. Beach in this estimate thinks that only 25 per cent of those who will be retired here in the District will have to be replaced.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then the entire saving to the Government in such cases would be what the Government pays out in annuities upon retirement deducted from the salary those men are now paid. That would be a saving if no one takes their place.

Mr. NORRIS. If they did not do any work.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If they did not do any work, or if their work is done by some one else now in the service.

Mr. NORRIS. Without costing anything additional. That is true.

Mr. STERLING. On this basis, the aggregate salary of 3,000 employees 65 years of age and over would amount to $3,780,000. That is on a basis of $1,260, which is probably the average salary paid now. Should there be no replacements of retired employees, there would be a clear saving to the Government of $1,950,000 during the first year, which amount represents the difference between the aggregate compensation and the aggregate annuities for 3,000 employees. Then, allowing that the new entrants will receive the same average salary that is paid to retired employees, the expenditure on this account will amount to $945,000, still leaving a net saving to the Government during the first year of $1,462,500.

That is a matter of computation, and I think it is an answer, and a pretty complete answer, to the Senator from Nebraska in regard to the economy that it will be to the Government. It shows that there will be this actual saving to the Government, and it will warrant the enactment of a law providing for a system that will mean that much of a saving.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that to be true, if the Senator will permit an interruption, speaking purely now in a financial sense, the Government would still be out the difference between what the Senator calls the savings and the amount of money which it would cost to carry on this system.

Mr. STERLING. What would that be?

Mr. NORRIS. It would be something over $4,000,000, as I remember the figures now. I do not have them before me. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] gave this afternoon what it would cost the first year.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me, if there is a saving of $1,462,000 in the District of Columbia, what will it be the country over? If you take the country over and all the civil-service employees, there will be a saving that will more than pay the expense to the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is now 5 o'clock, and I should like to have a brief executive session. Will not the Senator from South Dakota be willing to suspend now?

Mr. STERLING. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that is satisfactory, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 12, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of all that we hold sacred, we thank Thee that the authorities have been moved to place on exhibition, the original documents—The Declaration of Independence, The Constitution of the United States of America, The Emancipation Proclamation and other precious instruments—for the benefit of the public, especially our school-teachers and their pupils; since to look upon them and read anew of them will arouse greater reverence for the men who framed them, a greater appreciation of American institutions and inspire larger, purer, nobler patriotism in the hearts of our people. In the name of the Master of truth, righteousness and holy patriotism. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, on page 18 of the conference report on the oil-leasing bill is the following reference to an amendment:

On page 55, line 9, after the word "thereon," insert the word "only."

Then follows this explanation:

This word was omitted by a mistake from the engrossed copy of the House bill.

In so far as this statement may be considered a reflection upon the engrossing clerk, it is an error on my part. The word was not omitted from the engrossed copy of the bill because of any mistake on the part of the engrossing clerk. The mistake occurred either in reporting the bill to the House or in the printing of the bill. I make this explanation to save the clerk from any criticism.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GARNER. Before the gentleman from Iowa moves to go into the Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, will he yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman contemplate getting a rule for the purpose of inserting in the bill certain amendments that have been stricken out on points of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have made such a request of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman prepared his rule and introduced it for the purpose of having it reported?

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding is that it is not necessary to do that, but that the committee will report the rule.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12272, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: On page 46, after line 13, insert:

"For experiments and investigations of range conditions within the national forests or elsewhere on the public range, and of methods for improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and other regulations, $35,000."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, this item has been carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill since 1907, and under it a great deal of inspection work has been undertaken and completed, as is evidenced by certain reports which have been made each year. One of these reports has reference to the increased cattle production on the southwestern ranges. Another report is on range preservation and its relation to erosion control of western grazing lands; another is on eradicating the tall larkspur, a poisonous weed, on cattle ranges in the national forests; another is on the soap weed as an emergency feed for cattle on the southwestern ranges, the introduction of a new feed for cattle; another is on the production of goats on the far western ranges; another is on the range management of the national forests.

These reports have been widely circulated among those who are grazing their stock on the national forests.

I understand that when this bill was under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture officials from the department were called before the committee, who urged the continuation of the appropriation.

In the Book of Estimates $25,000 additional was recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, but because of the desire to keep down appropriations those in charge of the Forest Service agreed that if they could have the present appropriation of $35,000 continued they would be satisfied.

Now, under the investigations conducted under this appropriation during the last 10 years the number of cattle on forest reserves has been increased by 1,000,000 head, and the revenues to the department, because of this increased number of cattle that have been taken care of, have been increased about $750,000 annually.

These investigations have covered only a few of the public-land States, and it is desired to continue these investigations in other States where there are national forests. It is of the greatest importance that this appropriation should be continued, because of the splendid work that has been accomplished by these experts, and the benefits which have accrued to the cattle industry as a result of their work.

I am also advised that the subcommittee having this matter in charge recommended the continuation of this appropriation, and that it was voted out in the full committee, a number of Members voting who had not heard the arguments advanced by the forest officials as to the reasons this work should be continued. I trust, therefore, that my amendment to restore the item will prevail.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. So far as I am concerned, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his reservation of the point of order. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] desire to discuss this amendment?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the proposed amendment is evidently to aid in the handling of the stock. This proposition was discussed before the committee during the hearings on the bill. On pages 110–111 of the hearings on the Forest Service, Mr. Jardine, in charge of the work, testified as follows:

Mr. JARDINE. This item covers the handling of cattle, handling of sheep, natural revegetation, artificial reseeding, water development, effect of grazing upon timber growth and watersheds, eradication of poisonous plants, and other problems incident to the regulation of grazing. In the handling of sheep, I personally was assigned to construct an animal-proof fence 100 miles from the railroad in some of the roughest country in America, where the methods of handling sheep were distinctive to the range. I was assigned to investigate the possibility of applying a paddock or pasture system of management similar to what is applied in Australia. I lived with those sheep from 4 o'clock in the morning until night for four summers, studying their natural habits when allowed their freedom under fence and what would be the result of interfering with them by herders and of not interfering with them in the way of range-carrying capacity, growth of sheep, losses of sheep, and injury to the range.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. How did you interfere?

Mr. JARDINE. The custom was to have 1,600 to 2,500 head of sheep with one herder and two to six dogs. They were constantly rounding them up in a jam and spreading them out. This running and massing would trample out a great deal of the vegetation; sometimes 50 per cent of the vegetation was wasted in this way. The sheep were driven each day to and from a central bedding ground; they were driven 4 or 5 miles from the bedding ground to feed and back to camp. The result was just the same as it is when there are too many cattle collected together at one watering place; they kill the vegetation from the watering place out. In some instances the range was denuded for one-quarter to one-half mile around the bedding ground.

Mr. TINCHER. You mean that they kill out the grass?

Mr. JARDINE. They not only kill out the grass but the trees, the small trees, and bring on erosion, which fills up the reservoirs below.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your remedy?

Mr. JARDINE. The remedy was this: That, instead of bedding those sheep at one place for 10 or 15 days at a time, we said that it was practicable to move them about over the range; that the sheep can be bedded wherever night overtakes them; and, instead of close-herding the sheep, the herders can keep out around them so that the sheep graze in open formation and minimize waste of forage by trampling. The herder can put four days' provisions on a burro and go out with the sheep. The herder gets up in the morning, makes himself a cup of coffee, and starts out with the sheep. About 9 o'clock they stop for rest. He will have a keg of water and some food on the burro. He will unpack the burro and fix his breakfast, and does his day's work. Probably about 3 o'clock the sheep start feeding again and graze until dark.

The CHAIRMAN. How about watering the sheep?

Mr. JARDINE. We have records of sheep going from the time they were lambs until they were marketed in Omaha without any water except the moisture in the vegetation—the dew, fog, and rains—with no places to drink from. It is not necessary to drive the sheep up and down steep hills every day to water, but they can work out and around and come naturally to water—that is, circle around from the water and back.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In some cases they raise cattle in that way, and the cattle grow to maturity and make fine beef without ever having had a drink of water.

Mr. JARDINE. The amount of drinking water necessary depends very largely upon the character of vegetation, the altitude, the temperature, and the way the sheep are handled.

The CHAIRMAN. Do the sheep do so well without water as they do with it?

Mr. JARDINE. Not unless the vegetation is very succulent and the atmosphere is cool, or there is a good deal of fog or rain.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am reading from the hearings on the Forest Service. It would seem that the gentleman should not now ask $35,000 more for the work indicated by Mr. Jardine, after having opposed an increase of the fees for grazing, which are only 72 cents a head for cattle. He is unwilling to increase these fees, yet he is willing to have us turn over the grazing, timber, and water privileges as well and take nearly $5,000,000 out of the Treasury in addition to the total receipts. It would seem that he can not now consistently ask us to give $35,000 more for this very work.

I insert in the RECORD tables submitted by the department:

Expenditures of the Forest Service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Regular expenditures from annual appropriation:
Field expenses connected with the national forests	$4,801,794.67
General expenses connected with the Washington office	472,403.22

STATEMENT OF MR. A. F. POTTER, ASSOCIATE FORESTER, FOREST SERVICE, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. Chairman, the average rate for cattle grazing this year is $1.20 a head for the entire year. Where the grazing is for only a few months the rate is one-tenth of the annual rate per month. The average period during which cattle have been on the forests this year is six months, so that the average amount collected is 72 cents per head.

The sheep rate is 25 per cent of the cattle rate. The average period the sheep have been on is about four months, so that the average fee collected for sheep grazing is about 12 cents per head.

We charge 25 per cent more for horses than for cattle, and the time that they are on the forest is about the same as for cattle, so that the average rate collected for horses would be about 90 cents per head.

The number of swine is very small.

What is the situation? In the first place, many of the national forest reserves furnish the best pasture in the country. Cattle shipped from them often top the market. A 2-year-old steer gains from three to four hundred pounds a season on good pasture. Recently high-grade range cattle have been selling for from twelve to twenty dollars a hundred pounds, bringing, in many instances, $72 a head, which shows a ratio of 1 to 100 when comparing the fees paid for the grazing with the price the cattle bring. As stated by the gentleman from Kansas, the fee paid for grazing in other sections of the country is $14 per head. Gentlemen, the fee paid for the grazing on the forest reserves is about equal to the cost of salting cattle in other sections of the country. Even with this situation, after turning over 155,000,000 acres of forest reserves with grazing, timber, and water-power privileges, and $4,927,196 for the forests in addition to all receipts from the forest, you now ask us to add another $35,000 for this work.

If my amendment increasing the grazing fees 300 per cent had been inserted in the bill the grazing fee for cattle would have been increased from 72 cents to $2.16 per head. This would increase the receipts from grazing from $2,600,000 to $7,800,000, and if the amendment requiring a fee for grazing on the unappropriated, unreserved public lands had been agreed to there could be added to that a fee for the 3,420,000 cattle the public domain is capable of grazing, or $7,387,200, a total of $15,187,200, an increase of approximately $12,587,200, which would, according to the law, be apportioned 45 per cent, or $5,664,240, for schools, roads, trails, and so forth, and 55 per cent, or $6,922,960, into the Federal Treasury. Now, when another bond issue is staring us in the face and Government bonds are selling below 90 cents on the dollar, the $6,922,960 is indeed needed to replenish the Federal Treasury. Instead of giving the $5,664,240 to those holding permits, as, for instance, the 313 averaging over 6,666 head each, it might be well to pay it to the States for schools, roads, trails, and so forth, and relieve the taxpayers of that burden.

The Government has been very generous with the people out in that country.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This amendment has no reference whatever to the fees for grazing cattle on the public domain. We are not discussing that subject. This is to increase the number of cattle which can be taken care of on the reserves.

Mr. HAUGEN. The amendment deals with the matter of handling stock. It is largely a herding proposition. Under it the department would employ people at high salaries to herd cattle and sheep.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I prefer to finish my statement first. The Government has been very generous in the past. When the time comes when we can get enough revenue from the national forests from the grazing, timber, and water privileges combined to make the service self-supporting, consideration can be given to the proposed appropriation, but until that time and under the present conditions it should be deferred.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Let me say to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the chairman of the committee, that when Mr. Gifford Pinchot came around through the Western States some 15 years ago advocating the establishment of national forest reserves, he assured us that they would soon be self-supporting and at very small, if any, expense to the stockmen; all they needed was a few dollars to give them a start. As I recollect, Congress appropriated about $400,000 to begin with. The next year they wanted a million, as I recollect it, and a year after that they wanted some two millions, and the amount has been climbing up nearly every year since until I understand from your statement it is now costing over $9,000,000 a year to conduct the Forest Service. It will probably keep going on up as long as you permit them to keep on building up more bureaus and departments here and adding thousands more of employees with increasing salaries. You expect our people, the farmers and stockmen of the West, to foot the bills. I am not attacking the forest reserves, but we did not ask for them. We certainly never asked your committee or Congress to build up this great forest-reserve empire of nearly 200,000,000 acres to provide salaries and jobs for an army of people. Now, you say the Government is losing $4,000,000 a year on these forest reserves, and yet you want to, and are now trying to, put 300,000,000 acres more of the public domain, all the public lands, into the forest reserves, which as a matter of fact if you did would cost the Government at that rate about $25,000,000 a year to administer. If your amendment should carry, all of the public domain would be under the Department of Agriculture with the increased cost. There certainly would be no economy in that, and moreover it would practically forever stop all homestead settlements and every other kind of settlement and development of the public domain.

Last year you appropriated $35,000 for inspecting the grasses and grazing conditions on the forest reserves. There are many poisonous weeds, loco, and other conditions that kill cattle and sheep. The Forest Service sent out experts to test these matters and experiment and provide ways of eradicating those poisonous weeds and grasses which kill the cattle and sheep. I understand they did considerable good. It is a scientific matter. They asked you to raise it this year from $35,000 to $60,000, but you cut it all out. I think that is one expenditure you ought to allow to its amount that it was last year and cut out a lot of others.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman objects to salaries; this item carries $20,000 for salaries.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; that is the trouble with it. Nearly all this $9,000,000 expenditure is in salaries. Instead of asking for more revenue, to make up for this $4,000,000 deficit, why do not you begin at this end of the line by economizing here in Washington instead of trying to put it onto the stockmen out there who are grazing their stock on the forest reserves? Why do not you cut out a thousand or two clerks here in Washington and reduce expenses? Then you can consistently talk about saving something out there.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will agree to the amendment offered yesterday, that would add $15,000,000 to the receipts.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; you would add $15,000,000 more burdens on the ranchmen, the farmers, and stockmen of the West who use the forest reserves, and 90 per cent of all that money would be consumed in salaries of useless Federal employees. Never on earth will any western man agree to anything of that kind. Let me say to you and to the House that it seems very strange that none of us Members who represent these forest reserves can ever get on your committee. There seems to be somehow an insidious influence from somewhere that prevents this House from putting a western man on the Committee on Agriculture. On your entire committee of 21 Members you have only one man that comes from any of the forest-reserve States. I do not call Arkansas a forest-reserve or public-land State.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. RIDDICK.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; Mr. RIDDICK is the only one; and I understand he is your publicity man on your Republican national campaign committee, and that he is down at your headquarters attending to business of that kind. At least he is not on the floor of the House helping to protect the interests of his State. I know his constituents are not in favor of having the grazing fees on the forest reserves raised 300 per cent or of having all the public land in Montana put into a forest reserve.

I do not mean to cast any reflection upon Mr. RIDDICK, but I simply call attention to the fact, since you mention him by name, that he is the only Representative from the western public land forest reserve States on the Agricultural Committee. I tried for a year or more, when I first came to Congress, to get on the Agricultural Committee, but our good friend Uncle JOE, who was at that time the czar of the House, would not let me get on it. [Laughter.] As a matter of fact, it has always seemed as though you would not permit a man who comes from a public-land State and personally knows something about the practical use of the forest reserves to get on that committee.

A committee composed as your Agricultural Committee is can not possibly legislate fairly or intelligently for the 165,000,000 acres of forest reserves. The members have no constituents or interests or personal knowledge of the actual use or changing conditions on these reserves or the welfare of the people using them. You must and do get practically all of your information not only second hand but from these Government employees here in Washington. You never see or hear from the hundreds of small ranchmen or farmers. You may hear from the big stockmen, but I doubt if you ever hear from the little fellow who runs a few cattle on the reserve.

Yet you nonresidents have the assurance to legislate here for all of our Western States and 165,000,000 acres of forest reserves that you never saw, and tell us western Members how we ought to run them and how much our constituents ought to pay for grazing cattle and sheep on them. Why do you not consult the people who have built up that country and who are paying for all these Federal jobs?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Referring to Mr. RIDDICK, does the gentleman know that he got the Agriculture Committee to unanimously indorse a $2,000,000 loan to the West?

Mr TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I never heard of that, and if that amount of money was ever allowed to go West I think I would have heard of it.

Mr. FESS. Evidently not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If he did he must have got it from the Republican steering committee by virtue of his publicity work, but he had better be here helping us to protect our States against a $15,000,000 annual tax for grazing purposes.

Mr. FESS. He got it from the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. As a matter of fact, I have no objection to the present management of the forest reserves in Colorado. I am not complaining about them at all. And I would like if possible to have some systematic regulation of the grazing upon the public lands outside of the forest reserves, but I do object to this Agricultural Committee that does not know anything personally about our forest reserve conditions out there all the time trying to reach out and enlarge their jurisdiction. They would like to not only control our grazing and timber but also our water rights, our irrigation, and water power, and now they are making a desperate attempt to just arbitrarily hold us up for an increase of 300 per cent in our grazing fees without even giving a living soul in the West any notice or chance to be heard or to protest, which would not only be an outrage but would almost bankrupt many of them; but not satisfied with that, this committee is now trying at one fell swoop to make a wholesale grab of all the rest of the 300,000,000 acres of the public domain and put it into the forest reserves, and put a tax on us western people, as the chairman says, of $15,000,000 a year for eating the grass off of it. Let me tell you what the effect of that avaricious and infamous proposition would be.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I can not. I only have a minute. We have a law now authorizing homestead entries within the forest reserves. But the way the Forest Service and the Department of Agriculture allow the operation of that law makes it just about as easy for a settler to get a homestead within a forest reserve as it would be for a camel to get through the eye of a needle. Those forest reserves are hermetically sealed up as crown lands for a Federal pasture for all time, and if you, now or ever, put all of the rest of our other 300,000,000 acres of the open public domain into the forest reserves it will be good-by to all homestead settlers for all time to come in the United States. It would simply put an absolute quietus on any further public-land settlements and development of every kind. One-quarter of one section of that public land in cultivation and with a home and family on it is worth more to our State and to our country than a whole township of 23,000 acres in a forest reserve, producing a revenue of one-eighth of 1 cent an acre to the forest-reserve fund. It is because we want settlers, because we want homes, because we want to build up the West that I most emphatically protest against this infamous stab at our western development, which would be accomplished by putting all our public lands into the forest reserves and turning them over to the big cattlemen. I know you do not realize it, but in practical reality you are trying to legislate in the interest of the Beef Trust and committing a damnable outrage against every Western State.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, talk about the Beef Trust——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You are trying to convert the Western States into a Federal cow pasture and force the ranchmen and stockmen to pay this $9,000,000 revenue to keep up its Forest Service, and increase the fees every year.

Mr. HAUGEN. May I have one minute to explain this Beef Trust proposition?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I say the gentleman does not know it. He has never heard but one side of this matter, but he is trying to legislate in a way that will only benefit the Beef Trust, the very large cattlemen, and provide more jobs for more Government clerks at the expense of the pioneers who have made the West what it is to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan rose.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado assumes——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], a member of the committee, the chairman of the committee having been already recognized.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] says that no representative from these great States of the West has been permitted to serve on the Committee on Agriculture. It occurs to me that the attitude they now show is full justification for the action of those who have influenced the make up of committees in the past, and I express the opinion that until the gentlemen change their spots they ought not to be on the Committee on Agriculture or have anything to do with the forest lands. [Applause.] Before the Forest Service was organized and before these immense areas of immense value were taken over and administered as they are now they were open to homestead entry, and were purchased by anyone who had money to buy them. They were being taken up rapidly and acquired by large private interests. To-day gentlemen of the West resent the present policy because we are trying to save some of our much-needed timber and trying to get at least enough money out of the lands to pay for protecting them. If those laws were repealed and the lands put back subject to purchase and entry, they would very soon be bought in large areas and held for speculative purposes; inside of 48 hours large private interests would own nearly all of the timber of the country.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. We are willing to save the timber. Are you not willing to save the grass? That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. You are willing to save the timber. I wish those who are speaking in that way now had previous to this time shown a disposition to save something out there rather than support a policy the effect of which is to enable those who wish to do so to despoil the public domain.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, just to be good-natured, I want to tell the gentleman that there are forest reserves in Nevada without a single tree in them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, this is not the first time we have heard that story. These forests were set aside, in the last period, somewhat hastily. There had been a successful effort in Congress on the part of Members who wished to break down the Forest Service and to make it impossible for the Government ever to take charge of any further forest areas. They had secured the passage of a law to the effect that after a certain date, fixed in the law, no further lands should be added to or set aside as forest reservations, except by express act of Congress. President Roosevelt, then in power, took advantage of the time which remained and somewhat hastily issued proclamations describing, in quite general terms, certain large areas and placing them in the forest reserves; there was not time properly and correctly to determine the boundaries. The result was that some areas not entirely suitable for forests were, and to a limited extent still are, included within the forest reserves. Realizing that difficulty the Congress enacted a law, and it is now operating satisfactorily, to have the areas included in the national forests surveyed so that there may be accurate boundaries; and, further, so that lands found to be more suitable for agriculture than for forestry might be eliminated. Every year this bill carries money for those surveys and for examination to determine the different kinds of land, and every year large areas are set aside and opened to homestead entry. Since this new policy was inaugurated of eliminating from the forest lands the lands more suitable for agriculture than for forestry, millions of acres have been settled and thousands of homesteaders have taken up land and are out there now.

Gentlemen resent the regulation of these forests. They wish opportunity for their people to purchase them and hold them in private ownership. They wish to have restored the opportunity timber barons and large stockmen enjoyed, and of which they took full advantage, to despoil the national domain or to enjoy its benefits without cost to themselves. They resent the interference——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Not now. I trust the gentleman will have plenty of time, and that I may have opportunity to reply. These gentlemen resent the interference of the Government with the unrestricted use of grazing lands by their people, and they wish to permit entry into the forests so that timber may be taken as any one may wish to take it, regardless of the value of property so taken or of the effect on the forests.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. They have resented from the first the just demand of the Government that a reasonable sum should be paid for grazing the public lands. And to-day they resist a change of policy when, as clearly shown, the average charge is only 72 cents per head per year, when outside of the national forests, and on land entirely similar, the charges are from $4 to $10 per head per year. Gentlemen yesterday spent the entire day objecting to the very worthy effort on the part of the Committee on Agriculture to change that policy so that the forests might be made to yield a reasonable amount.

Now, we are censured severely and accused of trying to get additional land into the national forests. There has been no such effort, but from time to time for several years—and those who have been here and paid attention to affairs will bear me out—whenever the people in the western country find there is land that is valueless to them and they have no use for it, they come in with a bill to attach it to a national forest and thereby impose upon the Federal Government the duty and expense of taking care of it. Unanimous-consent day has become public-lands day, and the calendar is loaded down almost every week with bills of just that kind, to give some land now owned by the States to the Federal Government. And I venture to say that investigation will show it is some land the States do not want. They wish to escape the responsibility of taking care of it, and they ask to have it put into a national forest, so that the Federal Government must assume the expense of caring for it.

Now, as to the lands we suggest should be put under the care of the Forest Service, there are, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] says, two or three hundred millions of open areas suitable for grazing, now in charge of the Interior Department, but as to none of which does the department exercise any control whatever. It is grazed without charge, and it is being ruined for that very reason. No attention is paid as to when the stock shall be permitted to go on the land; no restriction as to the length of time the land shall be grazed; no limitation of the number of head of stock that shall be grazed. There is absolute disregard of the interests of the Government and of the Federal Treasury, and there is serious and almost irreparable damage to the lands. And, as I said yesterday in interrupting the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], because of that careless use and inexcusable neglect of these open grazing lands many of them have practically been destroyed for grazing or for any purpose. Worse than that, lands denuded of vegetation of all kinds are overflowed by streams, and there has been destruction by erosion.

Streams, diverted from their natural courses, have caused all kinds of destruction. And there are bills pending here to-day, introduced, I understand, by gentlemen from those States where that destruction has taken place, asking for appropriations of millions of dollars from the Federal Treasury for the purpose of constructing reservoirs and dams so as to restrain the waters in an effort to prevent further injury to the land. There would have been no damage in the first place if the grazing of these lands had been properly supervised by the Forest Service.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Now, all that is suggested and all that is involved in the committee amendment is that these open Government lands shall be placed under the care of the Forest Service, so that they may be protected and so that there may be some revenue arising from their use. There is no suggestion that an acre of it be withdrawn from homestead entry or from any other legitimate use. Every matter of control except as to grazing is to remain in the Secretary of the Interior.

It is said that the forest administration is inimical to the interests of settlers out there. No one who looks over the regulations issued by the Forest Service and who knows anything about their enforcement will say they are not in the interest of the actual settler. Actual settlers are permitted to take timber without cost up to a reasonable limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. They get timber in a certain amount without cost; they get grazing for their own animals without cost. They are protected against the encroachment of those who bring large herds of cattle or sheep or other animals to the grazing areas. The constant and consistent effort of the Forest Service is to encourage and protect the settlers. So the cry set up here in behalf of the settlers comes from those who do not know or who make no effort to give the House real information.

I had occasion to say a day or two ago when this bill was under consideration that we did not receive as much help as we should have had from the heads of the bureaus as to where reductions of estimates could be made; but the Chief of the Forest Service did us valuable aid, as he suggested here and there where cuts could safely be made. And the elimination of the item the gentleman from Idaho is talking about was made at the suggestion and with the entire approval of the Chief of the Forest Service.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I wish to say that the Chief Forester talked to me this morning and said absolutely that he had never made such a recommendation and that he must have been misunderstood. He did say that the additional $25,000 which was estimated for might well be dropped without injuring the service. There is nothing in the hearings to show that any person connected with the Forestry Service thinks it is an unimportant item and should not be in the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Nothing the Chief of the Forest Service said that I am talking of now appears in the hearings at all. And I will say to the House that many, if not all, of the amounts in this bill recommended by the committee for the Forest Service were fixed after conference with the Chief of the Forest Service, and I understand the action of the committee in every instance has his approval. I do not know what he may have said privately to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], although, knowing the Chief of the Forestry Service as well as I do and respecting him as highly as I do, I do not understand how he could have made statements so contrary to each other as the remarks of the gentleman from Idaho would indicate.

Mr. TINCHER and Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, this is an old story. It is a question of eliminating a few Government employees, and of course those here with whom they live and reside are opposing it.

Now, let us see. There was a good deal of talk yesterday about the permits. There are 313 permits issued to cattlemen, who are objecting here through their local Representatives to any raise in the price, and these cattlemen control, on an average, 6,666 acres apiece. This amendment is to furnish a man to look over each of their ranges. And the argument now, and the only argument to this item, is that it will enable them to look around and see if there is not some weed that is not conducive to the good health of the stock of the man who is paying the enormous sum of 72 cents a season for pasturing his cattle. I want to answer the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who is usually consistent in his economy program, but who to-day is called upon to defend the useless expense of Government money because some of the employees that would be affected by dropping this appropriation live in his great State. He feels called upon to criticize our colleague upon the committee, the only man from the forest reserves who is on the committee.

I want to say to the gentleman that I am too gallant to criticize Mr. RIDDICK's predecessors. I do not want to criticize anybody at all. But I want to say to the gentleman that if that estimable lady who preceded him worked like Mr. RIDDICK works in this Congress, she deserves the commendation of the gentleman from Colorado, and if the gentleman from Colorado came over here and associated with us a little more and lived with us a little on this side he would have the pleasure of meeting that distinguished gentleman who serves on this committee. If the gentleman from Colorado came before the committee he would find CARL RIDDICK there every day, diligently serving the interests of his constituents.

You gentlemen criticize us for not having many Members from that section on the Committee on Agriculture, and then you criticize the Members that we have. Do you want the gentleman from Montana to be so narrow and so little that he will misrepresent the interests of the American public by begging for more employees in the national forests, where they are unnecessary, or would you rather have him be the big man that he is and have him refuse to stultify himself by asking for appropriations that are not needed? I wish we had more Representatives like CARL RIDDICK, and I wish my friend from Colorado would affiliate with us more, and rub elbows with us, and know us better, and appreciate us more. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SNELL. While I am in sympathy with what the gentleman is saying, I think the time has come to close general debate on this bill. I think from this time on we should confine ourselves to a strict five-minute discussion under the rules. And from this time on I am going to make the point of order when gentlemen do not discuss the measure before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. What is the substance of the pending amendment? Is it a forest reserve?

Mr. TINCHER. It is a proposition to add $35,000 to the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the paragraph.

Mr. WINGO. I submit to the Chair that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] is confining himself more closely to the text than usual, and I do not think the gentleman from New York should object. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, do I have the floor then?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized.

Mr. WINGO. If nobody wants the floor I will take it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois was recognized before the request was made to limit debate.

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I shall confine my remarks to the proposed amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. SMITH]. He has ably presented the reasons why it should pass, and I shall be brief.

The amendment proposes an item of $35,000 for experiments and investigations of range conditions within the national forests or elsewhere on the public range, looking to their improvement, reseeding, and experiments as to grazing and other matters that will be helpful in extending the availability of these forest reserves for range purposes. Under the leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], and other men from the great agricultural States, we are accustomed to seeing vast appropriations made for the encouragement of agriculture in those States. I think the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will bear me out in my statement that the efforts of the United States Government and of the State of Iowa have cost the people of that State and the country vast sums of money, but they are responsible for the production of one or two bushels more of corn per acre in Iowa than would have been produced had it not been for the work of the Department of Agriculture. Why aid the corn belt of Iowa and not the grazing region of the farther West? It is unquestionably true that the great State of Kansas is producing millions of agricultural products more than it would produce by reason of the expenditure of money by the Department of Agriculture in helping the people of that State to better means of production. Why help the farmers of Kansas to raise more wheat, more corn, more hogs, and deny aid to the West? We propose here $35,000 to carry on within the great forest area of our western country a similar work to that done in Iowa and Kansas.

In 1906 the receipts from grazing on agricultural lands within the forest reserves amounted to $513,000. Bear that figure in mind, because it is important and it was the first year that a grazing fee was charged. Beginning with the year 1911, annually we have made appropriations for the development of better grazing conditions on the forest areas. From 1906 to 1916 the grazing fees increased annually until $1,210,214 was the amount received in 1916, and last year the grazing fees amounted to $2,609,169 from the same areas, more largely stocked, that had yielded a little more than half a million dollars about 13 years ago. Now, this is due chiefly to increased grazing fees and more stock, but to some extent to improved range. Here is an investment of $35,000 that will add greatly to the income of the Government through the grazing of the forest lands.

Some one said to me yesterday that it was impossible to seed the land within forest areas without cultivating, without harrowing and plowing. I want to say that I am something of a pioneer in that forest country. I have lived there almost all my life, from a small boy of 7 years. I have helped to clear a great many acres of that country was covered with timber that 25 years ago was so worthless that we would cut it down and burn it in order to permit the land occupied by it to be utilized for agricultural purposes. It would take some time after we would cut the timber off before the land would be very valuable, but we did not need to plow and harrow those lands in order to seed them in grasses. In the wintertime, on the snow, I myself have gone out and seeded timothy or other grass seed through the forest region where we had cut the timber off, or where the timber was sparse, or where forest fires had swept through, and in a few years I have seen those areas that formerly were not greatly serviceable for grazing purposes literally growing vast yields of timothy, constituting the finest forage pastures in that section of country.

But in seeding forest areas is only one of the ways this fund will be applied. It will be used to test out grasses, to see what kinds will serve best in a given area. It will be used for eradicating poisonous plants. It will be used for improving the range in the same general way that appropriations handled by the Agriculture Department are used to improve farm conditions in Kansas and Iowa and Michigan.

Oh, but gentlemen say that the forest reserves are not self-sustaining. Granted they are not, the fact remains that the sum of $2,609,169 was received last year from grazing permits, while only $1,526,188 was received from timber. The total receipts were $4,358,414.86. The total cost of administering the forest area for the last fiscal year was $9,285,611.19. This includes about $825,000 for road building, more than $372,000 for research work, and more than $1,000,000 for forest-fire fighting and improvements on forest reserves. It also includes $1,148,574.20 that was the State's share in the division of receipts.

From the foregoing statement it will be seen at once that the excess of expenditure over receipts was less than $5,000,000 and not $7,000,000, as some one said a little while ago. It will also be seen that the grazing fees contribute about three-fifths of the total receipts. And this statement is not said in criticism. Some of the timber on the forest areas will not be used within a hundred years. Trees that are now being cut were many of them growing when Columbus discovered America. It would not be good policy to scuttle the forests, though we could increase the revenues thereby for the next few years. More than that, it is wisdom to protect our forests. Success or failure will be measured not by a year or by a few years but by the results of a policy extending over generations.

Gentlemen, you expend thousands to fight the boll weevil. You spend thousands to aid tobacco culture. You are generous in appropriations to meet pests that infest orchards, diseases that prey upon swine, and for experiments that are leading to larger crops and better crops in our more populous States. Why not apply the same policy to the forest reserves? The item that we are asking be included in the bill is small, but from it the return to the Government may be manyfold.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am disappointed that my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] should take the attitude that he does in regard to the West and the people of the West. It is unfortunate, I say with all due respect, that the gentleman does not understand the West or its conditions. To convince you of that fact I am going to read from page 111 of the hearings. This is a statement by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], who has criticized us people of the West. This is his language:

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In some cases they raise cattle in that way, and the cattle grow to maturity and make fine beef without ever having had a drink of water.

[Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I repeat that it is absolutely true.

Mr. RAKER. It is evident from that statement in the hearings, repeated by the gentleman now, that he does not understand conditions in the West.

Now, in regard to the cost here and the explanation made about the $4,000,000 of appropriations. These lands were withdrawn for the purpose of protecting the timber in the first instance. That was all right. The gentleman forgets that before the reserves were made his eastern friends passed a law authorizing the lieu-land scrip by which practically the greater part of the valuable timber lands in the West were taken by eastern private capitalists. This amendment here is for the purpose of improving land of the Government that does not have any timber upon it, that is in the forest reserves, and that ought to be protected, and you ought to give the men who pay for the pasturage some reasonable consideration and return for the money that they pay.

The department justifies this expenditure and asks for $60,000 instead of $35,000. The hearings, commencing with page 109, show that the department asks the entire $60,000 instead of the $35,000 which the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] desires. In that estimate they say:

There is an increase in the above item of $25,000. The object of these investigations is to find out how the national forest ranges can be made more productive and utilized more efficiently. The demand for grazing privileges from small farmers, ranchers, and homesteaders grows steadily and rapidly. The result has been to develop many new difficulties and problems, which urgently demand an increased appropriation for their solution. This fund has been increased only $10,000 since 1914. The increase now asked for is imperative if the ranges are to be handled in the best interest of the public, without impairment of productivity on the one hand or loss of full use on the other, through the working out of the most intensive and scientific methods of management.

Further, it was said yesterday, and it was a fact, that the Government is now receiving $1,000,000 profit from the grazing privileges. When the gentleman speaks about getting this grazing privilege for 60, 80, or 90 cents a year per head for the grazing on the forest lands he does not speak about the territory in the West, because that is not a fact. If a man got pasture for the year around he would pay more. There is no place where you have to pay seven, eight, or nine dollars for pasturage for 15, 30, or 45 days, and that is the average time of grazing on a great deal of this forest land.

We want assistance in this work. We want proper development of it. We want the Government to give some return for the money that is expended, and they will get it by improving the ranges instead of by tying them up, as the gentleman seems to desire in this particular matter. This is not a question of salaries, which the gentleman from Kansas speaks of. These men are out on the range. They are spending money legitimately in planting new grasses and sowing new seed to develop the range, land which before it was in a forest reserve, before man was there, never had a spear of grass upon it; but by the ingenuity of the American people and of the western men, and their experience accepted by the Department of Agriculture, they have made these areas good grazing lands. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] could get out our way occasionally, come "out where the West begins," because then he would not feel quite so resentful. It would broaden his point of view as to the kind of people who are living out there. He says we can not change our spots. Well, I confess I feel a degree of satisfaction in the color of my own hide; but it is, after all, the same color as that of my distinguished friend. It is the American color, and if the gentleman would come out and see us occasionally he would see that America does not stop at the shores of the Great Lakes. It goes at least to the Pacific. I have the advantage of seeing a little more of the United States every time I come to the Capitol than my friend sees. I hope we shall adjourn in time for the gentleman to come out and go fishing in Estes Park or over on the White River.

Spots, indeed! The only spots that bother my friend are those which obscure his own vision.

But I regret to hear the gentleman stand up here and belittle the West and deplore the lack of care of our forest reserves and our public lands, because I regret not only his point of view but his logic, for in the next breath he objects to spending $35,000 for the care of an asset which, according to the figures before you, produced last year $2,609,000 in grazing fees. It shows the utter fallacy of his position. Is that economy? He talks about saving timber. Why, bless your souls, we are glad to save the timber where it exists. Like other gentlemen who have spoken here, I can show you a whole lot of land in forest reserves which has not a stick of timber. Let us save the grass. That is at least a part—and I can assure you it is a very large part—of the forest reserves, which the gentleman is so solicitous about. We can use that grass out there, even if you gentlemen in Maryland and Virginia can not use it. But much of the range has to be reseeded. They say it is a great waste to spend $35,000 for that.

One curious thing impressed me in this argument, and I want you to see if my observation is not correct—that is, that the objections to this expenditure do not come mainly from the East or from the South. With the exception of the gentleman from Michigan and a few others, most of the Members who object come from those States which until yesterday were public-land States, but where there is not now an acre of public land left. The objections come from those States where all of the land was recently derived from the Government, but where it is all now in private ownership, from those States where there is no land the title to which will remain permanently in the hands of the Government. The reason is this: Down here in New York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania they are interested in getting beef, but in the States which are not public-land States, but which have just recently emerged from that condition, they are interested in raising beef and selling it to you, and if you will scratch deep enough you will find that the fact is that they do not want competitors in the business of raising beef.

When a gentleman is gullible enough to believe stories about cattle being raised to full-grown beef animals without ever having had a drink of water, of course he can easily persuade himself that the West is unfair. He could probably also persuade himself that beef animals could be raised without any feed, unlike the famous cow which was just learning to eat sawdust instead of bran when very contrarily she up and died, so that the experiment could not be completed. I can not believe all the people in Michigan would swallow such a tale, even if they had never seen a cactus plant. I am sure, however, the gentleman from Kansas is under no such illusion. His constituents sell beef. So do mine. But they eat it, too, and I am addressing this argument to those who eat it.

Now, are the people of the United States interested in increasing the meat supply? Are they interested in preserving a national asset, which the gentleman from Michigan speaks so eloquently about, or are they interested in preserving the special economic advantages of the people of a particular community? I am a little tired of hearing this talk about the great demands of the people in the public-land States and about the demands of the West and the exceeding generosity of the rest of the country to the West.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. I can not yield just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. VAILE. In my State 36 per cent of the entire acreage is held by the Federal Government. In the whole 12 of the public-land States the average is 43 per cent. There is a large part of that which will never be vested in private ownership, but every acre of land held in Federal ownership is improved by the taxpayers adjoining it, both by the development of their own property, putting it under cultivation and placing buildings and other improvements on it, and by the general development of the country through the use of their funds for the building of roads, schools, and other public purposes.

You do not object to an appropriation for fighting the boll weevil or an appropriation to prevent hog cholera. Such expenditures are for the general benefit of the country, and they help us all, because they decrease loss and increase production. The same argument applies to increasing and preserving our natural forage and eliminating poisonous weeds. It ought to interest the people who eat beef. But the argument has another angle to it when you apply it to the grass. The Government does not sell the pork or cotton which it appropriates money to save. It does sell the grass. The profit derived from the protection of pork and cotton is simply the welfare which comes from the general country. The benefit derived from the grass is the same, but it includes also a profit paid directly in cash into the pocket of Uncle Sam. And we therefore ask Congress merely to protect a Federal asset. Furthermore, is not the customer entitled to get a good article? But when the Government actually sells the thing itself—that is, that grazing privilege—then suddenly there seems to be a great objection to an appropriation for the benefit of the quality of the thing which we ourselves sell and which will increase our sales of it and the productivity resulting from such sales.

I fail to see either the fairness or the logic of that kind of a position. All we ask, gentlemen, is fairness, equity, and justice in this thing, but in doing it we are asking you to preserve from waste the very asset which you so eloquently and strongly urge should be preserved. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of retaining this item in the bill. I want to state my reasons for it. I am opposed to the position taken by gentlemen of the West in regard to the rates for the grazing privilege. I believe we are going to find some way somehow, to raise the rates and make them just and equitable. They ought to be double what they are now. The Secretary of Agriculture has absolute authority to double the rates any time he wants to. He now has the opinion of Congress to some extent in the views we have expressed in debate.

This paragraph here was recommended by the subcommittee for $35,000, and after a conference with Mr. Graves. Now, I want to state in this connection that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] has called attention to the fact that Mr. Graves came before our committee, and that he was the only gentleman from the Agricultural Department who made suggestions as to where reductions might be made. It is only fair to the chiefs of the other bureaus to say that Mr. Graves was the only gentleman called before the subcommittee and the only one who had an opportunity to make suggestions as to reductions; the others only came before the committee at the general hearings of the committee.

Now, this paragraph provides "for experiments and investigations of range conditions within the national forests or elsewhere on the public range, and of methods for improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and other regulations."

On the floor of the House yesterday I urged upon Congress the wisdom of opening the public lands to grazing, and I gave as a part of my argument that the Government ought to take the whole of the public lands and preserve and protect them. We ought to preserve and protect the lands on the forest reserves. This is the only paragraph in this bill, the only one making appropriations, which will enable the Secretary of Agriculture to protect grazing lands in the national forests. With this $35,000—they asked for $60,000, but the subcommittee gave them $35,000, the same amount as last year—the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry through his employees can protect the grazing lands from erosion, can regulate grazing, and things of that sort, which will keep up, preserve, and improve the grazing lands in the national forests.

For these reasons I believe that we ought to keep the paragraph in the bill; it has been in the bill for a number of years. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the House to just what this item is. It is:

For experiments and investigations of range conditions within the national forests or elsewhere on the public range, and of methods for improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and other regulations.

It is for experimentation and investigation. That work has been carried on for about 10 years, always with a more or less liberal amount of money, almost in every instance the amount which the Chief of the Forestry Service has asked. How long are investigations and experiments necessary to advise the service as to methods of improving the range to be carried on? It seems to me we ought to get through with these investigations pretty soon, that this is the time to save a little money where it can very well be saved. I urge all those who know what this item is and those who wish to exercise economy and feel the responsibility of so doing to oppose the motion to reinstate this unnecessary item.

A remark of mine, made in committee and appearing in the RECORD, was read by the gentleman from California, Judge RAKER, to the effect that cattle are sometimes raised without having drinking water supplied to them. As I said to the gentleman from California, I repeat that statement and insist that it is true. Two years ago in November a number of Members of the House and of the Senate went to the Hawaiian Islands, and among them were the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Lundeen]. They enjoyed an intimate acquaintance with a gentleman by the name of Hines, who was a State senator in the Territorial legislature and owned a large ranch where he raised and fattened cattle for the market. He invited these gentlemen to visit him; they gladly accepted, and spent Saturday and Sunday in his beautiful home.

When they returned to our party I remember distinctly what they said. Mr. REAVIS, in particular, was very much surprised. He said he saw beef cattle, as nice as he had ever seen, as fit for market as he had ever seen in his State of Nebraska, and they had never had a drink of water. The owner told him he believed if a pail of water were placed before one of his cattle it would not know what to do with it; that the cattle live on grasses and cactus which are so covered with and so full of moisture that water for drinking is not needed; that these feeds are, so to speak, both food and drink to the animals.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I want to get back to the point——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman rose for a question; what is the question?

Mr. RAKER. The question is this: If any——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If it is a speech, I do not care to listen, I have not the time. If it is a question, I will listen and try to answer it.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that in a number of forest reserves in northern California, by virtue of seeding and reseeding and benefiting the range, they have doubled and quadrupled the revenue they have received from those forests?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is true, but they have not doubled or quadrupled the grazing rates, which are only a fraction of what ought to be paid. Gentlemen like the gentleman from California wish the Congress to spend all kinds of money improving the range or in making investigations of methods by which it may be improved, and then they would advise their people to refuse to pay reasonable rates for grazing the stock, and they oppose all attempts of the Congress to require or permit the Secretary to pursue a policy by which reasonable rates may be collected. When in the committee I made the remark to which I have referred I was not speaking of cattle on our forest ranges. I know that they must have water. Many times members of the Committee on Agriculture give out a great deal of information, much of it new and strange to those outside of the committee. That is characteristic of the Committee on Agriculture. I am not surprised that the gentleman from California did not know the truth of what I said. I repeat that there are cattle which are grown from birth to full maturity and kept in splendid condition without drinking water. I trust the amendment will not prevail, because the money is unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Idaho) there were—ayes 53, noes 51.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SMITH of Idaho and Mr. HAUGEN were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 57.

So the amendment was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill to Mr. LONERGAN, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. RAKER, and Mr. VAILE.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RICKETTS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2692) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of tree seed, cones, and nursery stock, for seeding and tree planting within national forests, and for experiments and investigations necessary for such seeding and tree planting, $120,640.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph from lines 14 to 17, that there is no law authorizing the purchase of tree seeds and cones and nursery stock for seeding and tree planting in the national forests. It is new legislation. I presume this is to seed and plant and tree these barren prairies and barren hills that have been referred to here to-day by some gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think that the maintenance of forests might require the raising of young trees and the sowing of seed for that purpose?

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that my idea of this Forest Service is that the United States Government wanted to protect its timber and forest lands, that is, land upon which there is growing a forest of trees, not that the Government should set apart in the Forest Service barren prairies and hills upon which there is no growing timber whatever, and then undertake by planting trees, cones, and seed to grow a forest. That is not my idea of the Forest Service. It has been stated here by several Members that within these forest reserves that have been set apart by the Government there are thousands of acres barren, with nothing growing on them. Is that situation within the gentleman's idea?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a forest reservation. Of course, there is a great deal of land within the national forests and outside of the national forests, for that matter, which is absolutely worthless for anything except the raising of trees.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Illinois believe that we have plenty of forest lands upon which there is now growing plenty of fine timber sufficient for forestry needs rather than having to spend $120,000 every year to buy the trees and plants and seeds and cones to grow and raise so-called forests?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is the situation: A very severe forest fire may sweep through a forest and practically destroy all of the growing timber upon land that is useless and worthless for anything except the growing of trees. If some trees were left, they would reseed that land, but where there is such a destructive forest fire, it may be very easy and very profitable for the Government to collect some pine cones and seed and scatter them through this area and build up a forest upon the land worthless otherwise, and at a very small expense, so far as the particular piece of ground is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that likely he has already forgotten more than I will ever know about the Forestry Service and therefore I am willing to take his judgment on this question. I want to ask him if he believes it to be a wise policy on the part of this Government, taking into consideration all of the forest reserves upon which there is now growing fine timber, if a certain forest were destroyed by fire, to attempt to reseed and recone and retree any such land? Is that the gentleman's judgment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have given as much study to the subject of forestry as almost any other subject I have ever taken up. I have no hesitation in saying at all, while there may be cases where money is improvidently expended and will be under this or any other item—it is always the case—that I think it is very important for the National Forest Service to have the right and the money within reasonable limits to reforest or reseed areas of land which would be worthless for any other purpose in the world, but very valuable for growing forests.

Mr. BLANTON. With a deficit of $3,000,000,000 staring us in the face, does not the gentleman from Illinois think he could wait a few more years before reconing land?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would the gentleman from Texas permit me to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. BLANTON. If I have the floor. I made the point of order. I yield the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The inquiry which I wish to propound to the gentleman from Illinois is this: Putting it in common terms, is not the annual death rate of our forests about 15,000,000,000 to 20,000,000,000 feet more than the birth rate; and if so, is not that a very serious condition that we must deal with in some practical way?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I could not answer the question, but I can say this, that we are up against a very serious situation in the United States now in reference to the manufacture and supply of newsprint paper. Newsprint paper is made exclusively from forest products, from two kinds of trees, but in the main from one kind of tree, the spruce, of which they have very large forests in Canada and used to have very large forests in the United States, most of which probably have been cut over. But there are still considerable forests in the East and quite large forests in the far West and on the Alaskan coast and islands. Print paper is now so high in price it is driving many country newspapers out of existence. Paper, when I made the investigation which I did a few years ago for the House, that cost $2 a hundred is now selling for, in many cases, $10 a hundred. And it is absolutely impossible to get a sufficient supply. Unless we try to maintain our forests the same situation will arise before long as to lumber. The trouble with the print paper now is, partly, that they have not facilities for manufacturing a great supply, and, partly, they have not the pulp wood that they can get at reasonable prices as it is imported from Canada, and that can not always be done. I do not think there is anything more important, I will say to the members of the committee, than to maintain as far as we can the forests and then use them as they are needed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the question in more general terms? Is it not a fact that our yearly forest growth is far less than the yearly consumption of timber?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. About one-third of the loss.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have been told by a very practical and able manufacturer of wooden wares in my own State that the death rate—I will use that term—of forestry is from fifteen to twenty billion feet a year more than the birth rate. If that be true, it is a situation that the statesmanship of America should consider.

Mr. BLANTON. So far as the point raised by the gentleman from Virginia about our losing so much of the forestry lands every year is concerned—that is, the timber lost either by the trees dying or by fires——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman means the cutting of timber, not trees dying.

Mr. BLANTON. We can stop the cutting of timber. But I am speaking about the destruction of trees by fire. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that for 25 years—to give him something that I know of personally—I have been hunting on big ranches, one hunt every year, and have found that the timber, although the fires sweep it every once in a while, I do not believe, has changed in volume at all in 25 years. It has the same amount of timber. Some trees die and some are destroyed when the fire sweeps it, but others are growing all the time. There is just as much timber on such ranches to-day as there was 25 years ago, and there will be as much on these ranches 25 years from now as there is at present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no doubt that happens. But frequently, in the case of a thick forest, all the timber is destroyed. I have seen not only the trees in the forest destroyed but whole areas of the ground burned for a number of feet down. That is not always the case, but frequently all the trees are burned.

I have seen great areas of forest land in Minnesota and Michigan where you saw nothing but the tall, black trees standing there, dead, extending for miles, with nothing to reseed them. Of course, it is up to the lumbermen or forest owners to do it then. But where the Government owns them it seems to me we ought to reseed where it is necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he could give the House any definite information as to what success the Forest Service has had heretofore in this so-called reforestation? Whether or not the large sums of money heretofore appropriated and expended in that line have been wisely or beneficially expended, or if we have any results sufficient to warrant or justify the further appropriation of money for that purpose? And in this connection I want to call his attention to the fact, which he doubtless knows, that the growth of trees depends a great deal not only on the kind of trees but especially upon the climate and altitude. In the Rocky Mountain region, at an altitude of from 7,000 to 11,000 feet, it requires some 300 or 400 years to grow a tree big enough for a saw log, and I have often wondered whether or not it is advisable for us to wait that long.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no doubt that more or less of the money has been improvidently expended. I can not give the detailed information the gentleman has asked for, although I have always read the reports made by the Forestry Service in reference to such matters and have formed the impression that, in the main, the work they have been doing on these lines was very proper work for the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is what I wanted to know, if you or this committee has any definite data or authentic, concrete facts from actual experience that are sufficient to justify this expenditure.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will be frank with the gentleman and say that they do not have any trees now 400 years old that they raised from seed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If they are doing any good with this money, I am, of course, in favor of tree reforestation wherever practical. But my thought was that the Government ought to spend the money in places where and in such a way that the trees will grow and where they will get substantial results rather than spend it where the trees will not grow.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly. Everybody will agree with the gentleman on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the Chairman permit me a few observations on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is clear that the Congress has the right to appropriate for the preservation of the Government's property. These national forests are the property of the Government. One of the ways by which this property is destroyed and its value lessened is by erosion, where forests are cut off or burned off by forest fires, and one of the ways by which this property is preserved from that erosion is by planting new forests upon the land. It seems to me clearly that Congress has the right to appropriate for the preservation of the property of the Government. That is all this does.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the exact reading of this article—

> For the purchase of tree seeds, cones, and nursery stock, for seeding and tree planting within national forests, and for experiments and investigations necessary for such seeding and tree planting.

There is absolutely no law whatever for it. There has been no provision in any appropriation bill heretofore indicating that such appropriations shall be permanent law every year, and I submit to the Chair that this is wholly unauthorized by law. If it is necessary, a law can be provided through the proper committee, and not force us to bring it in as a rider on an appropriation bill as now proposed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, after all, the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], it seems to me, would go to everything connected with the Forest Service, to the purchase of a spade or a hoe, or anything else in connection with the Forest Service. We have the national forests; we make appropriations for the maintenance of the national forests. Now, if we have the authority to appropriate for the maintenance of the forests at all, then we have got authority to appropriate for specific things necessary in order to maintain the forests. Of course, if we have no authority at all to maintain the forests, then we have no authority to make an appropriation either for their maintenance generally or specifically. These things are necessary for the maintenance of the forests.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes a point of order on the language contained in lines 14 to 17, inclusive, on page 46. The purpose of this item is "for the purchase of tree seed, cones, and nursery stock, for seeding and tree planting within national forests, and for experiments and investigations necessary for such seeding and tree planting." From such examination as the Chair has been able to make the Chair finds that the Bureau of Forestry was formerly within the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, and that the matter of the maintenance and upkeeping of the national forests was left to the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Forestry in that department. Subsequently the Bureau of Forestry was transferred to the Department of Agriculture. Formerly when under the Interior Department the purchase of seeds and seedlings was made from appropriations out of the Patent Office funds, for the purchase of seeds, cuttings, and so forth, through the Commissioner of Patents, and subsequently that fund was reimbursed. The item seems to be for the purpose of maintaining and keeping up the national forests. In the opinion of the Chair the language of the item brings it within the organic law, so to speak, of the Forestry Service as originally established. Plainly it is for maintaining and keeping up the property of the Government included within the national forests, and the Chair is of opinion that it is a proper item and a proper expenditure to make under authority of existing law, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. KING: Page 46, line 17, strike out "$120,640."

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment with the expectation of probably withdrawing it, but for the purpose of making such observations as I may make pertinent and material to the amendment, because if this $120,640 is saved to the Government it may be used for bringing back some of the bodies of our dead soldiers from France. I had occasion awhile ago to make some comments on the real reason——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is here, as he always is, and I want to remind him of his statement to the House this morning, directing his attention to the speech out of order now being made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas did not state the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order was that the argument now being made by the gentleman from Illinois is against the position taken this morning by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not speaking on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has moved to eliminate the amount appropriated under the item and has not yet proceeded far enough for the Chair to tell whether he is speaking strictly to his motion or not.

Mr. BLANTON. He is discussing the bringing back of the bodies of dead American soldiers from France. I agree with that contention of his, but I think we ought to go on with the consideration of the Agricultural bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the attention of the Chair was momentarily diverted and he had not been paying strict attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, so that as yet the Chair is unable to state whether the gentleman is confining himself to his motion or not.

Mr. KING. My amendment is for the purpose of saving this amount of money, that it might be used for the object I have designated. I stated a few days ago my belief that one of the real purposes of not bringing back the bodies of our dead soldiers from France is——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. KING. Does the Chair desire to hear argument on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is in order thus far.

Mr. KING. I hope, Mr. Chairman, this will not be taken out of my limited time.

The reason was that there was a thrifty contingent of French gentlemen who desired to utilize the fact of the existence of the American cemeteries in France to cause American people—the fathers and mothers of the dead soldiers—to visit France; to require them, as a matter of fact, if they wanted to visit the graves of their sons, to visit France, and therefore spend their money in that country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order, although I applaud the gentleman's speech. It is, however, now out of order, I submit.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is attempting to cut this out of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman's remarks now are clearly a discussion of matters that are not pertinent to the elimination of this item, if the gentleman from Texas insists upon the point of order.

Mr. KING. The reason why I want to strike out the figures is to save that amount of money to this Government, an amount of money which could be used for the purposes I have suggested, thus saving money to the Government. I have the right to make the motion, and I have the right to urge any reason I desire to induce the House to cut out this appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. What was the Chair's ruling as to whether or not he sustained the point of order on the question whether bringing home the bodies of dead American soldiers from France was pertinent to the Agricultural bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not make a ruling just along that line. The Chair ruled that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois had proceeded to such an extent that in the opinion of the Chair he was not discussing the motion to eliminate the $120,640 from this item at the particular point where the point of order was lodged, and the Chair sustained the point of order at that time. But the Chair thinks the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois subsequent to the point of order being sustained was within the rules and in order. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois is within his rights in giving as his reason why this appropriation should not be made the facts upon which he bases his remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman on his contention of returning our dead soldiers from France.

Mr. KING. But you are against the proposition. I want to say to the gentleman that I would be ashamed of myself if I stood on this floor and talked on immaterial matters as much as the gentleman from Texas has done.

In support of the statement which I have just made, prior to the interruption of the gentleman from Texas, I read from a newspaper report as follows:

French hotels prepare for summer tourists.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, is the Chair going to let the gentleman pursue out of order that line of argument?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not in order under the amendment which the gentleman has offered.

Mr. KING. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair on the point of order. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fourteen Members are present, a quorum. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion to strike out that $120,000, because I think it is very important for the purpose for which it is intended.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. KING. There is no last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the pro forma amendment refers to the last word of the paragraph. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is recognized.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill appropriating $120,640 is certainly an important provision, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a short time ago. He referred to the fact that conditions might arise by reason of fire causing the destruction of timber, grass, and things of that kind that would make it very necessary to do the work specially provided for in this paragraph. When destruction comes and damages occur it must be repaired, and it takes considerable money to do it, as the national forests are very large.

In this connection I want to call attention to the fact that last year there were in the national forests of the United States 6,250 fires; 32 per cent of them were caused by lightning, 20 per cent by campers, 20 per cent by railroads, 3½ per cent were incendiary, 4½ per cent were caused by brush burning, 2 per cent by logging, and the causes of the others were unknown. So you see it is very important that this identical work provided for in this particular appropriation should be done. I was surprised when I learned that 32 per cent of the fires in forest reserves in the United States are caused by lightning, but nevertheless they come from that source, which it is impossible for any human effort to prevent. Therefore I believe that this appropriation is absolutely necessary, and the motion which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] made a few moments ago to strike out the sum herein appropriated should not have been made and ought not to be sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, $35,000.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to make a few observations in connection with the national forests. There has been a good deal of discussion in connection with the Forest Service.

When the Federal Government installed its system of national forests out in the public-land States, it was done in accordance with a law passed by Congress, not at the behest of the people of the States where these forests were located, but on the recommendation of a certain gentleman who wanted to install a system of conservation. I am in sympathy with the spirit of conservation of our national resources. I believe our timber should be conserved. I believe it should be saved to a certain degree; but Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we have gone conservation mad on this proposition. Like other businesses in which the Government has embarked, this service is top heavy. They are spending more money than they ought to spend in conserving these national resources. They employ more people than they ought to employ. [Applause.] The idea of conserving our timber and all these things is right. It is a good idea, but whenever you go to leasing these lands, then you drive the settlers away from those States. When this system of issuing permits for grazing purposes in the national forests was installed, it was said that it was going to be in the interest of the small stockmen. What has been the result? The result has been that the large cattle owners and sheep owners are the ones who are asking for these additions to the national forests. It does not encourage the settling of those lands in any way. The homestead forest act of 1906 is almost a dead letter today. I know that by experience. I live within the Carson National Forest in New Mexico. I own several hundred acres of land within that forest and outside of it. They talk about the expense. Nobody out there asks that those expenses be incurred. We are perfectly willing to take the public domain and manage it ourselves without running in debt.

If you want to get rid of that expense, you can do it very easily. If these public lands are a liability to the Government, and they have been a liability so far, turn them over to the respective States and we will handle them.

Gentlemen talk about conservation of this, that, and the other, but those of us that live within these forests feel that we are paying a reasonable fee for the privilege that we get for grazing now, and to arbitrarily raise those fees at this time would be an injustice. I, in behalf of my constituents, feel constrained to enter my earnest protest against it. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, we are trying to devise ways and means to lower the high cost of living all along the line and have been trying to curb profiteering by enacting such legislation as will serve that purpose, and here the Committee on Agriculture and the Forestry Bureau are engaging in the very thing we are trying to stop. The proposition to raise arbitrarily the grazing fees at this time, regardless of the agreements or understandings that exist between the bureau and the national forest, strikes me like a clear case of an effort to profiteer on the part of the Government, alleging that commercial rates for grazing on private lands are higher than those by the bureau. If we want to lighten the burdens of those that raise beef and mutton and the by-products of the industry of stock raising we certainly do not want to make the charges for the privileges of grazing treble of what they now are. These people have to meet Federal, State, and other taxes. The expenses of running and managing their business have doubled the last three years, and while prices for their products have increased that increase certainly does not justify an unreasonable charge for grazing. A leasing system of the unentered and unoccupied public lands at this time would, in my judgment, have a tendency to retard the growth of several of the public-land States; it would have a tendency to create a system of landlordship under our Government whereby the small stockmen would be compelled to go out of business, and those that are able to pay would monopolize the industry.

If we want to assist in developing and settling unentered public domain we certainly must not embark on any such a system at this time. Whilst a good deal of the land is arid in character, experiences in other sections of the country demonstrate that there are a good many people that are willing to go into these lands of the country, into the hardship of pioneering thereon, by developing water and otherwise improving the lands. If we want these States to grow and become prosperous Commonwealths we must not do anything here to retard that very essential progress.

I have just received the following telegram from the New Mexico Cattle and Horse Growers' Association, a representative body of men engaged in the industry of cattle and horse growing, and from the New Mexico Wool Growers' Association, representing 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 cattle and sheep, respectively, in that State, a number of whom now graze their flocks and herds within the national forests in that State, and which telegram reads as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., February 11, 1920.

Hon. B. C. HERNANDEZ,
United States Representative, Washington, D. C.:

Agricultural appropriation bill now before House provides for revision of charge for grazing on national forests at least every five years, commencing 1921, upon basis of commercial rates charged upon lands similar character. Taking into account advantages and disadvantages of respective areas this would mean immediate reappraisal instead of waiting until expiration of present five-year period in 1924, and would result in largest increase in grazing charges on national forests until 1924, on ground that present conditions are abnormal and would not furnish a fair basis, and we solicit your assistance and cooperation.

NEW MEXICO CATTLE AND HORSE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.
NEW MEXICO WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Since the Department of Agriculture embarked upon and adopted the policy now prevailing in regard to the management of the national forests we are aware of the fact that they have been unable to make this a paying system. This dream did not come true or materialize according to the theories of the promoters thereof. At the time the system was adopted the statement was made that inside of four or five years it would be a source of revenue to the Government, but instead of that it has been running in debt and a deficit has marked the administration thereof. The stockmen living in and using the forests for the purpose of grazing certainly are doing their share in trying to pay the running expenses of the forests. People living near these forests are cooperating with the bureau in conserving the natural resources thereof. We help to fight and keep down forest fires. If it were not for the settler and stockmen I doubt very much if the force now employed by the bureau would be able to take care of that situation. If the Congress of the United States is desirous of encouraging homeseekers to go into these States, where there is still room for them, we certainly must not discourage them by throwing obstacles in their way. If we want to encourage the woolgrowing and cattle-raising industries we must not put additional burdens upon those engaged in these industries who have to contend with weather conditions, predatory animals, and other handicaps. The States of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, and Illinois are the indirect beneficiaries of the efforts of the sheep and cattle men farther west. Within these rich Commonwealths the farmer raises the corn, the hay, and other forage to fatten the cattle and sheep which get to the market. We of the far Western States can not take care of all the stock that we raise and make it ready for the market, therefore when we sell a steer or a lamb at 8 or 10 cents per pound gross the feeder can put on additional weight by feeding the stock and making it ready for the market, reaping thereby a profit.

The stock-growing industry in the far West is not in the ascendancy, is not as prosperous as one would like to believe, and I certainly regret to hear gentlemen on the floor of the House make the statement that we of the far Western States must pay a reasonable grazing fee when we feel that we are doing that now, taking into consideration conditions surrounding us. Furthermore, in my State, for instance, stockmen, through their various organizations, are cooperating with the Bureau of Biology in the extermination of predatory animals; the State, through its cattle and sheep sanitary boards, is cooperating by contributing our funds to this most excellent piece of work. This bureau is doing, in our opinion, the most beneficial work in connection with the Department of Agriculture in the public-land States of any bureau of the Government. They are saving, I dare say, in the State of New Mexico alone $10,000,000 to the stockmen. Before this work was undertaken and carried on in this scientific and practical manner in which it is now carried on, in my experience as a sheepman 15 years ago, the sheepmen of my section of the State of New Mexico were losing 5 per cent of their herds from predatory animals, or 20,000 head of sheep a year in four or five counties, or over a quarter of a million dollars. That loss is practically eliminated by the splendid work of this bureau.

Mr. Chairman, whilst we ranchmen and stockmen are not trained scientists we are practical people; we do not indulge in impossible Utopias in connection with the management of our business. What we know about stock raising we know from practical experience; what we know about ranch and weather conditions we have learned through experience. What the Department of Agriculture ought to do, if I may venture to make the suggestion, is to get busy and sell more matured timber within the national forests. This is one way of getting more revenue. Expend less money in making experiments which do not get very far. Let us get away from the wrong impression, or, rather, disillusion our minds from the idea that all the area within these national forests is a paradise. I dare say that 50 per cent of it is not of the character contemplated by the act creating national forests. That would be another way of reducing the running expenses of this bureau in connection with the supervising and management of this bureau. Eliminate all these areas that are not forest in character; and if you must, at this time or in the future, demand that unentered and unappropriated public lands be subdivided into grazing areas, give the people that use these grazing areas an opportunity to be heard on the subject; but by no means throw any obstacles around these lands so as to prevent them being taken up under the homestead laws now in force.

Some gentlemen make the impossible comparison between lands in Iowa, Illinois, or Kansas, or other States, where the rainfall is three times, perhaps more, than it is in these Western States, when, as a matter of fact, it should not be indulged in; where you can keep, perhaps, one sheep in an acre of pasture all the year around, or perhaps you could keep a cow on 2 or 3 acres, while in New Mexico, Arizona, or Colorado it would take from 5 to 20 acres to keep a sheep or a cow.

Therefore, gentlemen, let us be reasonable; let us be just in dealing with this very important subject. We are all in favor of conservation; it is one of those dreams in which, before they come through, the engineers, or rather the initiators thereof, must look at conditions as they are and develop these dreams in an orderly manner and not try to put into execution a system that has taken centuries, perhaps, in other countries to develop. We have enough timber and fuel in 10 of our so-called public-land States and the national forests thereof to supply fuel and lumber to this country for centuries.

The Clerk read as follows:

For estimating and appraising timber and other resources on the national forests preliminary to disposal by sale or to the issue of occupancy permits, and for emergency expenses incident to their sale or use, $105,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, line 2, strike out the figures $105,000 and insert in lieu thereof $80,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in reporting the $105,000, $35,000 of that was for the purpose of making appraisals of the grazing privileges. We have struck that out, and so we want to give the same amount that we gave last year.

Mr. RUBEY. If the gentleman will permit, I want to say that I have an amendment which I think will cover the grazing matter. It will provide that $25,000 shall be made available for the purpose of appraising these lands, and to my mind that will be considered in order.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman knows that I am in accord with his suggestion, but I thought that we had discussed the matter so long——

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I take it by offering the amendment the gentleman from Iowa concedes that there will be nothing in the bill in relation to the appraisals.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, line 2, after the semicolon, insert the following:
Provided, That $25,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of ascertaining the appraised value of pasturage upon the national forests, which appraised value when determined may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be made the basis of the charge for grazing permits upon such forests.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment seeks to limit the authority which the Secretary of Agriculture now has with respect to the regulation of grazing upon the national forests. The amendment provides that $25,000 may be used to ascertain the appraised value of pasturage on the national forests. An appropriation for that purpose is probably in order. But the remainder of the paragraph, as I heard it read, states that when an appraisal is made the Secretary of Agriculture shall be bound by the values thus determined in fixing the grazing fees. Such a provision is legislation on an appropriation bill and in contravention of the rules of the House.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides for estimating and appraising timber and other resources on the national forests preliminary to disposal by sale or to the issuance of occupancy permits, and for emergency expenses incident to their sale or use.

Now, the object of this legislation which has been carried in the appropriation bill for a number of years is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make appraisals of timber, for instance, before he disposes of that timber, and also to enable him and authorize him to make appraisals for grazing privileges. That is one of the objects of this paragraph—to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make appraisals for grazing privileges. That is a part of it. We have increased the appropriation $25,000. The committee when it increased the appropriation had in mind the fact that they wished to give additional money in order to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make an appraisal of the grazing land in the national forests. I say that this $25,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture—it is not mandatory—for the purpose of ascertaining the appraised value of grazing upon the national forests. I do not think there can be any objection to that. Now, as to the remainder of the amendment, "which appraised value, when determined, may in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture be made the basis of the charge for grazing permits upon such forests." We are not taking anything away from the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, we are simply expressing the will of Congress, the desire of Congress, as to what shall be done. It is simply an expression by Congress of its ideas along this particular line. We do not take anything away from the Secretary that he already has. So I do not think there is any chance on earth for my amendment to be held out of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I direct the Chair's attention to this fact, that although the language used is "may in the discretion of the Secretary," the gentleman from Missouri asserts that he is seeking an expression of the will of Congress as to what the Secretary of Agriculture shall do. Congress can not express its will in any such manner without interfering with the discretion which the Secretary now possesses. If the contention of the gentleman from Missouri is correct, this is but another subterfuge to accomplish by indirection that which the Chair has repeatedly held is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] offers an amendment to the pending paragraph by adding after the $105,000 appropriated for that item a proviso that $25,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture "for the purpose of ascertaining the appraised value of pasturage on the national forest, which appraised value when determined may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be made the basis of charge for grazing permits on such forests."

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] makes the point of order that this is legislation and a change of existing law. The Chair thinks upon examination of this amendment that the sum set apart is not required to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose suggested; and, furthermore, that if the Secretary of Agriculture does use the sum which is made available for that purpose, he is not bound to use the appraised value which is ascertained as the basis of a charge for grazing permits on forests. It seems to the Chair that this amendment is so phrased as not to change or modify the discretion resting in the Secretary of Agriculture by existing law, but simply permits the Secretary, if he so finds, to expend this money, and then within the discretion already given him by the law to make use of it in the manner which the amendment suggests.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the Chair permit a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. If there is no existing law to authorize an appropriation of this character to be made, the amendment is not authorized, and therefore would be subject to the point of order. The Secretary must either be authorized by existing law to make such appraisals or the amendment changes the present law. In either event it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered to the very paragraph in the bill providing an appropriation for an appraisal.

Mr. HAYDEN. I had not observed that there was anything in the paragraph providing for appraisals.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph reads—

> For estimating and appraising timber and other resources on the national forests preliminary to disposal by sale or to the issuance of grazing permits.

The Chair thinks that this is one of the resources to which occupancy permits apply, and while the Chair has in mind the various rulings that he made upon this subject when the various items were under consideration yesterday, the Chair can not say that this in any way hampers the discretion which the Secretary of Agriculture has under existing law, because under the language in which this amendment is phrased it may be ignored by the Secretary of Agriculture entirely; it is a permissive discretion.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, would the Chair permit the suggestion that it is giving him discretion that he has not at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks the Secretary is authorized now to exercise discretion that is being sought in this amendment, and is within the existing discretion vested in that official.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If it were true, I do not think these gentlemen would be so desperately strenuous in trying to get this kind of a provision in this bill which will authorize the doubling or the trebling of the grazing fees.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, according to the ruling of the Chair, imposes no obligation of any kind upon the Secretary of Agriculture to raise the rates for grazing on the national forests. It is to be distinctly understood that its adoption can not be construed as even implying that Congress desires an increase in such fees, and that the Secretary is entirely free to exercise his own discretion as heretofore. It is only upon that basis that the amendment could have been held to be in order. An additional $25,000 is given to the Secretary with which to appraise the grazing resources of the national forests in the same manner as such appraisals have formerly been made and with no binding direction as to the use to be made of the appraisals.

I have such confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture that I am sure he will not, as was proposed by this committee, violate any agreement that has been made with the stockmen of the national forests, by immediately increasing the grazing rates where any person now possesses a five-year permit. That was my chief objection to the proviso on page 35 of this bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture. In the face of a declaration by the Secretary of Agriculture that he had established a policy of issuing five-year permits, and in spite of statements made to the committee by Mr. A. F. Potter, the Assistant Forester, that to change such permits would be unfair and unjust, the committee nevertheless sought by its original proposal to double the grazing fees on the forest reserves in 1921 without waiting for the existing five-year permits to expire. If the Secretary of Agriculture acts in good faith, as I am sure he will, with the stock raisers on the national forests, and proceeds with an appraisal made in the same manner as he has done in the past, and then ascertains that upon the expiration of the existing permits the permittees should pay higher grazing fees, after a full and free conference with them, no one can have any objection if there is a reasonable and justifiable increase in the rates for grazing on the national forests.

I want to particularly direct the attention of the committee to Mr. Potter's testimony on this question, appearing on page 63 of the hearings. He said:

> It is not contemplated that there will be any change in the base rate up or down between now and 1923.

Again he says:

> We are trying to stabilize range conditions and do not believe the fees should be readjusted on the basis of the present abnormal conditions.

Mr. Potter concluded his remarks before the committee by stating:

> We are now protecting 30,000 small owners in the use of the range needed for the maintenance of their homes and giving them a preference in renewal of permits. * * * We have felt that stopping damage to the forests, improving conditions on the watersheds, bringing about orderly use of the ranges, and protecting settlers in establishing their homes was of more importance to the Nation than the number of dollars collected in fees, and I believe that this should continue to be our ideal.

If that is the ideal of the Forest Service—and I am sure that the assistant forester correctly expressed it—if those in authority propose to do justice to the stockmen, to see that none but fair and reasonable grazing rates are imposed, based upon an appraisal of the value of the pasturage or by whatever other method the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, no one from the West will have any objection. But the West does object to ill-considered action by a committee of this House or by Congress, taken without any opportunity for the interested stockmen to be heard, whereby it is sought to make a radical change in existing conditions for the sole reason that apparently some additional money may be raised from cattle and sheep raisers who, it is reported, are prospering. It does not give the Members of this House a right to violate existing agreements with those who have grazing permits on the national forests, simply because Congress has the power to do so under the law.

If I were the owner of grazing land which one of you gentlemen has been leasing from me for 50 cents a head on a year-to-year basis, and in view of the increase in the value of the live stock I determined in the year 1919 to charge you $1 a head, but it was agreed that the increase in the rate to double the former amount would be made on the condition that you should have a five-year lease, I, as a private owner of grazing land, would not be allowed under the law to violate that agreement and demand a further increase in rates during the life of the lease. Neither should the Congress be permitted to do so simply because it has the arbitrary power, and it is for that reason that I have made points of order, which have been sustained, against every proposal to raise the grazing fees on the national forests. Even if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] should be adopted, I feel confident that justice will be done to the stockmen of the forest reserves, because the Forest Service and the stock raisers will have opportunity to confer. There will be a hearing and an understanding before final action is taken. That is another reason why I felt constrained, on behalf of my constituents, to take the position I have in opposition to the hasty enactment of such drastic legislation. I believe they have a moral and an equitable right to graze their flocks and herds on the forest reserves during the entire term of the five-year permits that have been issued without any raise in rates. It was, therefore, my duty to oppose any legislation affecting the rates of grazing on the national forests in every parliamentary way. I am sure that the Secretary of Agriculture will not take the passage of this particular amendment by this House either as an excuse or as a direction to him to violate or change the grazing permits that are now in existence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON to the amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY: After the figures "$25,000," in the first line of the amendment, strike out "may" and insert "shall," and in the next to the last line, strike out the words "may in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is clearly interfering with the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture by changing the word "may" to the word "shall." Certainly it can not under the guise of an amendment to an amendment be held in order to now proceed to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have not examined the precedents, but it is my impression that an amendment to strike out language in an amendment which is in order and insert other language is always in order. This is a simple motion to strike out and insert. It is germane to the pending amendment, and it strikes me that it is in order, the Chair having held the language of the original amendment to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. I want to call attention, further, to what the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has well said. The fact is that the farmers, ranchmen, big and little cattlemen, have a thousand hardships and adverse handicaps against them that the farmers and stockmen of the East and Middle West do not have. The cattlemen throughout the West very largely use borrowed money. A large per cent of the funds on which the cattlemen are running their cattle on the forest reserves in the West to-day is borrowed. They borrow that money on the strength of the extent and character of range they have and on the terms of the permits they have and the amount which they have to pay for feed. About a year or so ago the Forest Service notified the users of its forest reserves that instead of an annual permit they would raise the grazing fees 100 per cent and give the ranchmen a five-year permit, which they very generally did. Now, it is absolutely a violation of all sense of decency and fairness to those men to say to them that Congress repudiates that agreement and proposes to raise their fees 300 per cent beginning on the 1st day of July and without any hearing or notice. How will those people feel about that kind of a deal by Congress?

That is the effect of this provision, and that is exactly what this committee is trying to do, and what it has been desperately trying to do for three days. It is the most unconscionable and brazen action I have ever witnessed in this House. We have enough trouble without this. With our frightfully high freight rates and outrageously poor car service; our predatory wild animals, always destroying cattle; our poison weeds in the forest reserves; our short grazing season; our arid country and short and most awfully poor range, and often long distances to water; our long winters and high-priced feed and innumerable other obstacles; and I submit it is absolutely outrageous when the Forest Service has recently doubled the grazing fees and given those thousands of people five-year permits to force them to stand up and deliver a 300 per cent raise or get off the forest reserve and go out of business. The effect of this, instead of increasing the fees, will put a great and ruinous hardship upon a lot of small, struggling homesteaders. I absolutely know that you gentlemen on the Agricultural Committee would not attempt this thing or try to put unwarranted hardships upon the people out there who are trying to develop that country and who have to have a few cattle in order to make a living if you personally understood the injustice and the effect of it. It will hurt the little fellow much more than the big one. I do not know, but I am afraid that your committee has been influenced too much by the representatives of the large cattlemen, and that you have not had before you the little fellows.

The gentleman from Chicago and the gentleman from near Kansas City talk about paying $12 a year for pasturage. They get about twenty-four times as much pasture as the forest reserve furnishes, and they get it on less than one twenty-fourth of the territory that our cattle have to travel over, and when their stock is fat they pay no freight and have no shrinkage in getting them to market. You would not have opposed the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] as viciously as you did if you had known the condition. I heard a man say yesterday that he had lost 70 head of beef steers last year by a poison weed, and yet you try to prevent a little item of that kind, beneficial as it is. These repeated amendments offered by the chairman of the committee, Mr. HAUGEN, and by the ranking member, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, who shows his knowledge of cattle raising by repeatedly saying that cattle do not need any water and that they can be raised and fattened and marketed without ever having a drink of water, are a direct stab to the development of the western country. I represent some 10,000,000 acres of forest reserves, as well as a great many cattlemen; in fact, I belong to two cattlemen's associations myself; so I know them and their interests, and I am appealing for the welfare and the development of that western country when I say that I believe you are attempting to do a great injustice by trying to inject something here that will either force the Secretary of Agriculture to violate his plain agreement with the people who use the forest reserve or to refuse to pay attention to what you are wrongfully putting in this bill now if you adopt any of these amendments to revise these grazing fees.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

So far as I am personally concerned, I would not advocate a thing going into this bill that would be unjust to the people in the West. What have we here? The Government owns these millions of acres of the public domain. It is costing this Government millions of dollars annually to maintain these forest reserves, out of the tax money of the people.

I have not any Government forests in my State, but I well know, Mr. Chairman, the history of that great State. When she came into the Federation of States, Texas, then being a republic, as a condition precedent retained her public domain. For many, many years that domain was in the open; in fact, it was so until the days of the manufacture of barbed wire. The pasturage was in common. And I remember that when people who own these lands began to fence up their own holdings, that those who had theretofore had free right to the range of their stock on these lands thought that some of their rights were being taken away from them. A bad spirit developed, and they even cut the fences of the people who had fenced their own lands. The public lands were leased by the State to stockmen, for which they were charged a compensation. So much for that State.

Now, these national acres of public forest belong to this Government. We have these grazing lands. I undertake to say that it is not right for the people of the United States that we take a Government asset, the forests that we have, and lease those forests for pasturage purposes at less than their real value as pasturage. And that is all we are seeking to do here. Those who have charge and who administer these forests tell us that under the present system we are not getting for these forest lands what we should get, and that we ought to have a different system and recommend the system that we are now seeking to enact by which some two to three million dollars additional may be collected for the benefit of the Treasury.

Now, to whom are you doing an injustice? If the stockman had not been paying what this pasturage is worth, what right has he to complain if the Government insists that he shall pay it? We have a business system by which we can get what this pasturage is worth, and that is all this is. Then, as to the public lands, why should we make a present of the acreage of those lands to the private owners of cattle? That is the other proposition we tried to get in here. Why should not the Government have the right and the authority to lease these lands for pasturage purposes and charge the value of these lands for that purpose? Is that an injustice to the people of the West? That is common honesty; that is all it is. It is common honesty to the balance of the citizenship of the Nation who are paying to keep up these forest reserves.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. How much is the deficit in the Forest Service now?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Several millions of dollars a year.

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking for information only. If that is true, is there any reason in the world why we should not put the public domain, which is now under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department, under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department for leasing purposes, in order that the Government itself may recoup the losses that are being sustained by the conduct of the Forest Service?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. There is no reason, and that is the fight I am making and that is the fight that the Committee on Agriculture is making, that these lands should bring in revenue. These people are fattening their stock for the purpose of shipping them to the market and profiting by the transaction, and why should not they pay for these leases just as the stockmen in Texas pay for the lease privilege on public lands in Texas?

Mr. MADDEN. What are the recommendations that have been made?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. It is stated that this is going to hurt the little fellow. It is not. Provision is included in this law for the little farmer; provision is made that his stock shall be grazed free of charge.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have his time extended for one minute more. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be allotted to gentlemen who wish to speak for the proposition and 5 minutes to those against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes, 5 to be used by the gentlemen speaking for the proposition and 5 to be used by the gentlemen speaking against it. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have sufficient time to conclude the remarks that I tried to make this morning when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] insisted on interrupting me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Illinois in favor of or opposed to the amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I am in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand, for the life of me, why it is that any person on the floor of this House would object to the Government of the United States recouping itself for losses in any Government activity. Here we propose to increase the charge for grazing. Up to now we have been getting 72 cents per annum. I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that it will cost you $12 per annum in any part of the State I live in for the same purpose. If the people of my section of the country are compelled to pay $12, what justification can there be for men in other sections of the country demanding that the Government shall feed their cattle for less than 72 cents per annum?

We are losing $7,000,000 a year, I understand, on the Forest Service, and we have 300,000,000 acres of land in the public domain on which the men who own cattle are permitted to graze them free. Why should we not turn that land over to the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, so that they may be able to increase the revenues of the Forest Service?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is any man on the floor of the House—I do not care what section of the Nation he comes from—who can justify the argument in favor of robbing the Treasury of the United States in order to fatten the treasury of some private individual, I would like to get his name.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to the gentleman what I wanted the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] to say a moment ago, that we have Texas cattlemen in Texas who graze some of these forest lands, and you will not find one but is willing to pay the highest maximum, top-notch price for the grass that he grazes. He is perfectly willing to pay more for it if the Government asks it.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no reason why the Government should not ask it, and there is no reason in the world why any Member of this House should stand in the way of legislation permitting the Government to do that. I regret to see men on the floor of the House coming from certain sections of the country putting every obstacle within their power in the way of the Government getting all the revenue it is entitled to from this and every other source. They are first in favor of every extravagant appropriation that will place men on the Government pay roll without any duties to perform and then they are opposed to the imposition of a charge on the part of the Government to reimburse the Government for the expenditure made as the result of the appropriations. That is consistency. That is patriotism. That is western chivalry. These are the men who want to be on the Committee on Agriculture. They now control the Committee on Public Lands and they dictate the policy of that class of legislation in the House. They say that other Members of Congress from other sections of the Nation ought not to have anything to say about it. Who pays the bills? Do they or do we? There are only five States in the Union that pay the great bulk of the expenses of the Federal Government, and one of these States is the one from which I come. Massachusetts and New York and Ohio and Pennsylvania and Illinois pay about 72 per cent of all the bills that are incurred by the Government. And yet these men that come from the States where they pay nothing to speak of presume to say that the expenses shall be increased and the revenues diminished where it affects them and their constituents. But the time has come when those who come from the sections of the Nation that pay the bills ought to be here in force, first to prevent extravagant appropriations, and, second, to prevent these men from blocking the way to the collection of revenue that is not only justified but reasonable. And so I say that this Committee on Agriculture deserves the credit which ought to come from the recommendations made for an increase in the cost of this pasturage and at least to place the cost to those who use it at one-tenth of the cost to the people in other sections of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Arizona opposed to the amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] complains that there are Members who have public land in their districts on the Committee on the Public Lands, and that Members from States where there are forest reserves would like to have representation on the Committee on Agriculture. I shall be glad to make an agreement with the gentleman that when all Members who have navy yards in their districts are removed from the Committee on Naval Affairs; that when all Members who have military cantonments or posts in their districts are removed from the Committee on Military Affairs; and that when all Members of Congress who have rivers or harbors in their districts which need improvement are removed from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, then all the western Members will resign from the Committee on the Public Lands and will no longer seek the representation which has been denied them on the Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I would be very glad to make that kind of a contract with the gentleman. I do not believe he would be willing to accept that kind of a contract when made. But I am ready now, for one, to see that any man who has a navy yard in his district shall be removed from the Committee on Naval Affairs and any man who has a military post in his district shall be removed from the Committee on Military Affairs if every Member from a far Western State is removed from the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman go one step further with me and agree that no Member who has a large post office in his district, like Chicago, for instance, shall be a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads? [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. And the manufacturing districts ought not to be represented on the Ways and Means Committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will agree to that proposition, too, and let somebody who comes from a crossroads corners and who knows nothing about the industrial conditions of American life undertake to run the great enterprises of the Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is exactly the point. The gentleman and I now agree. In spite of what the gentleman first said, he thinks the same as I do; that, after all, better legislation will be enacted if the committees that prepare it are composed of Members who have some personal knowledge of the subject matter. At last we are in accord.

The gentleman from Illinois, however, made another argument to the effect that the public domain should be used as an asset of the Government. That policy was followed in the beginning and an effort was made to obtain large sums of money from the sale of the public lands in what now comprises the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, in order to pay the public debt occasioned by the Revolutionary War. That policy was demonstrated to be a complete failure, and Congress, with belated wisdom, finally passed the homestead law, which gave the public lands to settlers without money and without price. The homestead law is now recognized to be the most beneficent act ever passed by any Congress of the United States; but, according to the logic of the gentleman from Illinois, it should never have been placed upon the statute books. Let me remind the gentleman that it has been decided by the Supreme Court that under the Constitution the Federal Government holds the public lands in trust, and that Congress has no power except to dispose of such lands. The decision to which I have referred has been modified, but there is still good reason to urge that it was never contemplated by the authors of the Constitution that perpetual reservations would be created.

Gentlemen have repeatedly said that the Forest Service is costing the Government about $4,000,000 more each year than its total receipts. Now, what is the primary purpose of a forest reserve? It is to preserve the timber, not alone for this generation but for future generations, and many millions of dollars worth of valuable timber is thus being conserved. But evidently it is the thought of the Committee on Agriculture that because it has developed since the establishment of the national forests that an income could be derived from the grazing privilege, the cattlemen, the sheepmen, and the goat raisers who happen to graze their stock upon the forest reserves should be required to pay in enough money to meet the entire expense of a national policy of forest conservation. The stock raisers get no benefit from the timber. It is not held in public ownership for them. It is conserved for the benefit of the whole country; yet under the policy here proposed a serious attempt is being made to obtain enough from the grazing fees to meet all the expenses of the care and maintenance of the national forests. I have repeatedly pointed out that the cost of administering the grazing branch of the Forest Service is about $1,500,000 a year, and that the receipts from grazing fees last year were $2,600,000, so that so far as grazing is concerned the Government now makes a profit of over $1,000,000 a year out of the stock growers. It is now boldly proposed to obtain enough money from the few people who graze live stock on the forest reserves to pay for the general policy of conservation which has been adopted and carried on for the benefit of the whole people of the United States. Is it fair to place such a burden upon them?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is there any more logic or honesty or fairness in charging up to the grazing the entire care of the public timber than there is in charging up to the city of Chicago the entire expense of the extermination of the boll weevil?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They have no right to charge that entire expense up to the stock raisers on the western ranges.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question about the soundness of the argument of the gentleman from Colorado.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD two telegrams that I have received from representative stockmen of the State of Arizona. The first is from the vice president of the National Wool Growers' Association and the second is from the president of the Arizona Cattle Growers' Association:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 9, 1920.

CARL HAYDEN,
Washington, D. C.:

At this time, when the stockmen have been asked to produce their commodity as cheaply as possible, and are doing so in spite of the tremendous increase in operating expenses, the stockmen having permits on the several national forests in Arizona think this is unjust and are absolutely opposed to the proviso you quote in Agriculture appropriation bill, and we ask you to use your utmost efforts to defeat the proposed measure.

HUGH E. CAMPBELL.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 6, 1920.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
Washington, D. C.:

As to Agriculture appropriation bill, we seriously object to the provision whereby grazing fees on forest reserves might be increased over present charges. First, there is a general understanding among our cattlemen, based upon hearings had at Cheyenne, Wyo., in 1918, and Secretary Houston's letter of November 23, 1918, to Secretary Tomlinson that grazing charges for five years from 1919 on those holding five-year permits would not be increased; second, everything we use in our industry has doubled, trebled, and in many instances quadrupled in cost in the last three years, while we are not getting for our cattle scarcely any increase in price. In fact, range cattle are about the only thing in the food line that has not soared, yet our expenses have. The situation is that the range live-stock industry will be given a serious setback if our grazing costs are to be increased.

ARIZONA CATTLE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
CHAS. P. MULLEN, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Do I understand that all time has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The 10 minutes fixed by unanimous consent have expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I thought I had five minutes coming to me to speak about my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY: Page 47, line 2, after the semicolon insert the following:

"Provided, That $25,000 may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of ascertaining the appraised value of pasturage upon the national forests, which appraised value when determined may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be made the basis of the charge for grazing permits upon such forests."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado) there were—ayes 60, noes 6.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understood the amendment to be to insert after the semicolon. I ask unanimous consent that the semicolon be changed to a colon.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the punctuation will be changed, the semicolon being made a colon.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $400,000: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 may be expended for the construction and maintenance of boundary and range division fences, counting corrals, stock driveways and bridges, the development of stock watering places, and the eradication of poisonous plants on the national forests: Provided further, That hereafter no part of any funds appropriated for the Forest Service shall be used to pay the transportation or traveling expenses of any forest officer or agent, except he be traveling on business directly connected with the Forest Service and in furtherance of the works, aims, and objects specified and authorized by law: And provided also, That hereafter no part of any funds appropriated for the Forest Service shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons, without discrimination, including newspaper and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the paragraph, that part of it is new legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. HAUGEN. The word "hereafter" is new legislation. The object is to make it permanent law so that it will be unnecessary to carry the paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order? The word "hereafter" is subject to the point of order, but I think when the gentleman from Texas hears the explanation of it he will not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I reoffer the paragraph with the word "hereafter" stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 47, after line 6, insert: "For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $400,000: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 may be expended for the construction and maintenance of boundary and range division fences, counting corrals, stock driveways and bridges, the development of stock watering places, and the eradication of poisonous plants on the national forests: Provided further, That no part of any funds appropriated for the Forest Service shall be used to pay the transportation or traveling expenses of any forest officer or agent except he be traveling on business directly connected with the Forest Service and in furtherance of the works, aims, and objects specified and authorized by law: And provided also, That no part of any funds appropriated for the Forest Service shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons, without discrimination, including newspapers and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for the increase in this amount to $400,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no increase. There is a decrease of $50,000 under the current year and $150,000 under the estimates of the Secretary. The appropriation for the current year carries $450,000 for this purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. But there are some items in here which are increased. Does the gentleman think some of these items are proper?

Mr. HAUGEN. They have been carried in the item for a number of years.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the chairman of the committee investigated the necessity and propriety of carrying all the items in this paragraph?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. The word "hereafter" was inserted in the provisos prohibiting the use of funds for payment of traveling expenses except on official business and the preparation or publication of newspaper articles in order to make the provisos permanent legislation, so as to save the expense of printing this paragraph in the bill each year.

These provisos have been carried in the bill for a number of years. Unless the word "hereafter" is inserted they will have to be carried in the bill every year. They were first inserted a number of years ago, I believe, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee does not catch my point. For instance, in these forests there are a number of weeds and vegetable growths that sometimes are hurtful to cattle and live stock. Now, there has been put into this paragraph, in the interest of the live-stock men and at their special instance, for their special benefit alone, a provision that the Government shall spend a large sum of money every year to destroy certain weeds and vegetation that they do not want their stock to eat. Why, on every ranch in every State in the Union there are just such weeds, but the cattlemen do not attempt to destroy them on their own ranches; they let the stock take their chances, let the small per cent that eats them eat them and be damaged. Why should the Government spend thousands of dollars every year to make the grazing in these forests of millions of acres an absolute place of safety, so that there shall be no loss to the stockmen? I think it is a useless appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think it is a very wise policy.

Mr. BLANTON. Are we running the forests of the United States in the interests alone of the cattlemen?

Mr. HAUGEN. We have discussed at length the policy of the committee in reference to grazing fees and have called attention to the increase of revenue which would result from the committee's action. If adopted, we could afford to spend more money to improve the forests.

Mr. BLANTON. In order to make less than a million dollars profit we have spent something like a million and a half dollars out of grazing revenues to collect it. Does the gentleman think that is good business policy?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman knows my stand on the proposition. We spend over $4,000,000 in excess of the revenue.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, but not to collect the grazing tolls; we spend a million and a half to collect the million dollars profit on grazing tolls. Now we are asked to spend $400,000 more incidentally for the benefit of the pasturage for cattle and live stock.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the grazing fees were increased, the service would be self-sustaining. The only other way to make the service self-sustaining is to cut down expenses.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ANDERSON to the amendment of Mr. HAUGEN: Page 47, line 21, after the word "pay," insert "for the construction or maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fences, and other improvements in any national forest unless the fees charged for grazing permits are less than the appraised value of such grazing as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture or."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I must insist that the gentleman is offering an amendment in the nature of a limitation which changes the discretion now lodged by law in the Secretary of Agriculture.

The gentleman's amendment provides that no part of any funds appropriated for the Forest Service shall be used on any forest where the grazing fees are less than the appraised value thereof as fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture. That is obviously an attempt to compel the Secretary of Agriculture to make such an appraisal. The Chair has repeatedly ruled all such amendments to be out of order. The persistence of the gentleman from Minnesota in offering and reoffering the same amendment is worthy of a better cause.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. I want to call the Chair's attention to this fact: I have noticed carefully the previous rulings of the Chair on these matters, and the Chair has ruled similar amendments out of order on the ground that they were a limitation on the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture as fixed by existing law, and therefore not in order unless in some way they were a limitation on the expenditure. Now, the Chair will see from the wording of the amendment that this does not place any limitation on the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, for it is based on findings made by the Secretary himself and has no effect unless he does make this investigation; but, on the other hand, it is purely a limitation of expenditure as provided for under paragraph 825 of the rules, which says:

The practice of the House has established that the language of the limitation provides that no part of the appropriation under consideration shall be used for a certain designated purpose.

In this connection, I call the attention of the Chair to Hinds' Precedents, section 3918, which is a precedent exactly on all fours with the one we are considering at the present time. They were considering in the House an appropriation of one and one-half million dollars to defray the expenses of collecting revenue from customs. There was offered as an amendment "that no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used for the payment of expenses of customs fees where the expenses of said office are in excess of the revenue receipts therefor."

That is exactly the same kind of a limitation that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota proposes. Mr. Tawney made the point of order against the amendment. The Chairman held that "it is apparent that the amendment proposed is a limitation on the appropriation and not obnoxious to the rule, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order."

I maintain that is exactly the same question that we have in this amendment, and that it is purely in order under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. In order for the appropriation to be available at any place where the Secretary is charging a grazing fee, would it not necessitate him charging the specific fee fixed in this amendment?

Mr. SNELL. It is left entirely to his discretion. The value is fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, so that it is not placing any limitation on his discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. It would require him to appraise the value.

Mr. SNELL. In the other amendment he was permitted to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. It requires him to appraise the value of the grazing before he can use this appropriation in any particular form.

Mr. SNELL. It does not necessarily say that he must do it. I maintain that is exactly the same kind of an amendment that was admitted under the precedent which I have quoted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would direct the attention of the gentleman from New York to this language in the amendment—

Where the fees charged for grazing permits are less than the appraised value of such grazing, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture—and would ask the gentleman if that does not require the Secretary of Agriculture to do something which under the discretion he now has by general law he is not required to do?

Mr. SNELL. He may not determine that, but if he should determine it——

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman admits that in order for this appropriation to be available the Secretary of Agriculture must do something that he is now not required to do.

Mr. SNELL. Not necessarily. He may not necessarily do this, but if he does determine it, he should fix the prices accordingly.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the language of the proviso in the bill as originally reported by the committee was subject to a point of order. That point of order was made and the language went out. I presume that the opinion of the Chair on that matter was based on the word "hereafter," but if the Chair was of the opinion that the proviso as it is now in the bill is of itself legislation, I assume it would be in order to amend the proviso by any germane amendment. Basing the opinion on the rulings of the Chair as already made, it might very well be claimed, I think, that the proviso now in the bill is legislation and subject to the point of order; and if it is legislation, then it clearly is in order to amend it by a germane amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the language in the bill is clearly a limitation which does not run counter to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, as has been determined in the matter of fixing fees, but that the amendment proposed falls within the same category that the other amendments fell that were offered by the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Iowa yesterday. The same principle is involved. The Chair thinks that this necessarily infringes upon the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, as vested in him by existing law, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture more effectively to carry out the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," $21,770 of the moneys appropriated therein, or for carrying out its purposes, shall be available for the employment of agents, title attorneys, clerks, assistants, and other labor, and for the purchase of supplies and equipment required for the purpose of said act in the city of Washington.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. This is the item in reference to the new national forests in New Hampshire and North Carolina and other States. The total amount of the money authorized to be appropriated for the purpose stated in the paragraph has been appropriated, if I recall correctly. There was a request this year, I think, for an appropriation of several million dollars to continue the work of buying these so-called cut-over lands.

Mr. HAUGEN. Congress appropriated $600,000 for the current year to be expended under the Weeks Act. We have no estimate or supplemental estimate for appropriations to be thus expended for this year. The item referred to here, on which the gentleman reserves a point of order, carries no increase in the appropriation, but merely provides that this sum, $21,770, of the money already appropriated under the Weeks Act, may be available for the administration of the Weeks Act within the city of Washington. The sum has already been appropriated; it is just to say where and for what it is to be expended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may be that there was no supplementary estimate——

Mr. HAUGEN. There are a number of bills pending before the committee proposing further expenditure under the Weeks Act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If it was not in a supplementary estimate, then it was in the report from the commission having charge of it, because I have read it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They want a lot more money over that which was originally authorized and also which was subsequently authorized to keep on making purchases down there. I do not know whether they ought to have it or not, although I do not think this is a very good time to give it to them. What I want to get at is whether this $21,770 for the employment of agents and attorneys in Washington is in connection with acquiring future titles to lands for which no appropriation has yet been made.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois, I would say that the money carried in this bill is for administration in connection with the Weeks law, the law that has been referred to, providing for the purchase of land in the Appalachian Mountains, a part of it for taking care of business that has accumulated and a part for carrying on business as it will arise. The gentleman is not quite correct in saying that all of the money that has been appropriated has been used.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not say that. I said all that was authorized had been appropriated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. All that was authorized by law or carried by the law as originally passed has been used, and other money has since been appropriated, including the $600,000 carried in the bill passed a year ago. The Chief of the Forest Service reports that, including the $600,000, there was on the 1st day of July, 1919, $1,000,000 in the fund available for the purchase of land. That money, I presume, will be used from time to time and some administration will be necessary in connection with its use.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection to authorizing proper administration for the lands which have been or will be acquired under the appropriations heretofore made. I do not believe myself that it is desirable just at the present time, in the condition of the Public Treasury, to authorize the purchase of a lot of additional land down there to the extent of several million dollars. Much of this land, which it was originally said would cost only $1.50 or $2 or $3 an acre, has been purchased at a cost of $8 or $10 an acre, and land values have gone up quite a good deal because of the purchases made by the Government. I do not think it would hurt the Government to wait a few days or a year or two, and I am quite sure it would benefit the Public Treasury to wait a little while before we make additional appropriations.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture is entirely in accord with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Last year there was a strong demand upon the committee for an appropriation for the purchase of additional land under the Weeks law.

The committee refused to recommend such an appropriation to the House. The demand was later made upon the committee of the Senate; that committee yielded and the Senate passed the bill carrying $1,000,000. The conferees had considerable trouble in composing their differences, and finally there was a compromise on $600,000. That was carried in the last bill. There is no money carried in this bill, as those who have read it will see. That is because the committee feels just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expressed himself, that money ought not to be used now for that purpose. There is serious question of the wisdom of appropriating money and authorizing purchase of land for this purpose at any time, as some doubted the wisdom of the enactment of the Weeks law. But the majority of Congress felt that money ought to be so used; the law was passed, money was appropriated, and it has been used. As the gentleman from Illinois says also, at the time the law was passed we were told that prices of land we proposed to acquire were $1, $2, or $3 an acre, but prices much higher have been paid. As I remember the report, the average amount paid per acre is about $6. There are two very distinguished Members of the House who are members of the commission, and I understand the work of purchasing land or recommending the purchase of it has been largely if not entirely done by the House Members, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Agriculture, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], now a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. Those gentlemen have given a great deal of time to the work, and I believe they have rendered very valuable service to the Government—that is, providing the work should have been undertaken in the first place.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I very decidedly agree with the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, especially in reference to the two members of the commission, and also in other respects. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation and unauthorized by law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I will say that the Weeks law provides that lands purchased shall be a part of the forest reserves of the country and shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, as he administers other forest reserves. This money is for administration in connection with those reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the law referred to in the paragraph authorize the employment of agents, title attorneys, clerks, assistants, and other labor?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not remember the precise provisions of the law, but it authorizes the purchase of land, and it was absolutely necessary—always is when land is purchased—to have some one look carefully to the title and to prepare papers. Attorneys have always been employed to examine titles and to make investigations and do other work such as attorneys connected with the purchase and sale of land always make and perform.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Michigan, if this authority was in the law, then why cumber this bill with surplusage? This paragraph is either authorized or unauthorized. If it is authorized already then this provision has no business in the bill. If it is unauthorized then certainly it is new legislation. The present law does not provide that $21,770 of the former appropriation is appropriated and made available for the employment of agents, title attorneys, clerks, assistants, and other labor for the purchase of supplies and equipment required, and so on. That is new legislation, or the most of it is.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. On the 1st day of July, 1919, as I stated to the House, there was $1,000,000 in the fund available for the purchase of land. The commission, of course, has a right to spend that money, and, in all probability, it will spend a part of it. It is also true that many sales are pending and that many transactions are not closed. They must receive the proper attention of the commission and the department, and a portion of that attention can be given properly only by attorneys and clerks, and so on, capable of doing the work. It follows necessarily, it seems to me, an appropriation of this kind should be made in order properly to carry out the law and perform the duties imposed by the law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think the only point—and I would like to get the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]—in this proposition is whether they can employ these people in the city of Washington. I do not think there is any doubt about the authority to employ all this class of employees to make the purchase of supplies, and so forth, outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Then this provision is seeking to give them some privilege that they have not got under the present law?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think myself it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON. I just wanted to call attention to one thing in the law, so that the gentleman would have it in mind. Section 8 of the act provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall do everything to secure a safe title to the lands acquired under the act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have a provision of law, but I can not quote it, but it is very familiar with gentlemen who watch the appropriations, that the appropriation can not be expended in the District of Columbia, the lump-sum appropriation, for the employment of clerical help, unless it is specifically authorized in the appropriation. And it is a very common thing, as all gentlemen will know who watch appropriation bills, that where you provide for the employment of help it is specified as to whether it is to be used inside or outside of the District of Columbia. That is a practical proposition. That is what I want to call to the attention of the gentleman from Texas. They have the authority to employ all these people, they have the authority to do all these things, but now they have to pay help outside of the District of Columbia, and in many cases we find—and I presume that is the case here—in connection with their office work that much of this work can be done by officials now in the department. I hope they are winding up these purchases down here.

Much of this work can be done here at a less expense, partly with the officials who are now here, than it can be done if it is to be done up in New Hampshire or down in North Carolina. Different departments have absolutely established new offices in Baltimore. One department of the Government established a new office in Chicago, which I hope will be brought down here. It costs a good deal more there than it does here.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman ever heard of there being any economical coordination here in the work of any of the departments in Washington for 50 years?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; I have heard of lots of it.

Mr. BLANTON. There is not any of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is not as much as many of us would like, but there is a good deal. Most of the officials in most of the departments are very careful about these things. They want everything if we give it to them, but when we give it to them they are very careful about the expenditure of money in the main. I hope this service will be wound up. I think it can be done more cheaply here than elsewhere. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the superior judgment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 1 administrative assistant, $2,500; 3 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 12 clerks, class 4; 14 clerks, class 3; 3 clerks, at $1,440 each; 22 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,300; 75 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,100; 13 clerks, at $1,020 each; 15 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 machine operator, $1,100; 2 machine operators, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk, $960; 10 clerks, at $900 each; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $2,500 each; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $2,250 each; 1 food and drug inspector, $2,120; 15 food and drug inspectors, at $2,000 each; 15 food and drug inspectors, at $1,800 each; 1 food and drug inspector, $1,620; 13 food and drug inspectors, at $1,600 each; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $1,400 each; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,200 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,020; 5 laboratory helpers, at $1,000 each; 4 laboratory helpers, at $960 each; 3 laboratory helpers, at $900 each; 8 laboratory helpers at $840 each; 2 laboratory helpers, at $780 each; 1 laborer, $780; 26 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $720 each; 2 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $660 each; 27 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $600 each; 1 laboratory assistant, $1,200; 1 toolmaker, $1,200; 4 samplers, at $1,200 each; 1 janitor, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $1,800; 2 mechanics, at $1,400 each; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 1 mechanic, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $1,000; 1 mechanic, $960; 1 mechanic, $900; 2 student assistants, at $300 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,050; 1 skilled laborer, $900; 1 skilled laborer, $840; 1 messenger boy, $720; 7 messenger boys, at $600 each; 3 messenger boys, at $540 each; 6 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $420 each; 2 messenger boys, at $360 each; 7 laborers, at $480 each; 13 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $426,190.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 50, line 1, strike out "two messengers, at $840 each," and on line 3, after the sum "$840," strike out that portion of said line 3 down to and including the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four," and on line 4, after the first "each," strike out the balance of line 4 and all of line 5 and that portion of line 6 down to, but not including, the word "seven."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that anyone who is really in favor of economy in governmental affairs, in order to do his full duty with respect to that subject, must do everything within his power to bring about retrenchment. We must not leave one stone unturned in trying to bring about economy. Unless a Member goes to that extent he has not performed his full duty.

I am trying to perform my full duty in this respect. If there is a want of economy in this bill, I want the responsibility to be not on my shoulders, but on the shoulders of the Committee of the Whole, where it will be if there is a want of economy in the bill when it is passed.

The other day, when I called attention to the enormous messenger service that is in this bill—743 messengers for one department, 76 watchmen for the Secretary's office alone, for one little building down here—I asked that the number of messengers be decreased. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in his speech on that amendment admitted that there are too many employees. He admitted that there are too many clerks. He admitted that there are too many watchmen. He admitted that there are too many messengers.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], a member of this committee, said that there were too many messengers and too many clerks down here, and that one of the heads of bureaus they had before the committee told them that there were lots of incompetents whom they would like to get rid of, and when asked why they did not get rid of them he answered, "It is because they are in the civil service, and can not be gotten rid of without making complaint and charges against them and having a trial, and we do not want to take that responsibility." And it is left right there.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], one of the most distinguished statesmen this Congress has ever had, admitted that they are so thick—"that messengers are so thick down here in all the departments that they are falling over each other." The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the chairman of this committee, admitted in his speech that there are too many. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] admitted that there are too many. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said that there are 40,000 useless, idle clerks too many here in the city of Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. And I repeat it.

Mr. BLANTON. And he repeats it. Then, my God Almighty, if there are 40,000 of them too many, why not get rid of them?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is using profane language on the floor of the House, contrary to the rules of the House. He is the last man on earth who ought to call on Him.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I deny that I was using profane language. What I said was used earnestly and reverently.

Mr. KING. It is getting to be a regular practice on the part of the gentleman. In every one of his speeches he uses profane language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's words, "God Almighty," be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the gentleman's words be taken down.

Mr. KING. Let him go to the cloakroom when he wishes to use that kind of language.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will suspend.

Mr. BLANTON. I should like to have the Chair rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hear the gentleman from Texas pending the demand of the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he predicates his demand that the words be taken down upon the ground that they are a violation of the rules of the House?

Mr. KING. I think they are; but in deference to the suggestions of a number of very distinguished colleagues I withdraw the demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the demand. The Chair expresses the opinion, however, in view of the request of the gentleman from Texas, that the language of the gentleman from Texas would not constitute profanity, but the Chair expresses no opinion as to whether they are unparliamentary or not.

Mr. BLANTON. Gentlemen and colleagues, in the frame of mind in which I find myself just now I can not do otherwise than to exclaim, in the words of a very common west Texas expression, "Well, I'll be damned." I am here backing up what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says when he states that there are 40,000 too many employees in the departments here in Washington, and we are trying to send them home and save millions of dollars for the people. Yet we are to be hamstrung now by another gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], who is seeking to undo and prevent what Mr. MADDEN and I are trying to do in behalf of all the people of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, just a word in answer to what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has said. It is true that the bill provides for the employment of a large number of employees called messengers, but, as has been explained before, terms used do not always properly describe the work done. The committee might insist that words be used which more accurately describe the work, but we have rarely gone to that extent; and I will say, too, that it is not easy for members of the committee to determine for the head of a bureau just how many of these humbler employees he needs. We have very large confidence in the chiefs, and we have thought it incumbent on us to leave to them the question of determining how many of these lower-priced places there should be.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is very much mistaken in another respect. He says a large number of messengers, giving the number, are employed in one building. Evidently he does not know very much about the activities of the Department of Agriculture or how they are carried on. Over in the southwestern part of the city there is a village, or I had better say, a city of buildings, large and small, occupied by the numerous branches of the Department of Agriculture, and I tell him what he evidently does not know, that during this fiscal year the Government is paying $177,616 for the rent of buildings scattered all over the District, and all rented buildings, as well as Government-owned buildings, are used by the department. There are about 40 rented buildings of one kind and another in the District of Columbia occupied by the Department of Agriculture, so that when the gentleman speaks about a large number of watchmen being employed in one office or in one building he evidently does not know how or where the department does its work.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman what is meant by "Office of the Secretary"? Under that head it says, "76 watchmen." That is one building, is it not?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; it is not one building. The office of the Secretary is not a place at all; it is a branch, like a bureau, of the department. It is not the one little room the Secretary occupies on the first floor of the red brick building over there. That is not what is called the "Office of the Secretary," nor what we are dealing with here. The expression "Office of the Secretary" is used to include a number of activities or departmental affairs that are more or less directly under the charge of the Secretary, and they cover a large number of very important matters.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Has the chief of the Bureau of Chemistry stated that he needs all of the employees provided for in this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

During the consideration of this bill a great deal has been said about conditions and methods obtaining in the departments, and there has been no small amount of very severe criticism. The other day the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] adverted to the situation which he assumed to exist, criticizing it freely, and yet he seemed to confess an inability to deal with it. Now, why should inability be admitted? In case the conditions and methods are as described, why should not there be an investigation and an effort to find and apply corrections? If the concurrent resolution had been passed, to which I alluded last week, Senate resolution 3, introduced by Senator CUMMINS as early as May 29, such an investigation, I take it for granted, would now be in progress, and we would be enabled to determine whether the criticisms are well founded or not, and, if well founded, what action should be taken. But with reference to this matter, repeating what I said last Friday, there is an utter failure to attempt anything comprehensive in considering the evils which are charged to exist. Why should that be? Why should we content ourselves with talking and doing nothing, and making no attempt to do anything? In times past methods and conditions in the departments have been criticized, and Congress, whether under Republican control or under Democratic control, has aimed to go forward and act and not remain in the state of masterly, or, perhaps I may say, unmasterly, inactivity such as marks the conduct of business in Congress now. Commissions and committees have been organized at intervals, and every one of them has accomplished some result: The Cockrell Committee in 1887, which was a Senate committee; the Dockery-Cockrell Committee in 1893, which was a joint committee; the Keep Commission appointed by President Roosevelt in 1905; the Taft Commission on Economy and Efficiency appointed by the President in 1910; and in 1913 the United States Bureau of Efficiency, but possessing, as I understand, very limited functions.

Now I propose to introduce a resolution providing for the appointment of a general legislative committee, made up of Senators and Representatives, to take under consideration the methods and conditions in the departments and try to devise, if that should be found necessary in the light of the ascertained facts, some organized plan for the improvement of administrative work. [Applause.]

Many theories of administrative reform are being propounded and urged. They include, for instance, the budget system; but we are not getting anywhere with the budget system. When we passed the budget bill through the House we only touched two features of the system. We did not deal with that feature which is so essential, according to experienced men, of concentrating the appropriation work in the hands of one committee. Able men are writing books on administrative reform. Within a few hours I have had occasion to look over the work by Mr. G. A. Webber, with a preface by Mr. W. F. Willoughby, and I think Mr. Willoughby is right in the conclusion at which he seems to have arrived, that a legislative committee is preferable to any outside commission.

So I say that I shall soon take the liberty of introducing a resolution. It may not amount to anything, it may not get us anywhere, but it will be an expression of the opinion of one Member of this body in favor of reckoning in a practical manner with criticisms and determining whether there should be changes in departmental conditions and methods, and, if so, what the changes should be. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 3, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen of the committee, I was more than ordinarily interested in the remarks of our colleague from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] a moment ago, and, as is usual in his case, he spoke to the point, with much conviction in his utterance and with great respect from everyone who listened to him.

I received in the mail this morning an editorial from the New York Times. I do not know how much basis of fact this editorial has, but it is in line with the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia and contains some suggestions worthy of our observation. I read:

> A resolution introduced into and approved by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York instructs the executive committee of that body to urge Senators and Representatives in Congress from this part of the country to inquire into the number of civil employees now in the service of the Federal Government at Washington. The purpose of the inquiry is commendable for two reasons: First, if it ascertains and reports that a large number of these employees are superfluous, it will recommend that the number be decreased, thereby effecting a notable and needed economy in Federal expenditures; second, the release of these officeholders from their superfluous and unproductive employment will add so many needed workers to productive pursuits.

We all agree with these two conclusions, but here are the alleged facts, which I am not sure are true:

> The introducer of the resolution said that before the war there were 500,000 of these civil employees in the Government service. In the course of the war their number rose to 1,500,000. Since the armistice was signed there has been a reduction of some 650,000. There are still about 850,000—350,000 more than were deemed sufficient before the war. If these figures are correct—and it is a matter of common observation and knowledge that Washington swarms with supernumerary Federal employees—here are at least 350,000 persons who ought to be dropped from the Government pay roll and set to work in private enterprises. The investigation proposed ought to be made. Here is a sure means of saving, of lessening taxation, and enlarging production. We particularly recommend it to the Republicans.

I am sure that one of the most difficult problems that we are battling with is the disassociating from the pay roll people who came to us under stress of war. I am exceedingly anxious to know whether these figures are accurate or not. Three hundred and fifty thousand more than is necessary!

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the figures as to the number of people in the Government service before the war are substantially correct. I think the number of people employed on the civil pay roll during the war is probably underestimated by 500,000.

Mr. FESS. Then I think that the gentleman from Illinois would join in the desire to get at all of these facts, and if it is true that when a department or bureau built up under the war is discontinued many of the employees are transferred to other departments of the Government instead of being dropped, as has been charged here, we ought to get at that thing.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will understand that I am not supposing facts. I am one of those who do not undertake to know the facts in advance of a careful investigation. What I would like to ascertain from my distinguished friend from Ohio is whether he will vote for such a proposition as I have proposed, not only to get the facts as to employees but as to the methods we hear so much about.

Mr. FESS. I certainly will vote for any measure looking to a consummation of those propositions.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Then I hope that if we do that we will advance the Republican Party along the line which it ought to have performed heretofore. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask for two minutes to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. My friend from Virginia can not get away from the illusion that whatever happens in the Government that ought not to be must be attributed to mismanagement on the part of the Republican Congress. I dislike to think that a man with his level head, which everybody recognizes, would draw such a conclusion as that.

Here is our trouble, and my friend knows it: These employees are not under Congress, and this editorial, written to discredit the Congress of the United States for not compelling executive departments to do their duties, is ill advised.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. Does not the gentleman think that we have the power under the Holman rule to authorize the Committee on Appropriations to make a comprehensive survey of these departments? In other words, to pick out competent men——

Mr. FESS. I would say to my friend that without reference to the Holman rule we as the Congress have authority to start such an investigation, without questioning the parliamentary situation.

Mr. NOLAN. Would it not be better to have an investigation made by the Committee on Appropriations, so that it would not be a contest of wits between the members of the Appropriations Committee and the heads of these departments, and then when we are called upon to pass an appropriation bill providing salaries for these employees we could vote intelligently upon it and they could legislate intelligently upon it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. The suggestion of my friend from California [Mr. NOLAN] would lead to a very delicate and difficult situation—if we should proceed from the Committee on Appropriations—and it arises out of this fact: The Committee on Appropriations will carve down the estimates. They can not do it horizontally. They try to find what the necessity is and where the estimates can be reduced, and then, though they make the reduction, I am afraid that the departments will go right on, just as if the allowance had been made without the reduction, and later on will come in with a deficiency appropriation, and the first thing we know we will have made a splendid reduction in the original passage of the bill, but will ultimately vote the very thing on the country, under the form of a deficiency, which we thought to eliminate. The difficulty is to get at the real facts in these departments, and if there is any method by which, through an investigation, we can do it I say let us do it, because all the world knows that if you once attach people to the Government pay roll it takes an earthquake to remove them. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] says. [Applause.]

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offered the suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio for this reason: We have here to-day in Washington probably three times as many employees as we had prior to the war. I am going to be frank with you. I made a suggestion to the present Speaker of the House shortly after the Republican Congress was elected in 1918. At that time he had not announced his candidacy for the Speakership. He was the prospective chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I thought that inasmuch as the Republicans were going to take over the responsibility of appropriating money for the Government they ought at least to find some method of carving down appropriations in a systematic and intelligent way. I thought that the best method would be to get men who would make a common-sense survey of these departments. This was a short time after the armistice was signed, and if we did that then these men and women who held these positions would know that at least on the 1st of the following July no appropriations would be made by the next Congress for continuing them in positions where they could not render adequate service to the Government.

I have this in mind. I think it is a contest of wits between the executive heads, the heads of these bureaus, and the appropriating committees of Congress. The departments and the heads of the various bureaus want to expand, they want to get as many men and women on the pay roll as possible and make themselves as important as they possibly can. You can not sit in the Committee on Appropriations room and legislate intelligently upon this subject. There ought to be a survey made. Even under a budget system the Congress of the United States or the Appropriations Committee or the budget committee ought to have a little organization of men, competent, intelligent, with common sense, who could go from time to time to the departments and investigate. We ought not to depend upon the executive departments; we ought not to depend on any agency between the legislative branch and the executive branch to advise us. Your committee that is charged with the making of these appropriations ought to have this information at first hand, so that when these men come up here and ask for appropriations for any sort of expenditure, whether clerical help or anything else, they would have the facts and it would not be guesswork. That is what it is largely to-day, and it has been in times gone by. The appropriating committees ought to have an agency to investigate in an intelligent manner, so that they would be in a position to do what Dr. FESS is fearful they would do, namely, create the opportunity for a deficiency. Where there are statutory positions, simply slash and hold them to it. They do not create deficiencies when it comes to statutory positions. Most of your deficiencies are created through lump-sum appropriations and through the opportunity to manipulate appropriations and transfer and use one sum for this, that, or the other purpose. The law does not permit it, and if it be done, then we should not sanction it by the passage of a deficiency appropriation. The Appropriations Committee of this House, to my notion, without any great legislative authority or any grant of power, has sufficient authority in its hands to-day under the rules of the House to make these investigations in an intelligent and thorough manner. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] seems to think that we have not an adequate budget system here. The gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] states that the committee ought to make investigations and that no investigations are made. If you will turn to the report you will find that the bureau estimates for this appropriation were $42,098,238. The bureau estimates went to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary scrutinized every item and then transmitted the estimates to Congress calling for $37,672,857, a considerable cut. The committee spent over a month in investigating the estimates. We examined and cross-examined every bureau chief; and, as I say, we spent over a month on the hearings. We gave not only 8 hours a day to the work, but often 12.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, my suggestion is that outside of the investigations the gentleman has made he should have authority, if the committee does not have it now under rules of the House, to send men into the Department of Agriculture, or any other appropriating committee into any other department, to make a thorough investigation; and if I had my way about it you would have that little force of men at your disposal throughout the year.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have authority now. We worked, as I said, not only 8 hours a day, but 12 hours and more. We worked from early morning until late at night. We have done our duty; we have done the best we could.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman seems to misunderstand my suggestion. My suggestion is that your committee has authority to employ help to make a thorough investigation in dealing with the heads of these bureaus; if not, it is a simple matter to get the authority even through a rider on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. As I said, the department's estimate was $37,672,857. The committee reports $30,542,034, a cut of over $7,000,000 below the department's estimate, and more than $11,000,000 below the bureau estimates—a reduction of $3,359,727 below the appropriations for the current fiscal year. As you know, much of the appropriations carried in this bill is for salaries. It goes without saying that with the reductions made the department will have to lay off a number of the employees in the department. The $3,359,727 reduction under the appropriation for the current year means less salaries and less employees. The Department of Agriculture had during the war around 25,000 employees. It now has less, about 20,000. So this criticism lodged against the various departments does not lie against the Department of Agriculture. The Committee on Agriculture did its duty. It has cut the appropriation and the number of employees as suggested. The House has seen fit to increase the appropriation, and in that way the number of employees. That, of course, is up to the House.

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. JACOWAY. I do not recall from the gentleman's remark how much of this appropriation goes into salaries. Can the gentleman state how much?

Mr. HAUGEN. A large portion of it. It is practically all used for salaries, traveling expenses, hotel bills, and cars. The principal portion of it is for salaries.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How many employees were there before the war?

Mr. HAUGEN. There were about 16,000 in the department before the war. During the war the number was increased to about 25,000. The number is now about 20,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The suggestion made by the gentleman from Virginia as to the bill he proposes has certain merits in it, and I will be glad to support it if such a proposition comes before the House. But it does not reach the real solution of the difficulties which we are in. The real reason for the increase of these employees over what we had before the war and over that which we had some 10 years back is because the Government has taken upon itself so many different varieties of work and so enormously extended its functions. As long as we have a Railroad Administration, a Fuel Administration, a food-control administration, a Shipping Board, and a number of other departments that have been entered into by the Government since the war, or in recent years, so long will we have this vast number of employees. And the first thing we need to do is to get rid of some of these superfluous departments and not have the Government embark upon all sorts of enterprises that might be carried by private enterprise, and which would be better carried on by private individuals. The reason of the great increase in the number of employees in the Agricultural Department is not because they have added many to the messengers. The number of messengers may have been increased by a dozen or 15 or 20 in the last few years. There have been no great additions there, as I understand. It is because the Agricultural Department is continually expanding and taking on additional work, assuming functions in a great many cases which, I think, would be a great deal better done by the States, and, I know, very much more cheaply done if they were carried on by the States. There is no question about that.

I see my friend agrees. He has in mind, possibly, the national forests, and I am very much inclined to think that they might be administered better—and, I know, very much cheaper—by the States.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Better and cheaper.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But whether that be so or not, the difficulty lies right here, with the continual expansion of these departments. Instead of that, we ought to be cutting them down, seeing that they do not overlap, and stopping this continual duplication by different departments of the same kind of work. We have a Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department and we have other departments working on chemistry. That is only one instance of duplication. There are many others. If we could stop this duplication we would greatly reduce the number of employees.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the Agricultural Department and eight different bureaus publish different cookbooks, and in other departments they publish different cookbooks, making 21 in all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is where we would make a great saving, both in employees and expense, if we should stop this duplication going on, caused by each department trying to expand more and more and overlapping the lines that belong to another. That is what we need to seek. We need a commission to investigate, to determine where the work should be done and which department should do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I have read very carefully the article in this morning's Washington Post entitled "Attack of Daniels answered by Sims. * * * Sims upheld by Senator GLASS."

Mr. Chairman, it so happened I was present when Senator GLASS and Representative BYRNES testified. I heard every word of the testimony of each gentleman. In justice to Mr. BYRNES and Senator GLASS I feel it is my duty to denounce this article with reference to their testimony as a willful, deliberate, shameless, venomous, malicious, incorrigible perversion of the truth and facts.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not now.

Mr. THOMAS. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he had forgotten anything? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I invite any Member of this House, any gentleman in the United States, to take this article and the printed testimony of Mr. GLASS and Mr. BYRNES and read them side by side, and I am confident that every impulse of truth within him will join me in this righteous condemnation and denunciation.

Instead of Mr. GLASS contradicting Mr. BYRNES in several instances, as this paper would have the public believe, instead of his "upholding Admiral Sims" in any of the statements of Admiral Sims, Mr. GLASS corroborated every statement that Mr. BYRNES made upon this floor in his speech some time ago, every statement and fact that Mr. BYRNES testified to before this naval investigating committee, every one; and in not one instance did he "uphold" Admiral Sims in any of his statements. In my judgment he was more emphatic in his contradiction of the admiral's statement than was Mr. BYRNES. Neither contradicted the other. Both contradicted flatly Admiral Sims.

I have looked through other papers just to see if there was any other perverter of truth, any other deliberate falsifier—to see if any other correspondent willfully misrepresented the testimony of Mr. BYRNES and Senator GLASS—and have failed to find one. I read carefully the article in the New York World relative to their testimony and the articles in the New York Sun, in the New York Times, in the Philadelphia North American, in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, in the Baltimore Sun, and in the Baltimore American, and not one correspondent of these papers sustains in the least the statements in the Washington Post, but every single one of them states that GLASS and BYRNES flatly contradicted Sims, which they did. Every single one of them declares that BYRNES and GLASS corroborated each other; that is, GLASS confirmed the statements of BYRNES. In three of these newspapers the correspondents agreed with me, that Mr. GLASS went further in contradiction of Admiral Sims than did Mr. BYRNES.

Mr. GARNER. Who wrote this piece?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know. The article purports to be written by "Albert W. Fox."

Let me further say that this article is characteristic of the entire policy of the Washington Post, editorially and otherwise. It seems incapable of stating a fact or telling the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes, of raw materials grown or produced in the United States, in cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary, including repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to a building on the Arlington Experimental Farm, $68,260.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to get some information on this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] referred to the item for last year. I ask for information about this item. In the first place, I would like to know to what extent, if any, this is a duplication of work in the Bureau of Mines, under the chemistry department of the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. HAUGEN. Have you reference to the Bureau of Standards or to the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. LONGWORTH. To the Bureau of Mines as well as to the Bureau of Standards. The chief chemist of the Bureau of Mines carries on in his office a good deal of investigation as to coal-tar products and their relation to dyes, and so forth. Does this duplicate that to any extent, or am I correctly informed that this applies mainly to vegetable coloring matters used in food?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; it does not only apply to such coloring matters. I asked that question of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry. He stated that they are mostly coal-tar dyes, but that they do go beyond that. When I asked him the question, I had in mind the point raised by the gentleman a year ago. I remember the statement was made at that time that they confined their activities to certain dyes. I find that the bureau goes beyond coal-tar dyes.

I also asked the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry if there was any duplication of this work in other departments or bureaus of the Government. The answer was that if there was duplication it was not the fault of the Bureau of Chemistry but the fault of other bureaus.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the committee pretty well convinced that this is a valuable work?

Mr. HAUGEN. The committee cut the appropriation $31,020, as that amount is being used for the construction of buildings during the current year and will be completed by the end of the current fiscal year.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That was because of the fact that of the appropriation last year $31,000 was used for buildings.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much of this appropriation is to be used for buildings?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Nothing. That amount having been appropriated last year, and having been used, it is not necessary to appropriate it this year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But you have in your paragraph "alterations and repairs to buildings and additions."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That does not provide for new construction.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The committee, on the whole, is satisfied that this is valuable work and that this amount, which is still pretty large, is well worth the spending?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is a scientific investigable matter, and it is difficult for the Committee on Agriculture to determine. The gentleman from Ohio will remember that these matters have been up before. I remember very distinctly when another bill, carrying an appropriation for the Bureau of Standards, was up the statement was made by some member of the Committee on Agriculture that an item providing for similar work was carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill and that the latter one should not be carried. But gentlemen quite prominent on the floor said that there was enough work for both departments and that if either of them accomplished anything the result would be worth all that both of them might possibly spend.

I will say this, that before this work was undertaken there was a conference between the Chief of the Bureau of Standards and the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, and there was a conference between the heads of the two departments in which those activities are carried on, and it was agreed between them that the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture should ask for the money, and, having it, should carry on the work.

I think I am right in saying that that is where the matter rested. It was to be done by the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture. But a little later some one, in his enthusiasm and ardent desire to have this work begun and carried on, and thinking that the Bureau of Standards was the proper place to have it carried on, inserted in one of the other bills—I do not remember which one; the sundry civil, I think—a provision to enable the Bureau of Standards to carry it on, and refused to listen to some of us who said the work was in the hands of the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman recall the amount that was appropriated?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think it was about $50,000 for the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Necessarily there would be some duplication.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Perhaps there is some duplication.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It seems to me this is a very large item, and unless the committee are properly satisfied that it is worth it, I would be inclined to offer an amendment to reduce the amount somewhat.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In regard to this, as in regard to other highly scientific and investigational matters, it is difficult for the Committee on Agriculture to determine whether or not the money is needed or whether or not the work done by the expenditure of the money is satisfactory. We all know that wonderful results have followed experiments and scientific investigations. Sometimes the most helpful and satisfactory results have been reached when there was the least promise. Splendid results have been found in the most unpromising field, and when scientific gentlemen in whom we have confidence come before us and ask for appropriations to enable them to carry on work, we are loth to refuse them, as we hesitate to criticize the work they are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I appreciate the desire of the gentleman from Ohio and others to be informed in reference to this chemical work, and I send to the Clerk's desk and ask the Clerk to read in my time a brief memorandum in reference to some of the work of this bureau.

I ask the Clerk to read what is marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Work upon photosensitizing dyes was begun at the instigation of the War Department. The three important sensitizing dyes, pinacyanol, pinaverdol, and dicyanin, have been prepared and made available.

The new method developed in the bureau for the production of phthalic anhydrid by catalytic air oxidation is in successful commercial use, and cooperation was begun with another manufacturer during the year. Certain theoretical laboratory investigations remain to be completed before a final report of the whole investigation can be published.

From cymene a new photographic developer has been produced and the process published. Studies upon the chlorination of cymene are in progress. A report upon the preparation of 2-chlor-5-6-dinitro-cymene is ready for the printer.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That makes it entirely clear to me, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. LAYTON. I desire to offer a motion for the relief of the reading clerk. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The reading clerk does not seem to be at all distressed. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The laboratory and plant studies on the production of isopropyl alcohol and its oxidation to acetone, undertaken for the Bureau of Aircraft Production, have been completed. It seems probable that the process will prove of commercial value.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope that satisfies my friend from Ohio. I yield the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to revise his remarks. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to revise his remarks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not need the permission of the gentleman. I am perfectly familiar with these terms and can even translate them so that possibly, though not probably, the gentleman from Texas will understand them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I had already seen what the gentleman from Illinois has had read, but I intend to comment on it in a more serious way. It shows abundantly, as I think, that the operations of this chemical department are not at all necessary, and it is very doubtful whether they are useful in any kind of a way. They are operating largely for the benefit of the War Department instead of the Agricultural Department, and they are operating with reference to matters as to which it seems to me there is no need of their making these experiments. There are firms, and also individuals, that are carrying on in a far more extensive way experiments with these coal-tar dyes than it is possible for the Agricultural Department to do, and they are carrying them on without expense to the Government. A great corporation has been created, with a large amount of capital—I think half a million dollars—for the special purpose of making experiments in this line. The dye users of this country are contributing for that purpose, and none of these dye makers or users have asked that this bureau carry on any such investigations as it is now conducting. We have not only got this particular appropriation, but as the gentleman from Ohio noted a few moments ago, we have another appropriation, or at least had one last year in another bill, for another bureau that is carrying on very similar investigations.

Of course, this amount is not very large. It is in a field where if they do discover anything it may be useful, if for nothing else, for the advancement of science.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. I think the gentleman must be mistaken in stating that there is some other chemical laboratory in some other department doing the same kind of work that is being done in this laboratory.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not mean exactly the same.

Mr. CANDLER. Because this is confined to agricultural matters and subjects connected with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope my friend will pardon me. He is entirely in error in saying this is confined to agricultural matters.

Mr. CANDLER. It is confined to the investigation of questions that arise in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The development of photographic plates and the use of certain chemicals in that connection is not a matter connected with agriculture.

Mr. CANDLER. They use photographic plates in the work of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, the ordinary kind; but this is for war materials.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It relates to all materials grown or used in the United States, whether vegetable or otherwise.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct. It is not confined to the products of the soil. The amount is not very large. The committee has gone over it, and as I do not know how much will be necessary to be used in connection with agricultural products I shall not move to reduce it, although I think it ought to be reduced. The Agricultural Department ought to have nothing to do with coal-tar dyes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups by the utilization of new agricultural sources, $15,000.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRISP: Page 51, line 22, after the figures "$15,000," insert: "Provided, That $7,500 of said amount may be used for investigation and experimenting in the production of sirups, sugar, starch, dextrine, and other commercial products from the sweet potato."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, it was intended that $7,500 should be used for that purpose, and it is so stated in the report. But if the gentleman prefers to have it incorporated in the bill we have no objection.

Mr. CRISP. The committee kindly gave it at my request, and I did not offer the amendment until I had conferred with the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes"; to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the revision of the United States Pharmacopœia and development of methods of analysis, and for investigating the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and for inspecting the same before shipment when desired by the shippers or owners of these products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before the said products are allowed to be sold therein, $579,361.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 52, line 13, after the semicolon, insert: "Provided, That not more than $4,280 shall be used for travel outside of the United States."

Mr. HAUGEN. The committee has combined two items in this one paragraph. One item previously appropriated $4,280, and contained authority for travel outside of the United States. The other item appropriated around $600,000. So as not to make this larger amount available for travel outside of the United States the insertion of the proviso making only the $4,280 available for such traveling expenses, has been suggested. It seemed proper that the proviso should be inserted.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Is it the same amount that we have carried heretofore for that purpose?

Mr. HAUGEN. The proviso that not more than the amount previously carried in the smaller item—that is, $4,280—shall be used for traveling expenses outside of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in regard to this investigation of the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries. What is being done under this paragraph? It seems to be new language in the bill, but, as I understand, it is for work that has been heretofore carried on by the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. HAUGEN. The work is in connection with the export and sale in foreign countries of various of our food products.

Mr. TILSON. Are not the examinations and tests paid for by the individuals who have the work done; that is, by the business men who transact business in foreign countries?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; but that money paid for the inspection and examination is not available for this work. It is covered into the Treasury.

Mr. TILSON. This is work that is being paid for by those who do the business, as I understand the situation.

Mr. HAUGEN. The testimony before the committee shows that prior to five or six years ago, when this item was inserted, the work was done without charge. It seemed that the exporter ought to pay the cost of the examinations, and at present he is charged as nearly as can be estimated for the examination and for furnishing of a certificate. The money is covered into the Treasury, so does not become available for expenditure on this work.

Mr. TILSON. That is my understanding. The work has been increased, more investigations have been made from time to time, and ought to increase with the increase of foreign trade. There will be more work to be done, but the committee is cutting down the appropriation which may be used for the purpose, and this in the face of the fact that the work is self-supporting. It seems to me that wherever there is a self-supporting activity of the Government it ought to be encouraged.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If it is self-supporting, how will this injure the work?

Mr. TILSON. Because there is nothing in the nature of a revolving fund. The more work that is done the more it takes out of the appropriation. If it were so that the business could go on and the money received go back into the appropriation so that it could be used over again, the gentleman would be right; but, as a matter of fact, the money received becomes miscellaneous receipts and is covered back into the Treasury. In view of this state of facts, I wonder if the appropriation is sufficiently large.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will say to the gentleman that there is a transfer of $15,140 to the statutory roll; besides, there is a considerable cut in this appropriation. The committee thought that this amount would be sufficient.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of soils, in cooperation with other branches of the Department of Agriculture, other departments of the Government, State agricultural experiment stations, and other State institutions, and for indicating upon maps and plats, by coloring or otherwise, the results of such investigations, $178,900.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the sum of "$178,900."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, line 11, after the word "investigations," strike out the figures "$178,900."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if we could strike this $178,900 out of the bill and save it, we could reduce the taxes of the people that much. That is what is apparently in the minds of everyone, to cut down appropriations and save taxes. I would be with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] in his suggestion a while ago that we have this investigation, if the investigation would amount to anything after we had it. It would mean only additional expense with nothing accomplished. The question is how to save this money. We could save it if we could get rid of the 40,000 useless, idle employees in this city who, as everyone agrees, ought to be sent home, yet we take no steps to send them home. We could get rid of them if we would just pass a simple little law giving the heads of the departments the authority to discharge them. We would not have to have any investigation, because after we had the investigation it would be just as impossible for the heads of the departments to get rid of them as it is now. If we would pass a law authorizing the heads of the departments, civil service or no civil service, to discharge every incompetent and inefficient employee in their discretion, we would meet the situation as it should be met. Until we pass such a law, the civil service protects them. The gentleman from Michigan called attention to the fact that as it is now we have here inefficient and incompetent employees in this department; that the heads of the department told him that they were incompetent, but they could not get rid of them under the civil-service law without filing charges and going through a trial, which they would not do. If that is the civil-service law, the thing to do is to change the law and give these heads of departments the right to discharge, in their discretion, whenever there is an incompetent or an inefficient employee. What is there to keep Congress from passing a law of that kind and other needed laws? We could save not only this sum but we could save over $100,000,000 this year if we took action of that kind. What is to keep us from taking it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; if the gentleman can tell us what is keeping us from enacting such a law, if the gentleman will be honest and tell us.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will tell the gentleman what I honestly believe.

Mr. BLANTON. What is it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The situation we had before this law was enacted and various departments were turned into political bureaus——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I can not yield for that. Here is what is keeping us: We are afraid to do it. We are afraid to pass a law of that kind. The gentleman knows it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. My amendment is to save this item of $178,900. I moved to strike that sum of $178,900 out, and am trying to save it. It may be that I can save it, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] would let me get the matter before my friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], as, perhaps, he would help me.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, another point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order. He is speaking about Congress being afraid of something.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that while in a general way the gentleman from Texas was discussing the amendment, yet that the latter part of his remarks goes somewhat beyond the scope of the amendment. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, here is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], a member of this committee, who admits that he tried to save these sums of money; that he asked the head of the department what was the matter, why he had to appropriate so much for so many employees, and that the head of the department told him that he had many incompetents. He was asked why he did not get rid of them, and he said that he could not do it. When asked why he could not do it, he replied that he could not without making charges against them and having a trial, and that it was embarrassing to him to make complaints and charges against employees and having a trial, and that that was what he had to do under the law, and which he would not do. The gentleman from Michigan said that because of that fact his committee just blindly allowed every one of these items of thousands of dollars and millions of dollars asked for in this bill, embracing 76 watchmen for the Secretary's office and 743 messengers for the department, and we stop right there.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what we are up against. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and demonstration within the United States to determine the best method of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, $192,900: Provided, That the product obtained from such experimentation may be sold at a price to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the amount obtained from the sale thereof shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is an appropriation that is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is authorized by the same authority granted for other appropriations under the organic act in the interest of agriculture to promote agriculture.

Mr. RUBEY. I desire to submit a further point, and that is that this is a continuing appropriation. It was made first in the year 1917. It is money appropriated, and it is an investment out there, and all of it will be lost unless we continue this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard further?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; except to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that under the organic act it is the duty of the department to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word, and this is clearly in the interest of agriculture. These are experiments in the development of potash, and the appropriation has been carried for some years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I suppose it is unnecessary for me to say to the Chair that potash is one of the most important chemical elements connected with agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is being used in fertilizers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the history of the appropriation carried in the present item is that it was first included in the Agricultural appropriation bill for the year 1917, and under that appropriation of $175,000 a plant was built out on the Pacific coast at Summerland, Calif., for the purpose of harvesting giant kelp, which grows in the sea, and experimenting with it with a view of making commercial potash. The item was continued in the appropriation bill for 1918 and also in the bill for 1919. I made no point of order against it then because it was an experiment growing out of the necessities of the war, but in reply to the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] that an item of this kind would be authorized under the organic act, I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the language of the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture. It reads:

There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

While it is true that potash is an important element in the manufacture of commercial fertilizers, it has many other uses. I do not think that the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture would be sufficient to authorize an appropriation to carry on an experimental manufacturing plant and authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of the products of that plant in a commercial way. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] argues that it would be entitled to come under that exception to the rule which permits an appropriation bill to continue a public work, but I do not regard this as coming within that classification. The plant out there is a completed plant. It was built with the appropriations that have been heretofore authorized by Congress, and it would be merely continuing the operation of the plant and would not be the continuance of a public work. If we had a plant out there in the process of building and which was not completed, I concede it would probably come within that classification.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The purpose for which the investigation was made has not yet been completed. It is in process of completion and one more year will complete the work, and complete the demonstration for which the plant was established.

Mr. BLACK. In reply to that I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when this item was up for consideration in the appropriation bill of 1919 I endeavored to have it stricken from the bill and the same argument was then made very forcibly by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] that it would only take one more year to complete the experiment, and then it would be through. That year has gone by, and we have the committee again reporting it and imploring Congress to continue it for still another year, and I dare say that if we do continue it then when the next appropriation bill comes around the representatives of the department will be before the gentleman's committee urging that for some reason or other the experiment be continued for another year, and so it will be, on and on, until Congress finally cuts it off. I realize that this is not arguing the point of order, and I just want to submit to the Chair one more observation and then I shall not argue the point further.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The last appropriation made will not expire until next July, and by the time next July runs around it is estimated that $100,000 will be turned into the Treasury from this plant, which will come within $27,000 of returning as much as the appropriation calls for.

Mr. BLACK. I will not reply to that observation by giving the facts as I understand them to be, because it would be an argument upon the merits of the proposition, and I take it that the Chair does not care to hear about the merits of the proposition, but only with reference to the point of order which is pending.

In the last appropriation bill was carried an item of the following nature:

For experiments in the manufacture of rare chemicals for use in chemical research, including investigation of domestic sources of supply, $10,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture may furnish upon application samples of rare chemicals to investigators for research work and charge for the same a price to cover the cost thereof, such price to be determined and established by the Secretary.

And so on. Now, to that provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make these chemical experiments the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who now occupies the chair, made a point of order, and after some little argument the Chair said:

The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

That is found on page 528 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 2, 1919.

It occurs to me that the two propositions would probably rest upon the same ground, and unless the organic act is broad enough to cover the one it would not be broad enough to cover the other.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas correctly states the history of this item, but he has not read the language under which the work covered by this item was originally authorized. The Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 contains this language:

For the investigation and demonstration within the United States, to determine the best methods of obtaining potash on a commercial scale—

Now, I ask the attention of the Chair to this language—

Including the establishment and equipment of such plant or plants as may be necessary therefor, $175,000.

Now, there is specific language in this act authorizing the establishment of this plant. It has been established. It is in operation. It has been, for three or four years, since the original appropriation was made, the object of a continuing appropriation, and I want to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that the language of the rule does not limit the appropriation to public works. But the language of the rule is:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

Now, of course, the establishment of this station was authorized by law in the appropriation act of 1917.

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public work and objects as are already in progress.

Now, here is a plant in operation, an object of appropriation in progress. This appropriation is not only within the rule, but it is within the reason of the rule.

It would be unfortunate, indeed, if Congress, having begun a public work, a continuing public work, through an item in an appropriation bill which was not in order at the time it was offered, could not thereafter by an item in an appropriation bill continue that improvement to its completion.

Now, this proposition contemplated originally not a long-continuing experiment such as many of the experiments in the Department of Agriculture are. Many of the experiments in the Department of Agriculture continue indefinitely; you might say they are never concluded, but this object was one which it was expected would be definitely concluded eventually; that is, that we would determine the precise question for which this plant was erected. That object has not been determined, and until it is determined this work is, and the object of this appropriation is, a continuing object in the sense of the rule. And I want to emphasize to the Chair again that where an item has come into a bill, which was out of order in the first instance, that Congress ought not to be precluded thereafter, by someone raising a point of order, from continuing the work originally authorized. And that is all that this does.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] makes the point of order upon the paragraph beginning in line 16 and ending in line 22, as follows:

For investigation and demonstration within the United States to determine the best method of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, $192,900.

The Chair finds that in the agricultural appropriation act approved August 11, 1916, chapter 313, of 39th Statutes, page 465, an item similar in form was carried, with the additional language:

Including the establishment and equipment of such plant or plants as may be necessary therefor.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] contends that this investigation and demonstration, a plant having already been established, is the continuation of a public work. The Chair does not think that the continuation of an investigation such as this, a scientific investigation by a department, constitutes such a work in progress as may be denominated a continuation of a public work. In order that the rule should apply, something more tangible than an investigation in a plant or establishment should be shown in the authorization under which the appropriation is sought.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] bases his claim that this is not a proper matter for investigation and demonstration within the organic law under which the Department of Agriculture operates. Something has been said in discussing the point of order as to the purpose of the authorization of this investigation and demonstration as carried in the language of the item. But upon an inspection of the language appropriating this $192,900 for determining the best method of obtaining potash on a commercial scale and authorizing its sale at a price to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chair is inclined to believe it goes somewhat beyond the scope of the organic law and thinks it is not such work as may properly be said to be authorized by the organic law, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON as a new paragraph: After line 15, on page 56, insert:
"For the completion, operation, and maintenance of the Government kelp plant at Summerville, Calif., $192,900."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to argue the matter. The amendment which I have offered covers the item for the kelp plant against which the gentleman from Texas made the point of order. The work has been in progress there for some time. There is every reason to expect that during the next fiscal year this plant will be so successfully operated that it will pay the entire cost of its operation and maintenance and a part of the original cost of the building and the equipment. The experiment has been a very interesting and a very profitable one from the standpoint of the industry and the standpoint of the Government. We are manufacturing at this kelp plant a character of charcoal which sells for a very high price, and it is expected that this charcoal, together with the by-products, including iodine, will be sufficient, without the production of any potash at all, to pay the cost of the operation of the plant.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have been informed that the Government experiments in the making of potash from kelp have been a great success in Japan. Has the gentleman any information about that?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not familiar with the particular experiment over there.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They have been practically continued along the same lines as ours, but have proven a commercial success, as I understand.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think there is no question in the world but that with the experimentation now going on they will demonstrate the commercial feasibility of the production of potash in combination with the by-products which result and its production on a commercial scale under normal conditions.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Will there not be some other products produced from this plant?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; but the question of the point of order was with reference to the concluding proposition.

Mr. CANDLER. If the gentleman will permit, in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], I may say that the testimony in committee showed that it was the belief that that could be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two or three words in order to finish my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] moves to strike out the last two or three words.

Mr. CANDLER. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] the testimony before the committee showed that it was believed and it is entirely probable that this next year the proceeds of this enterprise will pay the expenses, and therefore it becomes self-supporting.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I contend that whether we look at the origin of this item as an experiment, or look at it as a business enterprise, in either event it ought to be discontinued; and I believe that if any Member will take the trouble to read the hearings on the item he will agree with me.

Now, what is the situation? Let us go back into the history of the experiment. At the time the World War broke out we were getting our potash supply from Germany, and getting it at a cost of about 6 cents a unit; a unit is 20 pounds, and that made it cost about $60 a ton. When the war broke out that supply was absolutely shut off, and the price went up hurriedly by leaps and bounds to $400 or $500 a ton, and there was a great scarcity. The Committee on Agriculture, responding to the needs of the country, brought in an appropriation, included in its regular bill for 1917, authorizing the Department of Agriculture to erect out on the California coast a plant to harvest kelp, a great seaweed, and reduce it into potash. That appropriation was $175,000. It was not entirely expended, and was continued and made available for 1918. Then for 1919 $127,600 more was appropriated, and the appropriation for the present fiscal year is $127,600. That makes a total expenditure of $430,200 in this enterprise. And the committee is now wanting $192,900 more.

Now, how much potash have they made and sold? The gentlemen say it is going to be a self-supporting proposition. When they had the hearings on this very identical proposition and when the facts showed that the bigger part of $430,000 had been spent, a question was asked, on page 24 of the hearings, of Mr. Whitney, the Chief, I believe, of the Bureau of Soils, and he said:

Mr. WHITNEY. I would like to say a word of commendation here. During this period of experimentation, when we have had to devise everything, all kinds of apparatus, have had to test them and rebuild them, we have actually sold during this period approximately $80,000 worth of potash.

And remember that has been sold at a price ranging all the way from $450 a ton down to $200 a ton, and despite the abnormal price prevailing, and despite the expenditure of the bigger part of $430,000, they have sold only $80,000 worth of potash. I am not criticizing that result, except to emphasize that this is strictly an experiment, and having now continued it for four years we have lost enough on it and should stop.

Now, gentlemen will argue that if we continue this experiment for another year the Department of Agriculture will put the business on a self-sustaining basis. Let us analyze that claim. It is stated in the report of the committee that 150 units of potash will be produced in a day. That will be 3,000 pounds of potash per day or 1½ tons, or 450 tons for the whole year of 300 working days. Now, how much have they got to get for that 450 tons of potash if they put the plant on a self-sustaining basis? They will have to get at least $400 a ton to put it on a self-supporting basis, unless you take up the by-products that they talk about. Of course, everybody knows it is absurd to talk about getting $400 per ton for potash, now that the war is over.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, they will not get anything like $400 a ton. That is evident enough.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But they do claim that they will get quite a large amount out of these by-products.

Mr. BLACK. Yes. They will claim that; but according to their statement they have not done it thus far. They talk about this experiment being put on a self-sustaining basis by reason of the fact that they will sell carbon. They say they will make charcoal out of the kelp.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Now, I want to pay a little attention to the statement about by-products. Those in charge of this experiment admit that they can not put it on a self-sustaining basis by the production of potash. They admit that they will produce only 450 tons next year. Hitherto they have not produced that much, and I do not feel at all assured that they will do it next year, but they say they will produce charcoal from kelp, and that with the charcoal they will put it on a self-sustaining basis. They seem to be putting the charcoal ahead of the potash now. According to the testimony of Mr. Turrentine—

The output of the plant in this material—is yet small, but we have every assurance that the apparatus now being installed will yield this in large quantities.

Speaking of charcoal—

That is in the future. Predictions are always easy to make and usually department heads are not overconservative in making them.

All of the kelp plants owned by private industries suspended immediately when the war was over, because they knew that they could not harvest a great seaweed, composed of 90 per cent water, gather it by submarine machinery, haul it into a boat, transport it to a factory and produce only 30 pounds of potash from a ton of seaweed, and compete successfully with the great natural deposits of potash in Alsace-Lorraine and Strassburg, deposited there by nature during thousands of years of development. That is a proposition that I think is self-evident on its face. It is just as reasonable to suppose that you can go out here and cut down our forests and reduce them to charcoal and compete with the great coal mines of the country for fuel as it is to suppose that you can go out into the Pacific Ocean and harvest kelp growing in 40 feet of water and which is itself 90 per cent water, convey it to a plant and reduce it to potash, and do all of this in successful competition on a commercial basis. What we have done has been wisely done, I am willing to take for granted, but after we have shown that potash can be made from kelp it seems to me that we have accomplished the purpose of our experiment and we are without excuse to continue it further.

The small amount of potash produced by this plant is of but little consequence as a commercial proposition, because prior to the war the country used at least 200,000 tons of potash, and could have used profitably 400,000 tons, and this plant is only making the small amount of 450 tons a year. What does that amount to in comparison with the great amount used.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman has inadvertently understated the consumption. It is very much greater than the gentleman stated.

Mr. GARNER. That only strengthens the gentleman's argument.

Mr. BLACK. That only strengthens my argument. I said it was at least 200,000 tons prior to the war, and I meant that to apply to agricultural uses.

Now, what I want to say before my time is up is that I have no objection to the Department of Agriculture making an investigation for other sources of supply of potash in the United States. We have had in the bill for the last 8 or 10 years an item appropriating $36,840 for that purpose, and we have it in the bill to-day. I have made no objection to that, but since 1915—I did not go back further than that—we have already spent $235,000 for that purpose. It is a continuing appropriation, and I have no special objection to it, but I do protest against further experiments of the kind carried in this item after we have already demonstrated the results.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the present hard-working crew deserves another shift, and I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. HAUGEN. I hope the gentleman will withhold that until we finish this bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-one Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12272, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 11368. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5665. An act for the relief of Carlow Avellina;

H. R. 3620. An act to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to change the names of vessels;

H. R. 683. An act for the relief of William E. Johnson; and

H. R. 396. An act to authorize the payment of certain amounts for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 154. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily in emergency hospitals to be established in the State, and for other purposes.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to report the bill making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I submit that the ranking minority member of the committee [Mr. DENT] is on the floor, and I think he should be recognized to reserve all points of order on this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I think any Member of the House has the right to reserve points of order on a bill.

The SPEAKER. The proper time to reserve points of order is after the bill has been reported. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill (H. R. 12467) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. DENT. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ROSE, for two days, on account of official business.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted—

To Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin to revise and extend remarks on the item of the forest products laboratory in the agricultural appropriation bill.

To Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY to revise and extend remarks on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

To Mr. KING to extend remarks in the RECORD in favor of returning the bodies of our dead soldiers from France.

To Mr. HAUGEN to revise and extend remarks on the subject of grazing fees.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, February 12, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Coast Guard for the fiscal year 1921, additional to the amount heretofore estimated for (H. Doc. No. 646); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting an alternative estimate of appropriation required by the District of Columbia for salaries of the fire department, fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 647); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting estimate for a deficiency appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration, 1920; to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12467) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 620), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6198) authorizing payment of compensation to Swanhild Sims for personal injuries reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 618); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. VAILE, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. J. Res. 134) to readmit Augusta Louise de Haven-Alten to the status and privileges of a citizen of the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 619); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12453) granting a pension to Susie Dixon; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12455) granting a pension to Sarah J. Stapleton; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12454) granting an increase of pension to Elyza Settles; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 12458) to establish an additional fish-cultural station in the State of Texas; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12459) to establish an additional fish-cultural station in the State of Texas; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SMITH of Illinois: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 289) serving notice to Great Britain to cancel and abrogate a certain treaty, dated January 11, 1909, relating to the boundary waters and questions arising along the boundary of Canada and the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 12468) granting an increase of pension to James S. Henry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 12469) to authorize the award of a medal of honor to Chief Gunner Robert Edward Cox, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. EMERSON: A bill (H. R. 12470) for the relief of Frederick G. Barker; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. EVANS of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 12471) for the relief of Andrew Spence; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 12472) granting a pension to Earl W. Maitland; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 12473) granting an increase of pension to Jessie Wiggins Conn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HULINGS: A bill (H. R. 12474) granting a pension to Mary E. Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 12475) granting an increase of pension to Morgan J. Treadway; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOON: A bill (H. R. 12476) granting an increase of pension to Scott Thompson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 12477) for the relief of James W. Creighton; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WARD: A bill (H. R. 12478) for the relief of Lieut. Col. Henry C. Davis; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 12479) granting a pension to Jennie Nix; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1478. By the SPEAKER: Petition of taxpayers of the counties of Washington and Fayette, in the State of Idaho, relative to better roads, etc.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1479. Also, petition of the Kenilworth Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, indorsing the proposed merger of electric railways; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1480. By Mr. ANTHONY: Petition of citizens of Leavenworth, Kans., indorsing House bill 3149; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

1481. By Mr. BABKA: Petition of citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, indorsing the Lehlbach-Sterling bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

1482. By Mr. BUTLER: Petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, indorsing the Sims bill, House bill 262; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1483. By Mr. COLE: Petition of citizens of Cleveland and Galion, Ohio, indorsing House bill 3149 and Senate bill 1699; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

1484. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of Jamaica Board of Trade, opposing the passage of the Cummins and Esch railroad bills in their present form; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1485. By Mr. HULINGS: Petition of the United Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West, of San Francisco, Calif., relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1486. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Petition of J. E. Beal, pastor, and 31 other members of Methodist Episcopal Church, of Holt, Mich., favoring legislation to prohibit interstate transmission of race-gambling information; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1487. By Mr. MAHER: Petition of Jamaica Board of Trade, opposing the passage of the Cummins and Esch railroad bills in their present form; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1488. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the United Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West, of San Francisco, Calif., relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1489. Also, petition of the Religious Society of Friends, of Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1490. By Mr. SANFORD: Petition of citizens of Troy and Watervliet, N. Y., relative to the Irish situation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1491. By Mr. SCHALL: Petition of the Aero Club, University of Minnesota, favoring Senate bill 3348, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1492. Also, petition of the Trades and Labor Assembly, the Nonpartisan League, and farmers' organizations of St. Paul, Minn., opposing the Esch-Cummins railroad bills, etc.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1493. Also, petition of the Minneapolis City Council, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1494. Also, petition of the Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly, relative to the Army stores; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1495. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition protesting against the enactment of the Sterling-Graham sedition bill by Union No. 219, International Molders' Union, Rochester; Local No. 405, International Molders' Union, Ellwood City; Chartiers Valley Central Labor Union, Canonsburg; and United Trades Council, West Brownsville, all in the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, this is a sacred day in our national calendar. We are reminded again of that great beacon light of our national history who recorded himself as conscious of being the agent of the Divine and who said, "I am conscious at every moment that all I am, that all I have, it subject to the control of a higher power." We bless Thee that he was able through Thy grace and power to see the light and to follow the light in the preservation of our great Nation. Now we pray Thee to give us the spirit of the fathers that we may do well and faithfully the duties of this day and all the days that are before us, and lead onward and upward in the paths of progress and righteousness and peace. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION (S. DOC. NO. 217).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, estimate of deficiency appropriations for "Expenses of regulation of immigration, 1920," which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill, Senate bill 1699. I ask that it may be read and printed. It is short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section, to be numbered section 16, the following (section 16 of the bill to be numbered section 17):

"The Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to select three actuaries, one of whom shall be the Government actuary, to be known as the board of actuaries, whose duty it shall be to annually report upon the actual operations of this act with authority to recommend to the Commissioner of Pensions such changes as in its judgment may be deemed necessary to maintain the system upon a sound financial basis. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to submit with his annual report to Congress the recommendations of the board of actuaries. It shall be the duty of the board of actuaries to make a valuation of the 'civil-service retirement and disability fund' at the end of the first year following the passage of this act and at intervals of every five years thereafter, or oftener, if deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions. The compensation of the members of the board of actuaries, exclusive of the Government actuary, shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] has in his possession one of the two existing copies of the Gettysburg address, written throughout in Mr. Lincoln's own hand. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that Senator KEYES, on this anniversary of Lincoln's birth, may read the Gettysburg address from the original manuscript in Mr. Lincoln's hand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. KEYES. It so happens, Mr. President, that I am fortunate enough to possess and to have here to-day the manuscript of President Lincoln's famous Gettysburg address, and I shall be very glad, indeed, to comply with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

It may be of interest to the Senate to know a little of the history of this manuscript. It was given by President Lincoln to Edward Everett, and he presented it, together with the manuscript of his own address, also delivered at Gettysburg, at the consecration of the National Cemetery on the 19th of November, 1863, to Mrs. Hamilton Fish, who was then president of the executive committee of the ladies having charge at the fair in aid of the sanitary commission held in New York in March, 1864, to be disposed of for the benefit of our soldiers of the Civil War. These two manuscripts were purchased at this fair by an uncle of mine and have been in my family ever since.

I will now read, Mr. President, from the Lincoln manuscript:

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent, a new Nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived, and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives, that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here, have, thus far, so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that, government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

[A facsimile of the original manuscript, together with a letter explaining its authenticity, will be found on the following pages.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of Abraham Lincoln I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 13, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

ISHAM & LINCOLN
HONORE BUILDINGS
CHICAGO

My dear Miss Keyes:

Mrs. Ida M. Tarbell has sent me your letter of the 14th inst. in which you request a copy of the address made by Mr. Lincoln at Gettysburg, and also a copy of the letter written by Mr. Lincoln to Mrs. Bixby of Boston, Massachusetts.

I am pleased to say that I have a collection in lithographic copy called "Autograph Leaves of the Continental Congress" in which is contained a copy of the Gettysburg Address in the handwriting of Mr. Lincoln. I do not know of any other autographic copy of the Gettysburg Address in existence.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, out of whose substance proceedeth all that is wise and strong, pure and holy, we lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee for the great men whom Thou hast raised up to be the bearers of truth, love, leadership, in the affairs of men.

To-day we would sing with all true Americans songs of praises to Thee for our beloved Lincoln—a man of God, called of God to be the savior of his country in its darkest hour; pure in his conceptions, strong in his convictions, firm in his purposes, great in his goodness, good in his greatness, the paragon of American citizenship; who bore in his heart the sorrows of a Nation and laid down his life that it might live. But he lives. His country lives. May his life, character, and achievements inspire us to follow his illustrious example. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on legislation pertaining to soldiers' uniforms.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on soldiers' uniforms. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ECHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by my colleague, Mr. GOODYKOONTZ, of West Virginia, on Abraham Lincoln, delivered Sunday, February 8, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address by his colleague [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] on Abraham Lincoln. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, the Sergeant at Arms was directed to notify absent Members, the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Donovan	Kennedy, R. I.	Robinson, N. C.
Anthony	Dooling	Kiess	Rodenberg

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-one Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of to-day President Lincoln's Gettysburg address will be read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON read the Gettysburg address, as follows:

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

(November 19, 1863.)

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived, and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives, that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here, have, thus far, so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that, government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. By special order the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER] was authorized to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, Judge WEBSTER is unable to be present on account of illness. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the address which he would have made if he had been present. I also ask unanimous consent that he be excused for the day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the address by his colleague, Judge WEBSTER, and also that he be excused for the day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. By special order the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MONAHAN] is authorized to address the House for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the life of Abraham Lincoln reads like a romance, yet we know it is true.

He was born in a log cabin in Kentucky 111 years ago to-day, a building not like the comfortable houses of to-day, but a small, illy constructed affair, with no floor save the earth, no ceiling, only one room, no glass windows, but one door, and a fireplace with an outside chimney, and here he lived until he was 7 years of age, when his parents moved to Indiana.

They were the pioneers in that virgin forest. The month was October, and winter was approaching. They did not have time to erect a cabin. They built a camp. A hole 14 feet long was dug on a sidehill facing the south. Logs were cut for the east and west ends. The earth was made to serve for the north side, while the south side remained absolutely open. There was no floor, stove, fireplace, or windows. The fire was built and the cooking done in front of the open south side, and here the family lived for an entire year before better quarters could be provided. A year later, when Lincoln was but 9 years old, his mother, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, died. This was a blow that nearly crushed him. Between Lincoln and his father there was but little in common and no bond of sympathy.

From his father he inherited that great physical strength and endurance so essential in pioneer life, but nothing else. It was from his mother that he inherited that mystical mind, that lofty soul, that patience and judgment, that was to distinguish him above all men, and when he returned from her fresh grave his child face wore a veil of melancholy that never left it.

There was no clergyman present at the funeral of this modern Mary, and several years afterward young Lincoln contrived to have a funeral discourse commemorative of the merits and humble and unobtrusive virtues preached by an itinerant preacher, in memory of the mother of one charged with a mission akin to the divine.

The following year the father married a widow by the name of Sallie Bush and brought her with three children, two daughters and a son, to his desolate home, and the coming of this noble woman in all probability gave Lincoln to the ages.

She loved him from the first as if he were her own child. She developed his inherited ability and taught him many of the practical things of life. She brought cleanliness and order to the home, established a family altar, and made it possible for Lincoln to learn to read and write by sending him to school for four months.

And to-day, when all the civilized world is paying homage to the memory of one of the greatest of the race, can we not in spirit place a wreath of love upon the humble graves of Nancy Hanks Lincoln, who gave him birth and transmitted to him those qualities of mind, heart, and soul which made him great, and to Sallie Bush Lincoln, who developed those inherited qualities, taught him the practical side of life, and made it possible for him to become what he was? [Applause.]

When Lincoln was 17 years old his only sister died, and another great sorrow veiled his soul; and in his anguish he cried out again and again, "What have I to live for now?" Indeed, his suffering was so intense that his rude neighbors not only wondered at it but feared he might take his own life.

They did not know that of the few cords that bound him to life one snapped at the bedside of a dying mother; another broke by the newly made grave in the solemn forest; but still another was held by destiny and was to save him for the great work of the future.

He was now 17 years old; and Henry C. Whitney, in his Life and Works of Lincoln, thus describes him:

> At the age of 17 he was six and a third feet high, his feet and hands were unsually large, and his legs and arms disproportionately long; his head was small and phrenologically defective; his body very diminutive for one of his height. His walk was awkward, his gestures still more so; his skin was of a dirty, yellowish brown, and shriveled and baggy, even at that age. He was attired in buckskin pants, which failed to conceal his blue shin bones; his shirt was of a fabric known to pioneer, and to no other life, as linsey-woolsey; and in winter he was clad in what is known as a warmus; and, finally, a coonskin cap, homemade, and moccasins, also homemade, protected and decorated, respectively, his upper and nether extremities. He was bizarre looking even in that primitive community.

In the spring of 1830 the Lincoln family left Indiana and moved to Macon County, Ill., and here for a time the future emancipator did all kinds of work incident to pioneer life. He split rails, cleared land, kept store, and made several trips down the Mississippi on flatboats to New Orleans. But during all this time, whenever the opportunity presented, he was reading good books and studying, and, in addition to the work above referred to, he became a captain in the Black Hawk War, a surveyor, and later postmaster at New Salem, and here he began the study of the law, was finally admitted to the bar in 1837, and began the practice of his chosen profession. In 1834 he was elected to the State legislature, serving in all three terms. In 1846 he was elected to Congress, served one term, and refused to stand for a reelection. During all this time Lincoln showed no marked ability. As an attorney he was not well grounded in the principles of the law, nor was he a well-read lawyer. He tried his cases more upon the principles of right and wrong than by the code of practice, and, because of his known honesty and his strength with the jury, won a majority of his cases. There was nothing brilliant in his record as a State legislator, and he himself always contended that his one term in Congress was a failure.

The hour for the great crisis had not yet come. It was still several years away, and the evolution of this plain, awkward child of the frontier into the great leader he became was not complete, and his statesmanship was still in a chrysalis state.

He took an active part in political discussions and gradually came to be regarded as one of the strong men of Illinois, and slowly but surely was laying the foundation for future usefulness, but neither he nor his friends ever dreamed of the heights to which he would attain. Like Rome, Lincoln was not made in a day.

From 1849, when his term in Congress ended, to 1854, Lincoln had apparently retired from public life, but with the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and the opening of the campaign by Stephen A. Douglas in a great speech at Springfield, on October 3, Lincoln was unanimously chosen to answer it, which he did on the following day, speaking for three hours and making one of the greatest efforts of his life, Douglas himself declaring he had heard nothing like it in the Senate. This speech first brought Lincoln into public notice, and two years later, at the Republican national convention, he received 110 votes for Vice President.

In 1858 he was nominated by his party for United States Senator against Stephen A. Douglas, and immediately challenged his opponent to a series of joint debates.

Douglas was one of the greatest platform orators of his generation, the idol of his party, and the author of the Missouri Compromise measure, and his friends looked for an easy triumph, but Lincoln proved more than his equal, and at Freeport trapped Douglas into an admission that, while it won for him the Senatorship, lost him the Presidency. Lincoln, on the other hand, lost the Senatorship and won the Presidency, for in 1860 he was nominated at Chicago and in the following November elected, receiving 180 votes in the Electoral College against 72 for Breckenridge, 39 for Bell, and 12 for Douglas, and on the following 4th of March was duly inaugurated, and in a few days later the Civil War had begun.

To-day we are commemorating the birth of a man, and this is not a fitting time or place to enter into the details of that mighty struggle. History has recorded how, answering to the call and following the guidance of the great Lincoln, the hosts of freedom fought, bled, suffered, and died, and how mothers, wives, sisters, and sweethearts gave of their all, and with tearful eyes, on bended knees, prayed to God while the armies fought—how, after four long years of bloodshed and carnage, the Nation was saved, the Union made indissoluble, the flag rendered stainless, slavery abolished, and for the first time in the history of the race the brotherhood of man was virtually written into law. [Applause.]

History also tells us how in the moment of stupendous victory, enveloped in the halo of radiant success, the bullet of an assassin ended the life of the mighty leader; how the paeans of victory were changed to wails of sorrow; how his body was carried back to Springfield, where much of his life was spent, where his old neighbors and friends lived, back to the rolling prairies of the State of his adoption, to be buried in the soil he loved so well.

A few days ago I stood in front of the old Ford Theater in Washington, the building in which Lincoln was shot, then walked around to the rear and saw the door through which Booth escaped, and the spot where he mounted his horse and galloped away into the darkness was pointed out.

Across the street is the house in which Lincoln died, now a national museum filled with Lincoln relics. There were pieces of timber from the cabin in which he was born, from the log house in Indiana. There were axes and mauls he had used and rails he had split, the clothes he had worn, the office desk he had used, and the cheap furniture of his home. There were public documents and private letters he had written, and hundreds of articles of interest which Capt. O. H. Oldroyd had for more than 50 years been collecting. The room in which he died has been kept as nearly as possible as it was on the night of the tragedy.

This room was in a cheap boarding house and occupied at the time by a private soldier. It was about 10 feet wide by 16 long. It had but one window, the floor was uncarpeted, and the ceiling so low that I could reach it with my uplifted hand. And here, amidst these squalid surroundings, in this dingy room, the great soul left the weary body, and for the first time Abraham Lincoln found peace and rest. The man of sorrows, who knew and felt grief, who trod the wine press alone, who had led a great and progressive people successfully through the mightiest struggle in the annals of the race, who had written in letters of living light in the blue done of heaven, where all mankind could read, the words "Union," "Freedom," and "Progress," now belonged to the ages. [Applause.]

The world still wonders what there was in this crude, awkward child of the frontier that made him the commanding figure in the greatest epochal conflict of the race.

Born in poverty and destitution, with nothing to awaken or stimulate ambition, better things, or higher conditions, he was ambitious. He attended school but four months, yet some of his productions, notably his second inaugural address and Gettysburg speech, are classics.

The Gettysburg address you have heard read this morning so beautifully, so expressively, by one who lives not in Danville, not in Illinois, but in the hearts of every man, woman, and child in the United States. Uncle JOE CANNON. [Applause.]

With but a limited acquaintance outside of Illinois he won the Presidency from the greatest and best of his party, and after his inauguration there was not a member of his Cabinet who did not consider himself a bigger man than he, until they, according to Col Watterson, "one by one measured mental swords with him and were brought to their intellectual knees never to rise again."

Wherein, then, did Lincoln's greatness lie?

A brief review of the man and his work may aid in answering this question. Lincoln was an intense student, not only of books but of men and conditions, and as day by day he absorbed knowledge, which his great memory retained, he became in time a very learned man, though never a scholarly one.

He was always true to his higher self and courageously stood for what he believed to be right. There was nothing of the trimmer or demagogue in his makeup.

He was honest with his fellow men, true to his friends, and ingratitude had no part in his mental makeup; hence when he made friends he always kept them, and because of his honesty the people trusted him.

He acted upon judgment, not impulse, and the hysterical and ultra never appealed to him. During the Civil War often his most bitter assailants were not the men in arms against the Government, not even the "copperhead" element in the North, but the abolition extremists. His patience was as great as his judgment was sound, and Lincoln the Man always waited for the Place and the Hour. He was a genius of common sense; his judgment of men was marvelous, and his trained mind went straight to the heart of all questions, great or small, as from day to day he grandly arose to meet new conditions and unexpected obstacles. These are some of the reasons why Lincoln was superlatively great during the war and was able to accomplish all that was done.

Because of his honesty the people trusted him; because of loyalty to friends and principles they loved him; and because of his judgment, tact, and patience they sustained him.

Historic man waited 4,000 years for the coming of Lincoln. Such a character never lived before, and the world may never see his like again. He was created for a purpose; he was a man with a mission; and, with his work done, his mission accomplished, he was by a loving Father kissed from scenes of bloodshed and strife to eternal rest and happiness. May we not believe that a fond mother was waiting to wipe the stamp of melancholy from his tired face, and that to-day a happy and reunited family are smiling somewhere among the stars as they look down upon this and similar scenes?

His life will ever be an inspiration for better deeds, higher aspirations, and loftier purposes.

None can read of his life and works without being made a better man or woman. The pathetic story of his early life and constant struggles with poverty and destitution will fill the heart of man with deeper sympathy for the poor and needy. His successful struggles, under constant adversity, to better his condition will be a beacon light that will guide many a storm-buffeted boy or girl into the harbor of success. His loyalty to friends and principle, his rugged honesty, and the sweetness of a private life as pure as an angel's dream will make for purer homes, better citizenship, warmer and more lasting friendships until time shall be no more, while his unselfish patriotism and devotion to his country and humanity will forever stand as a guide for future generations.

Had the Nation in 1861 been guided by the voice and wisdom of Lincoln, emancipation would have come without pecuniary loss to the slaveholder nor would the country have been torn by the horrors of civil war.

Had Lincoln been permitted to live, I believe there would have been no carpet-bag government in the South [applause], and many of the so-called reconstruction laws would never have been placed upon our statute books. In his death the North lost its safest counselor, the South its best and truest friend. [Applause.]

In this hour when hysteria and emotionalism are attempting to dethrone judgment and reason and plunge the race into chaos and ruin, could Lincoln act and speak he would say:

"The pages of American history are resplendent with the names and records of great and honest men, among whom we can point to a Washington, a Jefferson, a Jackson, a Webster, a Douglas, a Tilden, a Blaine, a Thurman, and a McKinley.

"Each of these men in his day and generation fought the good fight, kept the faith, and finished the course; and, because judgment, not hysteria, was the guiding star of each, they lived respected, died regretted, and the fruits of their labor have come as a heritage to us. [Applause.]

"Take men of this class as a guide for yourself and children, rather than these modern political Jeremiahs, swashbucklers, and civilization destroyers, who to-day are bounding from one platform to another, preaching the doctrine of class hatred, suspicion, doubt, and disaster, and raising new political issues every day. [Applause.]

"Have faith in your fellow man and keep faith with him. [Applause.] The destiny of the race leads ever onward and upward; and, from the beginning of history, it has grandly kept step to the music of its mission.

"There are more honest men in the world to-day than there were yesterday. There will be more to-morrow than there are to-day." [Applause.]

He would point to the great highway of life, along which earth's millions are marching to a higher plane of existence.

He would ask you to leave the sensational press to be consumed in the fires of hatred and passion their hysteria has lighted, the Bolshevist to suffocate and decay in the filth of his own making, and the demagogue and agitator to gnaw at the fleshless bones of monsters their wicked fancies or diseased imaginations have created.

He would point to the past and its lessons, where judgment has always finally prevailed and truth ever triumphed; and then he would point to the future, where the beacon light of hope eternally shines, and in the name of justice, honesty, progress, and liberty bid us look up and march on.

He would urge that equity and fairness be made the controlling forces to guide the race and that no class should be permitted to harass or destroy the commercial prosperity or social life of 100,000,000 people who are outside the ranks of greedy capital and organized labor. [Applause.] He would say that the Ship of State must be manned by crews who are loyal to the organic laws and government founded and transmitted by the mighty Washington; that she must be kept away from the rocks that wreck and waves that overwhelm.

He would command that she immediately leave the slough of unrest fed by the poisonous waters of greed, graft, and isms and once again sail out into the boundless, bounding ocean of Americanism, and as the tides of Justice once again clasp her keel and the breezes of Progress fill her sails as she slowly moves out to sea to continue her journey to her final port—Destiny—may we not believe that in words of love, admonition, and hope as a parting bon voyage and "God bless you," he would say:

Fear not each sudden sound and shock,
'Tis of the wave and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee!

Mr. Speaker, this Nation will never die nor the sun of Americanism grow dim so long as our people cherish the name and are guided by the teachings and example of the sweetest, greatest, grandest character in human history—Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes in order that I may read some quotations from Lincoln and present some comments thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, Lincoln was one of America's greatest patriots and philosophers, one of the incarnate spirits of our civilization.

With profound verity he said:

If we would supplant the opinions of our fathers in any case we should do so upon evidence so conclusive and arguments so clear that even their great authority, fairly considered and weighed, can not stand.

Is the evidence so conclusive and are the arguments so clear that America should join a foreign alliance that the admonition of Lincoln and of our statesmen through 150 years to avoid foreign entangling alliances should be abandoned?

Lincoln said:

Reason—cold, calculating, unempassioned reason—must furnish all the material for our future safety and defense.

Can reason—cold, calculating, and unempassioned reason—tell America that her destiny, her liberty, her life, is safer in the hands of aliens than in her own possession?

Lincoln also said:

Accustomed to trample upon the rights of others, you have lost the genius of your own independence and become fit subjects of the first cunning tyrant who arises among you.

The proposed covenant of a League of Nations, with or without reservations, is wholly and completely nothing other than a political alliance, an armed international and imperialistic alliance, of the five great nations which have won the war for the domination of the world and the peoples therein.

If America joins this "unholy alliance," America will then become accustomed to trample upon the rights of others and must of necessity lose the genius of her independence and become a part of tyranny. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 11927) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. PAGE, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3371) authorizing Gordon N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the White River, and agreed to the same.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10746. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools, the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, the construction of a sewer system, the construction of a city dock and floating dock, and to levy and collect a special tax therefor.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EVANS of Nebraska, for to-day, on account of death in the family.

To Mr. BEE, for to-day, on account of important business.

To Mr. ASHBROOK, for two days, on account of official business.

To Mr. DENISON, for to-day, on account of illness.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12272, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday there was an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Minnesota. The chairman of the committee had risen to offer an amendment, but it had not been offered. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by changing the word "Summerville" to "Summerland." I took the language as it appeared in the Book of Estimates, and I am informed this morning that the name of the place where this plant is located is Summerland and not Summerville.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as proposed to be modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, after line 15, insert: "For the completion, operation, and maintenance of the Government kelp plant at Summerland, Calif., $192,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to continue this kelp experimental work in California. It was begun as an experiment, but I believe that the developments which have followed as a result of these experiments thoroughly justify the expenditure made and certainly justify the continuance of the work which has been begun. During the experimental period there was sold $80,000 worth of the products of the enterprise, and the money was turned into the Treasury of the United States. That much of the money already expended has been returned to the United States Treasury. During the experimental period the largest expenses were incurred. At the present time the plant is getting upon a paying basis, and, if continued during another year, unquestionably instead of being an expense to the Government it appears at least that it is quite probable that it will become a source of revenue, and we will be able to continue to return additional sums of money to the Treasury, and that is very desirable.

The question was asked yesterday as to whether it is paying at the present time. To this I desire to address my attention now. It is stated in the hearings, if gentlemen will examine them—and I desire to quote from them—that it is upon a paying basis. The Chief of the Bureau of Soils was asked whether it was upon a paying basis, and he stated that it is. On page 24 of part 9 of the hearings the following occurs:

Mr. CANDLER. I notice in the note here it says it is estimated that $101,000 will be realized from the sale of products at this plant for the current fiscal year. For the fiscal year 1921 it is believed that the receipts will more than cover all expenditures, including the heavy overhead now entailed by a large force of chemists and construction and repair men.

Mr. WHITNEY. That means that we are now on a production basis, but during the time when we were experimenting the expense, of course, was heavier.

On page 28, I quote again:

Mr. CANDLER. You pay the expenses with the by-products, and your potash is largely profit?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. Whatever you get out of potash is profit?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman says that they are on a paying basis by marketing their by-products. Will the gentleman give us any information as to how much of this kelp charcoal is actually sold?

Mr. CANDLER. They have not sold a great deal up to the present time. Just exactly the amount sold up to the present time I am not able to inform the gentleman, but the estimates for the coming year are that they will sell, on the basis of 300 days' operation, 150 units per day of potash, at $2 a unit, $90,000; and 1 ton of carbon per day, at $300 per ton, $90,000; 20 pounds of iodine per day, at $4 per pound, $24,000; and 1,600 pounds of sulphate of ammonia per day, at $4 per hundredweight, $19,000, making a total of $223,000 they expect to make within the coming year; and if this expectation is realized it will pay expenses and pay a profit of $30,000 over the amount of the appropriation now asked for next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER. On page 26 of the hearings Mr. Turrentine, in charge of this work, stated as a résumé of the situation as follows:

(1) Results to date show definitely that the successful outcome of experiments is assured, that by-products will be developed which will more than carry the production cost of potash. This will enable kelp potash, then, to come into the market, where freight rates are not prohibitive, in competition with potash from any other source.

(2) With a successful outcome assured, it would be unwise to discontinue the work and lose the credit which is bound to accrue to the Government through the successful prosecution of a problem undertaken in the face of so much criticism and one advertised so widely by its opponents as illogical and uneconomical.

(3) Its continuation from now on will be at a very slight and decreasing expense to the public, the proceeds from this year's production probably being about enough to equal expenditures and those from next year's operation probably more than equaling expenditures. That the enterprise will be self-sustaining within a short period seems assured.

These facts, shown by those who know the facts and who are in charge of this work, demonstrate that the result of the operations this year is to bring this plant up to a self-sustaining basis, and that it is expected and confidently believed that during the next year it will be upon a profitable basis. It would certainly be unwise to discontinue the operation at the present time and withdraw appropriations from it. When we went into it, it was merely an experiment. Nobody knew what the result would be, but as the work has progressed from time to time it has been discovered that from the by-products the expenses of the enterprise will be paid and that the real purpose, the production of potash, for which it was originally established, will be a success, and the revenues derived from the sale of potash will be a profit. That being true, the business having gotten to that point where it is emerging at least to a position where it will be a paying and continually increasing profit-making enterprise, certainly, after having paid the expenses of the experiment, when we have the opportunity to get some of the money back, and possibly all of it, into the Treasury of the United States, it would be the height of folly, as stated by Mr. Turrentine, the gentleman in charge, to discontinue it now. Therefore I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota will prevail and that this appropriation will be continued and that this work will be permitted to go on. If that be done, the result which we expect will undoubtedly come and the Government will get from this enterprise not only a profit itself, but the people of the United States will get a product which is very much needed at the present time, and we will be able to put this enterprise on a commercial basis, where we can compete with producers from other countries, which would certainly be very beneficial to our own country. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the products can be made at a profit, as the gentleman says, why does not individual enterprise go into the business? Why should the Government go into it?

Mr. CANDLER. The Government went into it, as I said, at the outset, as a mere matter of experiment, because individual enterprise at that time did not feel inclined to do so. One of the objects of this experimental work is to demonstrate that the business can be made profitable and thereby encourage private enterprise to enter it and utilize the practically inexhaustible supply of kelp available. Private enterprise did undertake to manufacture potash from kelp but did not undertake to manufacture the by-products, but simply to make potash, and therefore they did not succeed. We hope to inspire and encourage them to again undertake the business by showing them by the experiments the Government has made and will make that by utilizing the by-products the business can be made profitable from a commercial standpoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the Government has now proven the fact that this potash can be made at a profit, why should not the Government get out of the business and let individual enterprise do it?

Mr. CANDLER. This is not intended to be a permanent enterprise, but it certainly would be unwise, when we have gone to the expense which we have in the experimental stage, to immediately, on arriving at the point where it is demonstrated it is upon a paying basis, to discontinue further work when we have an opportunity to get some of the money that the Government has spent restored to the Treasury of the United States. Certainly we ought to have an opportunity to do that. And then the development as to these by-products is not complete. The experiments as to certain work have not been completed, and with the continuance of it we will be able to demonstrate more assuredly to the public that it can be successfully carried on, and can be made a commercial success and thereby invite private enterprise to engage in it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe the Government will get back this year the amount of the appropriation herein suggested, of $192,000?

Mr. CANDLER. It is not expected the Government will get it back this year, but it is expected that it will get it back next year, with a profit besides. This $192,000 is an appropriation for 1921 and not for 1920, and during 1921 we expect to pay all expenses and make a profit in the operation of this business.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. How much of this $192,000 will go into buildings?

Mr. CANDLER. None of it will go into buildings.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It looks to me that if we keep putting $192,000——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. JACOWAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY].

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to concur in all that has been said by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. On yesterday and to-day there has been some discussion of what the testimony in regard to this item shows. Only those portions of the testimony before the committee have been referred to. I may also add that part of the testimony most convincing has been adduced, and to this feature I desire to direct the committee's attention. On account of my limited time, it would be foolish for me to attempt to go into all the testimony. From the interest the committee has exhibited in the matter, both on yesterday and to-day, I am going to trespass upon the House for a brief period, but long enough to present the salient facts relating to this item. When the question was put to Mr. Turrentine, who appeared before the committee and who has this matter in charge, as to whether or not reducing potash from kelp was a success, he did not say, "I believe it will be a success," or that "It is hoped it will be a success," but in an affirmative way he said, "It is a success," and could be made a profitable venture on the part of the Government. I want to say, further, that a few years ago, when this item was first brought before the Agricultural Committee, I had very little confidence in the undertaking. But from the résumé of the testimony as adduced before the committee and further personal investigations, I think that every Member of this House will be driven to the conclusion that to strike down this proposition at the present time would not be short of disastrous and doing permanently a great injustice to the farmers of this country, who must have fertilizers, as well as many others.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOWAY. In just a minute. I do not want to be discourteous to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], for there is no one in this Chamber I regard more highly. He is at all times courteous. I know him to be honest, and his services in this body demonstrates his fitness to ably and well represent the great district that sends him here.

Now, in the further testimony that was brought out before the committee Dr. Turrentine indulged in what he called a résumé relative to this item, and, in my judgment, it is conclusive. Mr. Turrentine said:

(1) Results to date show definitely that the successful outcome of experiments is assured, that by-products will be developed which will more than carry the production cost of potash. This will enable kelp potash, then, to come into the market, where freight rates are not prohibitive, in competition with potash from any other source.

(2) With a successful outcome assured, it would be unwise to discontinue the work and lose the credit which is bound to accrue to the Government through the successful prosecution of a problem undertaken in the face of so much criticism and one advertised so widely by its opponents as illogical and uneconomical.

(3) Its continuation from now on will be at a very slight and decreasing expense to the public, the proceeds from this year's production probably being about enough to equal expenditures and those from next year's operation probably more than equaling expenditures. That the enterprise will be self-sustaining within a short period seems assured.

Mr. ANDERSON. You say you have sold this year $22,000 worth?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. You expect to increase the sales sufficiently in the next six months of the fiscal year to make up the entire cost of your operations for the year?

Mr. TURRENTINE. We have sold only small amounts of carbon up to this time. From now on we expect to be selling carbon in larger quantities, and carbon is worth more than potash.

(4) It should be borne in mind, that at the completion of the work, with the results anticipated, the plant will be on a profitable basis and could be put on the market as a going concern earning a profit, and would yield a price accordingly. If it is sold before all the facts are demonstrated, it would have to be sold as junk, and as such would yield only about a third of what it would yield otherwise. If sold as a going concern, however, it would yield not less than $100,000. It is easy to see, therefore, that if we keep going until the work is completed, the net profit to the Government will be greater than if the work were discontinued at the end of the present year.

(5) Since it has been demonstrated that not less than 500,000 tons per annum of raw kelp are available in the vicinity of Summerland, it is to be assumed that when it is demonstrated what profits are obtainable from the treatment of kelp by the process developed here, plants will be established sufficient in capacity to utilize the raw material available. We may, with confidence, therefore, look forward to the establishment ultimately of an industry in this part of the State of California which will yield the products obtainable from this quantity of kelp and of an annual value of over $7,000,000. This estimate does not take into consideration the equally large industry which may be founded additionally on the kelps of Puget Sound and Alaska. The profit to the public, therefore, from the successful outcome of these experiments seems to be beyond question, and certainly would seem to justify a continuation of the slight net expense to the public now being incurred in this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes longer.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ascertain if we can agree upon time for closing debate.

Mr. BLACK. The proponents of this amendment have taken a good deal of time for discussion. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman had 10 minutes upon that yesterday.

Mr. BLACK. We did not get to it yesterday and gentlemen were not here, and I would like 10 minutes in which to present the facts from the testimony from Mr. Turrentine, from which the gentleman quotes.

Mr. JACOWAY. I am quoting from his testimony.

Mr. BLACK. I will quote some, too.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate upon this close in 28 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in 28 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to offer an amendment, and I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then I will ask that the debate close in 35 minutes. I modify my request to that extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in 35 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The time is divided as indicated.

Mr. JACOWAY. My request for five minutes for additional time was not acted on. I ask for five minutes now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY]?

Mr. HAUGEN. In addition to the 35 minutes?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, under the agreement there would be two minutes not allotted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I am asking the Chair, on a point of order, if, after the debate has been agreed upon, it is in order to open it up again with other agreements? The committee agreed on 35 minutes under which, according to the private understanding as to time, the gentleman from Arkansas could have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has not yet been fixed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Arkansas asked for more time before this agreement was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair failed inadvertently to put the request of the gentleman from Arkansas before he submitted the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. The Chair feels that it should be put before the time of debate is closed. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] now asks that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 35 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY] is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the State of Arkansas is less interested in this item than any other State of the Union, unless it is the State of Texas, but we are legislating for the good of the entire country and not certain sections. If I may be permitted to speak personally, I trust that my action on the committee has been such that I have looked to what is for the good of the entire country. The testimony in this case shows that we can enter upon this program confidently, and that we can appropriate this money, and that we can produce potash and compete with the countries of the earth in the production of that potash. Reading further from the testimony, Mr. Turrentine says:

Mr. TURRENTINE. By way of résumé:

(1) Results to date show definitely that the successful outcome of experiments is assured, that by-products will be developed which will more than carry the production cost of potash. This will enable kelp potash, then, to come into the market, where freight rates are not prohibitive, in competition with potash from any other source.

(2) With a successful outcome assured, it would be unwise to discontinue the work and lose the credit which is bound to accrue to the Government through the successful prosecution of a problem undertaken in the face of so much criticism and one advertised so widely by its opponents as illogical and uneconomical.

That the enterprise will be self-sustaining within a short period seems assured.

Mr. ANDERSON. You say you have sold this year $22,000 worth?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. You expect to increase the sales sufficiently in the next six months of the fiscal year to make up the entire cost of your operations for the year?

Mr. TURRENTINE. We have sold only small amounts of carbon up to this time. From now on we expect to be selling carbon in larger quantities, and carbon is worth more than potash.

(4) It should be borne in mind that at the completion of the work, with the results anticipated, the plant will be on a profitable basis and could be put on the market as a going concern earning a profit, and would yield a price accordingly. If sold as a going concern, however, it would yield not less than $100,000.

It is easy to see, therefore, that if we keep going until the work is completed, the net profit to the Government will be greater than if the work were discontinued at the end of the present year.

(5) Since it has been demonstrated that not less than 500,000 tons per annum of raw kelp are available in the vicinity of Summerland, it is to be assumed that when it is demonstrated what profits are obtainable from the treatment of kelp by the process developed here plants will be established sufficient in capacity to utilize the raw material available. The profit to the public, therefore, from the successful outcome of these experiments seems to be beyond question, and certainly would seem to justify a continuation of the slight net expense to the public now being incurred in this work.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Doctor, you spoke about the prospects of the future. Kelp is grown along the coast, isn't it?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. About how deep in the water?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Kelp grows in about 40 feet of water, but it grows to a length of 150 feet. It grows up to the surface and then it is held up in the water and lies on the surface in large, tangled masses.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. You mean it grows from the shore out to 40 feet of water?

Mr. TURRENTINE. No; it grows on the water in 40 feet of water.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. It grows where the water is 10 feet deep, does it?

Mr. TURRENTINE. A little of it grows in 10 feet of water, but the tide, you see, would uncover it.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. How far out in the ocean does it grow?

Mr. TURRENTINE. It varies from half a mile to 3 miles. The position of the kelp is determined by the bottom of the ocean. Where you have rocks, a rocky bottom, or bowlders, something for the kelp to fasten to, you will find it growing; otherwise you do not.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. How deep is the deepest part where it grows? Is it over 40 feet?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes; considerably over 40 feet. Kelp has been observed under water 100 feet deep.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. And you think it is unlimited?

Mr. TURRENTINE. No; it is not unlimited; but it is inexhaustible in the sense that it grows right back after you cut it.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. If you cut it down, how long does it take before it grows up again?

Mr. TURRENTINE. We expect a crop every three months; four harvest seasons.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Haven't the fertilizer manufacturers now abandoned their manufactories out there?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes; the Government plant is the only one running.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. That is what I thought. In other words, you can't compete with German potash now, can you? You say you are selling it at $3?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. And we are buying German potash for $1.80.

Mr. TURRENTINE. Are we?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I bought a lot of it.

Mr. TURRENTINE. We got $2.75 for our product all last fall. I haven't any doubt at all but that we can compete with Germany.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. You have no doubt about it?

Mr. TURRENTINE. No.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Not when it gets down to 70 cents a unit?

Mr. TURRENTINE. I don't think it will ever go to 70 cents.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Do you suppose you can compete at $1?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. You think you can?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes; figuring it as I have indicated here in this statement, our production cost is now $1; that is, $1 laid down in the market for potash.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. $1 in California?

Mr. TURRENTINE. No; in Baltimore.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. You can lay it down in Baltimore for $1?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes; figuring it the way we have—figuring the cost of production on the by-products.

Mr. CANDLER. You pay the expenses with the by-products and your potash is largely profit?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. Whatever you get out of that is profit?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What is the freight from your factory to Baltimore?

Mr. TURRENTINE. $15 a ton in carload lots.

Mr. HARRISON. Doctor, the commercial plants on the coast, I understood, were erected under war conditions and they had a special object in view, namely, to secure products which were urgently needed for war purposes.

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How many tons of kelp does it take to produce a unit of potash?

Mr. TURRENTINE. A ton of kelp will produce a unit and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. One ton of kelp will?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. How many units does a ton of kelp run?

Mr. TURRENTINE. One and a half on the wet basis.

The CHAIRMAN. A unit is 20 pounds?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANDLER. You cut it and gather it on the surface of the water?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANDLER. You don't cut it below the water?

Mr. TURRENTINE. We cut it about 5 or 6 feet below the surface of the water.

Mr. CANDLER. And then it grows out, and you cut it four times a year?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANDLER. Cutting doesn't injure the plant at all? It comes right back?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. After you prepare this potash, what does it run?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Fifty-five per cent K_2O.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. That is actual potash?

Mr. TURRENTINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACK. What page is that on?

Mr. JACOWAY. Page 28.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a reprint from the Journal of Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, volume 11, No. 9, page 864, of an article on "Potash from kelp: The experimental plant of the United States Department of Agriculture—A preliminary paper." From it I read:

SUMMARY.

I. The experimental kelp-potash plant of the United States Department of Agriculture, designed for the determination of the best methods of processing kelp for the extraction of potash salts and the simultaneous recovery of other valuable products, was erected during the summer of 1917 and put into operation in the early fall of that year.

II. One hundred tons of raw kelp per day are subjected to a process involving drying, destructive distillation, lixiviation, evaporation, and fractional crystallization for the preparation of high-grade potassium chloride.

III. The by-products, kelp oils, creosote, pitch, ammonia, bleaching carbons, salt, and iodine are yielded in commercial quantities by this process. The main problem now in hand is their commercialization.

It is confidently believed that they will be made to yield sufficient revenue to enable the main product, potash salts, to be marketed successfully in competition with potash from foreign sources.

IV. Complete operating cost data are being tabulated covering the various details of manufacture. These, together with full specifications and designs, will be made available for the use of the interested public.

V. The results obtained to date indicate that it will be possible to establish on kelp as the basic raw material a new American chemical industry of considerable size and of importance and usefulness to the Nation.

I have not the time just now to go into detail as to what all this writer's observations are in regard to this matter, but those are his conclusions after his detailed statement and argument, showing the cost of potash and the need for it. It should appeal to every member of the committee.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, trained chemical experts, after years of study and research, with a trained eye, say to this House that this is a most worthy project. They further say that potash can be produced in the United States so that we can compete with the potash produced in other countries and thereby meet a long-felt want and need. The urgent need of potash in this country causes me to believe beyond cavil that this item ought to go into the bill, and that the motion of the gentleman should prevail.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman if he had figured out how much potash would be produced if you harvest the entire amount of kelp there in the Pacific Ocean near this plant?

Mr. JACOWAY. I have not stated it, but I have stated the argument of those who have gone with great care and pains into the matter.

Mr. BLACK. The estimate is for 7,500 pounds, as against a need of 500 tons.

Mr. JACOWAY. If we can get 7,500 pounds of potash in this country, and the average of that 7,500 pounds costs the Government nothing, then all the argument of the gentleman falls to the ground, because every man knows the needs of potash, and to indulge in argument in support of this suggestion would be a useless waste of time. I confidently hope the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota will prevail and this important item retained in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have been called from the Hall for the remainder of the day, and therefore I would be very glad to be recognized now; otherwise I would yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. Chairman, I live in Illinois, in the best farming portion of the United States, so far as the production of wheat and corn and various other farm products is concerned, except cotton. We used to say in Illinois, when I went there in 1858, that we could raise corn on that soil for a thousand years without it giving way. They did it for a quarter of century, and then the soil began to give away. Now, we alternate with clover, and we are doing that to-day; but the soil is not producing as it once did, and the result is that the different grades of soil there in that State, and I believe throughout the country generally, are being tested to see what should most profitably be used to supply the place of that which has disappeared through improvident farming.

We have a big country. When the war began I had letters by the score from people who wrote me, "For God's sake, see if we can not get some potash from Germany." Well, we were not at war with Germany for some time, but it was impossible to get the potash from Germany, and the result was that the price went soaring for whatever it could be got at.

Now, it was said—and I only refer to it casually, in passing, not to arouse anybody's criticism—that when we put a tariff on tin plate in the McKinley bill that was passed in what was called the first Reed Congress, it would be impossible to establish the tin-plate industry in this country. It was attacked, and it was said, "You can never produce tin plate in this country." But it went on, and we now supply our own market with tin plate, and export it, and that has been done for years. I only mention that to show that this expenditure for the production of potash and by-products of the same, while it is $192,000, is negligible when you consider that we require potash in this country not by the 100,000 tons, or the 200,000 tons, or the 300,000 tons, or the 400,000 tons, but more, and that the use of it will increase rather than decrease. For one, without discussing further the conditions, I shall vote for this amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be any more in favor of economy than the members of this Committee on Agriculture. Nor do I concede that they are any more interested in the welfare of agriculture than I am. But my decision in this matter is controlled by reading the hearings on this particular item for this year, and also the same item in the bill of last year. Many speeches are being made in the House saying that we favor economy. A few days ago the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], who appealed to us so eloquently to-day, made a very able speech in the House, and in that speech he said:

Now, let me say, in conclusion, that I am in favor of economy. My whole record in Congress will prove that I am always for economy. I am opposed, in private and public life, to waste and extravagance. I will join you, my fellow Members, in eliminating all unnecessary appropriations wherever they may be found. I believe no more money should be spent than is necessary to secure good and efficient administration of governmental affairs. I can not state my position too strongly on that subject. I do not, however, believe in false or unnecessary economy being practiced on the farmer or the agricultural interests of America. The appropriations are small considering the great business involved. I do not believe any appropriations we make for other purposes bring anything like the beneficial returns as do those made for agriculture. Therefore do not let us be extravagant at any time, but—

Oh, Mr. Chairman, the trouble is with that word "but." We get up here and make speeches for economy, but when we come to these different items we put in a "but." It reminds me of the story that I read in McGuffey's Fifth Reader, I believe it was, when I was a boy. A good mother and father had six children, and a rich uncle decided that the couple had too many to care for, and that he could profitably care for one of the children himself. So he asked the good parents to give him one, and they finally consented, and that night as all the children lay asleep the good mother and father went around to see which one they would give away. They came to the eldest, who was a girl and her mother's pride, and said "No, no; we can not let you have her." They went down the line, and finally came to Dick, the wayward boy, and they said, "No; it would never do to let him go." Finally they came down to the baby and looked into his dimpled cheeks and innocent face, and the mother said, "No, no, John; we can not let the baby go." And so none of the children went, and it is the same way in the House of Representatives. We come to consider these appropriations and say, "No, no; we can not drop this one." We go to the next one and say, "No, no; it will never do to let this one go out." And it winds up by our making the appropriations asked for, and then coming here on the floor of the House and hurling invectives at the department heads for spending the very money that we ourselves have appropriated. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, during the war we could go home to our people and say that the war was on and we did not know how much money would be needed, and so we had no alternative, but to appropriate it, but I tell you the people are not going to be satisfied with that explanation any more. [Applause.] They are going to call us to account and lay some of the responsibility where it belongs, and they ought to do it.

Now, what about this item under search here? I gave you the figures yesterday and the amount that has already been appropriated for this experiment—$175,000 in 1917; nothing in the year 1918, because the same appropriation was made available; in 1919, $127,600; and in 1920, 127,600, making an aggregate of $430,200 for this experiment. These gentlemen of the committee say that Mr. Turrentine now says that the department has put the experiment on a paying basis. Well, I will admit that he estimates and predicts that for next year they will have it on a paying basis, but I have watched these department heads, and I find that in a good many cases it is a good deal easier for them to estimate and predict what they are going to do than to tell what they have done. Now, let us see what they have done.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will my colleague yield now?

Mr. BLACK. In a moment I will yield. Let us see what they have done according to the testimony of Mr. Turrentine, found in the report from which these gentlemen have read. He shows that for the year 1918 they sold a total amount of products, including potash, iodine, carbon, and all by-products, $29,149. In the fiscal year 1919 they sold in potash, iodine, carbon, and all the by-products, $29,147. They have sold for the fiscal year 1920, July to November, inclusive, $22,415, making a total of only $80,712.06 against a total expenditure of $430,000. That is what they have done.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Do I understand my colleague to be willing to abandon this project at this time and lose this $220,000 in view of the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY] that Mr. Turrentine says now that this is on a paying basis?

Mr. BLACK. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question, and I want to ask him one. Let me read what Mr. Turrentine says. Then I want to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. Turrentine says if you continue this experiment you will make a success of it and be able to sell the plant for $100,000. I want to ask the gentleman if he is willing to vote an appropriation of $193,200 in order to enable them to sell the plant for $100,000?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will answer the gentleman by saying that in view of the statement of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY] that a great benefit will come from this experiment to the farmers of this country, I am willing to do that.

Mr. BLACK. All right. Now I will answer the gentleman there.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I want to answer my colleague first. That is a fair inquiry. Let us see what benefit will result to the farmer if the experiment is an entire success. I will answer that by reading from the testimony of Dr. Turrentine himself. Here is what he says, on page 27 of the hearings:

Since it has been demonstrated that not less than 500,000 tons per annum of raw kelp are available in the vicinity of Summerland, it is to be assumed that when it is demonstrated what profits are obtainable from the treatment of kelp by the process developed here plants will be established sufficient in capacity to utilize the raw material available.

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Just wait until I finish my statement. According to their estimates there are only 500,000 tons of kelp in the Pacific Ocean near Summerland.

Mr. JACOWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. BLACK. Wait until I get through. According to the testimony of Dr. Turrentine they get only 30 pounds of potash out of a ton of kelp. Therefore if they harvest all of the 500,000 tons, you will have only 1,500,000 pounds of potash, or 7,500 tons, as a maximum production; and what good will that do the farmer, when before the war they were consuming more than 200,000 tons a year?

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. JACOWAY. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas this question: If we can produce potash so that we can compete with every other country in the world and, in addition to that, if we can produce potash—I care not whether 7,500 tons or 75,000 tons—and the overhead charges will produce that much potash without any cost to the taxpayers of this country, then would he strike this item out of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. What I contend is that no such successful production can be made from kelp. I will read from Dr. Turrentine's testimony. I read from page 22.

Mr. JACOWAY. Read from page 32.

Mr. BLACK. Here is what he says:

In reporting upon experiments down to date in their present form they would not carry conviction anywhere and would only reflect discredit upon our organization.

That is what Dr. Turrentine says. He says in their present form their experiments would not carry conviction anywhere, and therefore they want to continue it at the expense of the Government for another year, making five years of continuance of these experiments. Now, I am not opposed to developing potash; on the contrary, I am in favor of it. We have a provision in the bill that has been carried for 10 years, I think, appropriating $36,000 a year to be expended for that purpose, and we have developed some practical sources of potash; and these sources include Searles Lake in California, the alkali lakes in Nebraska, and the reduction of cement and blast-furnace dust in some of our factories. I do not know how much of this development is traceable to the appropriations of Congress. Really, I think that the only one of these sources which will prove economically feasible is the production of potash from cement and blast-furnace dust by what is known as the Cottrell method. If I had time I would discuss that method at some length, but I can not do so now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to appropriating money out of the Government Treasury to help any experiment that will bring benefit to any part of the country, but it seems to me that after we have gone on for four or five years appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars for experimental purposes it ought to get on some sound basis so that it can support itself. [Applause.]

Year before last we appropriated over $120,000, and last year we appropriated over $120,000 to help these experimental propositions. Now they come in here and ask for $192,000. It seems to me that after spending all of these hundreds of thousands of dollars they ought to have demonstrated to somebody that this proposition was a success so that some private business enterprise could take hold of it. I am not in favor of the Government going into all manner of business enterprises. It seems to me that it is time the Government should regulate its own affairs and act as a government and keep out of private business and let the people conduct the private business of the country.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I gather from what the gentleman says that he would abandon this experiment?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I have not said so.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Would he abandon it?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not know as we ought to abandon it, but I do not think that we ought to go on every year increasing the appropriation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We experiment with the boll weevil.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And they keep marching on, and nobody proposes to abandon it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. And so the argument is that these experiments will keep marching on, and next year they will want $400,000 or more.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; the amount appropriated is within the discretion of Congress.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to have read in my time for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment: Strike out the figures "$192,900" and insert in lieu thereof "$92,900."

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that after we have appropriated so many hundred thousand dollars for these experiments we should have reached a stage where it would prove a success or begin to cut down the appropriations, and I suggest an appropriation of $92,900 ought to do some good and enable them to reach a conclusion whether the industry is to be a success. I think here is a good chance to save $100,000.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. RUBEY. I would say that the amendment would be acceptable if we could use the money obtained for the sale of the product, but that money is turned into the Treasury.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Have they sold any yet?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes; this year, $100,000.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. How much did they spend?

Mr. RUBEY. In the start they expended $430,000. They have turned in $80,000, and they are going to be prepared to turn in $100,000—within $27,000 of this year's appropriation.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. They have spent over $400,000 in these experiments; now, would you be willing to take the profits, without any appropriation, to go on with the experiment?

Mr. RUBEY. No; because they have to have new machinery to develop the by-products, and the by-products are going to pay for the experiment.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not wish to oppose any appropriation for experimental purposes as long as there is hope of the development of processes which will permit of successful manufacture of potash and its by-products in this country, but it does seem to me that with the large appropriation made during the last four years that we should have reached a point where private enterprise would be warranted in taking hold of the business or the Government should cease spending such great sums of money; and I do hope that this will be the last year that Congress will be asked to appropriate money for this proposition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago a combination was in existence in Germany, where the only known potash mines of the world are located, controlling the price at which potash was sold. That combination was to end at 12 o'clock on a certain night. Promptly, within a few minutes after 12 o'clock on that night, representatives from the various American industries obtained the signatures to new contracts from special mine owners for the sale of potash to them on terms named in the contracts. Immediately thereafter the German Government interfered and required, in effect at least, the cancellation of those contracts, and absolutely undertook to determine the price at which potash could be sold by the German mine owners to the world. That matter startled everybody interested in the use of potash throughout the world, and especially startled those in this country who were buying immense quantities for use in the manufacture of fertilizer.

The German Government had shown by its action that it would undertake to require the potash mine owners of Germany to charge all that the trade would carry for potash. While Germany had control of the potash by producing it, it proposed to make the world pay for it. I do not say this in criticism of Germany, that was their right. It was then at that time, and in consequence of that attitude, that the Congress of the United States made two appropriations for the purpose of trying to discover potash on American soil. One of the appropriations went to the Agricultural Department through the Committee on Agriculture, carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill, to permit the Department of Agriculture to see whether they could not find some method of producing this potash. The other appropriation went to the Interior Department to see whether that department could not find potash in existence upon the public domain or elsewhere in the United States. Both experiments or investigations in a way have succeeded. They have discovered, or through them there has been discovered, a large number of old salt lakes in Nebraska and elsewhere, from which potash is now being produced—not very cheaply, but a considerable quantity was produced during the war—probably not as cheaply as potash can be bought from Germany, because, in the end, the German Government and the German mine owners will undersell the men who are producing potash from these salt lakes. The Agricultural Department discovered giant kelp, a form of seaweed growing along the Pacific coast, which might very cheaply be cut, dried, burned, and the residue reduced to potash and other salts.

If we abandon the effort to produce this potash under American methods, we absolutely turn all of our industries that depend upon potash over to the tender mercy of the German Government. I am not in favor of making it possible that we shall not be able to obtain potash except at the price and by the will of the German Government.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have only a second left and I do not yield.

Mr. BLACK. I just wanted to say that the gentleman's statement is incorrect, and that Chile furnishes the largest sources of supply.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am sorry that the gentleman persists when one's time is short in using it up. This experiment has not fully developed a commercial basis of potash production, but if it shall cost millions of dollars in the end and will develop that we can produce potash in America for commercial use, for making into fertilizer for use on the farms, it will be worth more to the Government than a hundred million dollars spent on an Army or a Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I was at first opposed to the proposition contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, but on further and careful consideration I have concluded that it ought to be adopted. I am not, however, so sanguine as the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Nebraska about this plant paying its expenses or anything like it. On the contrary, I do not believe that it will. I think that if the gentlemen from the Department of Agriculture, the experts who testified, had thought it would pay expenses, instead of asking for a sum around $190,000 they would have asked for a revolving fund of about $25,000 or $35,000, which would have carried the project along.

The Tariff Commission has made a report upon the potash situation of the United States. It reports that in its judgment this proposition to make potash from kelp will not be commercially successful, but that is a mere opinion, and they do not advance it very positively. There are great opportunities in this line. It seems to me that it is really worth taking the chance, even if it does cost something in the end and we finally find that after all it is not practicable.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I have only five minutes. I hope the gentleman will pardon me; he has taken already 25 minutes on this subject and I only have 5. As I have said, we are opening the doors to possibilities that are almost unlimited. It is said that Japan has already made a success of producing potash from kelp. I can not say how that is, but here is a chance, and if it does prove finally commercially successful, as these experts believe it will, it will be one of the greatest things for agriculture and commerce of the United States that has ever been discovered. Before the war we imported about 1,000,000 pounds of potash salts annually at a cost of about $15,000,000. At the present high price of the product that would have cost us probably from forty to fifty million dollars. All this money went out of the country. We were then at the mercy of the German potash producers. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has well said, they have attempted in the past to absolutely control this industry, to crush out all industries.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one brief question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I trust my friend will pardon me, for I can not possibly finish what I want to say in the time that I have. I think I know what the gentleman has in mind. I perfectly understand that a large portion of the potash deposits which Germany formerly owned are in Alsace-Lorraine, which now belongs to France, but gentlemen who have investigated the situation and testified before my committee say that there are equally large deposits within the soil left in the German boundaries, and they will be used in an attempt to crush out our American industries. The potash users of the South have acted in a way which seems to me very much contrary to their own best interests. When efforts have been made in this House or in the Committee on Ways and Means to put a tariff on potash that would sustain the American industries in this line they have always been opposed and they were opposed last year in the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I think possibly might be opposed now by gentlemen from the South. If they had not opposed efforts of that kind they would not now be paying as high prices for potash as they are. When they could obtain no protection the potash manufacturers of Utah and Nebraska shut down their factories. One of the largest plants lying idle took fire and was burned. The scarcity of shipping operated against imports and prices have gone skyward.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Did not the eastern people along the shore also oppose it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They did, and I think they are seeing their mistake now, as I hope gentlemen from the South will.

If a reasonable protection had been afforded to the American producers of potash it would not be so scarce now. Moreover, all our manufacturers ask is a chance to get established, and then they will produce potash at half its present price. Meantime, although the war is over, there is still a scarcity of potash and we are not using half the amount as a fertilizer that might be beneficially used. For this reason I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have five minutes left.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I shall take one minute of that and yield the remainder to my colleague, the chairman of the committee. I take the one minute to say that I have investigated this matter from end to end. I have heard every bit of the testimony, I have gone into it in detail, I am absolutely satisfied that the kelp plant is going to be a success and therefore I want to urge that this project be continued for another year.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to come immediately after the Anderson amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that already there are two amendments pending.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then let it be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: After the Anderson amendment insert:

"Provided, That the product obtained from such experimentation may be sold at a price to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and the amount obtained from the sale thereof shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I take it there can be no objection to the amendment. It simply provides a way of disposing of the products of the plant. I heartily concur in what has been said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] and others. Now that we have carried on the experiment for a number of years it seems wise to continue it for another year at least. Inasmuch as there is a prospect of $223,000 being turned into the Treasury as a result of one more year of operation, I believe the work should be continued. I believe that the $192,000 will be expended to good advantage.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe as much as $200,000 will be derived from this experiment this year?

Mr. HAUGEN. About $223,000, I understand, is likely to be derived from the sale of the potash and by-products during the year for which we are appropriating.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe it is a good business proposition for Congress to appropriate $192,000 at this time?

Mr. HAUGEN. After the first appropriation had been made the Secretary appeared before the committee. He was somewhat in doubt at that time as to the advisability of expending money further for this work. After investigating the matter he made an earnest request to the committee to make appropriations for the experiment to be carried on. If the gentleman will turn to the hearings held this year he will find that much encouragement for success is given. We all appreciate the importance of potash and fertilizer materials, especially at this time. I believe that we should do everything to encourage their production.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the chairman thinks they need $192,000, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. We would not have reported that amount if we had not thought it necessary.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I wanted to ask the statesman from Kansas if the effort he has made here in behalf of economy is going to drop away into lip effort only?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I am glad to say to the gentleman from Texas that if this money is not needed I would like to cut down the appropriation, but if they need it and it will result in the successful experiment and produce quantities of potash, as has been stated on the floor here, I do not wish to stand in the way of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I dislike to see such a splendid effort go up in smoke.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, on its face it would appear to be laudable and statesmanlike to appropriate money, as the pending Agricultural appropriation bill provides, to the end that a potash industry be developed in the United States, but I very respectfully propound the question, Why ascertain how to derive potash from the kelp plant, as the section provides, if we are not going to actually develop and preserve, against ruthless foreign competition, a potash industry when found feasible so to do? I regard this as a very pertinent question in view of the existing situation, which is that we already, as a result of the war, have developed a domestic potash industry, yet young, but exceedingly promising, barring only the menace of ruthless and ruinous competition by importations from Germany of potash produced by low-priced labor. Why continue this experimentation for deriving potash from kelp in face of the fact that the Sixty-fifth Congress, after listening to the presentations and strong appeals made by the producers of potash from Nebraska and California saline lakes—specifically, the Ways and Means Committee—reached the conclusion, though with evident reluctance, that no protection could be afforded or the industry be otherwise safeguarded, at least for the time being? It was then expected that Germany would soon resume making importations of potash into the United States in quantities equal to the entire demand of our domestic consumers, and that this foreign potash would be delivered at the places of consumption at prices so low as to render it impossible for American producers to compete. But the expectations or estimates of the amount of importations of foreign potash were not and have not yet been fully realized, with the result that there has been a shortness of the supply of potash for American consumption, including what has been produced in America with what has been imported from Germany.

The status has been, and at present is, that potash is being sold at a somewhat higher price, and that cotton raisers in the South and potato raisers in localities where potash is required are having to pay higher prices for the potash they consume than would have been the case had legislation been passed by the Sixty-fifth Congress securing to domestic producers the preference over foreign producers in the American market to the extent of the domestic production, as provided by the bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the bill embodying the license plan. If this license scheme had been granted or American producers had been otherwise safeguarded, contracts could have been secured by fertilizer companies with our own producers for all the potash produced in America at not exceeding $2.50 per unit, and this would naturally have fixed the price of imported potash at as low a figure, and thus a great saving to our American consumers would have been secured.

Nebraska and California potash producers, who earnestly appealed for Government assistance in some form for the short period of two years, were given no encouragement whatever by the Congress, with the result that there was a total suspension of the production of potash in the United States, following the armistice, for several months, and this condition would have continued to this time except for the failure of importations to be made from Germany to the extent that had been estimated—perhaps actually contracted for in America. But, perceiving that a domestic demand existed for a larger amount of potash than was coming from abroad, several of the larger potash plants in Nebraska courageously and commendably resumed operations late last summer, and have since continued in operation at their full capacities. One of the largest plants, which during the suspension of work had burned down, has since been rebuilt, and is likely now in operation.

These Nebraska plants are, very fortunately for consumers, supplying a greater part of the potash that is to be used as fertilizers for the coming season. If these plants were not producing and supplying the market as they are, the consumers, left at the mercy of German and other foreign producers, would be obliged to pay a yet higher price than now prevails, possibly 100 per cent higher. This fact demonstrates the wisdom, if not the expediency, of giving governmental encouragement to the young American industry, at least until it shall have been developed to a degree of efficiency to enable it to compete with the notorious foreign potash monopoly. Just how long the American producers may be able, without the fostering policy of the Government, to compete with foreign importations depends upon the conditions which may exist and operate in Germany, including labor conditions there, railway transportation to the seas, thence ocean rates to America. If the importations of potash from Germany should continue to be limited, as up to the present time since the signing of the armistice, for two more years, some of our leading producers feel confident that by a further development and improvement of the economies of their production in the interim, American manufacturers would then be able to compete successfully with the importers of German potash, and they are probably right about this, so long as the nefarious and ruinous practice of dumping should not be employed by the foreign monopoly.

But as was conclusively proven to the Ways and Means Committee at the hearings had in the last Congress, the German producers through their duly authorized agents had more than once warned would-be producers of potash in America that their undertakings would be driven to the wall by dumping German-produced potash onto the American market at a normal price until American production would be extinguished. This ought to make conclusive the expediency of protecting the American industry against foreign competition, first, until the industry may be placed upon a thoroughly commercial basis and thereafter against illegitimate foreign competition by the practice of the dumping policy. What is necessary is to be for America first. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about our annual expense, steadily increasing from less than seventy-five millions in 1860 to twenty-five billions last year. For many years we have heard that our boys were getting soft; war proved them sound. Whatever the war did cost we had to spend it. Nobody complains, because it was worth the money. We won the war on credit and by economizing, to sustain the boys who with their physical condition and self-reliance were certain to win. We won the war because we had the resources, which came from a scientific change of raw material into finished product. Our expenses have grown to maintain bureaus. Maybe the bureaus are a good investment; maybe scientific methods furnished by the bureaus produced five times their cost. Knowledge beats bullhead luck 99 to 1. Maybe bureaus brought information which to-day places us in front. Debt is evidence of sound business judgment. Men owning a shipbuilding plant worth $200,000 should go in debt to produce a ship worth half a million. Merchants are wise to buy on credit goods which can be sold at profit. Farmers with growing pastures should mortgage land to buy young cattle, which grow each year into greater security and wealth. Our business is done upon 10 per cent cash and 90 per cent credit and confidence.

Who can say how much the Bureau of Agriculture has developed our resources? Maybe enough with added production to win the war. If that be true, this bureau was cheap at any cost. There are many bureaus of only lesser importance, so it is the duty of men in Congress to have complete knowledge that bureaus are conducted honestly and money wisely spent. Our national progress has been beyond example, owing to partial development of untold raw resources.

It is our duty to know, so far as can be known, to what extent this bureau has contributed to that wonderful advance.

Practical knowledge has a certain habit of turning liabilities into assets, installing economies of operation with increased production. Let us carefully examine before we condemn bureaus, for they may be the mainspring of knowledge which causes rapid progress. Experiments are costly in time, money, and labor. Our war debts are owed to ourselves, the payment of which will place huge sums in circulation, benefiting all workers.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: After the ANDERSON amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the product obtained from such experimentation may be sold at a price to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the amount obtained from the sale thereof be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Entomology: One entomologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk and executive assistant, $2,250; 1 administrative assistant, $2,250; 1 editor, $2,250; 1 financial clerk, $1,800; 5 clerks, class 4; 10 clerks, class 3; 18 clerks, class 2; 25 clerks, class 1; 8 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 insect delineator, $1,600; 2 insect delineators, at $1,400 each; 2 entomological draftsmen, at $1,400 each; 1 entomological draftsman, $1,080; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 entomological preparator, $1,000; 4 entomological preparators, at $840 each; 8 entomological preparators, at $720 each; 1 laborer, $1,080; 2 messengers or laborers, at $900 each; 1 messenger or laborer, $840; 3 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 6 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 laborer, $540; 1 laborer, $480; 2 charwomen, at $480 each; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $132,810.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out on line 20 the sum of $132,810.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 57, line 20, strike out "$132,810."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in this amount, under this head, 12 messengers are provided for. On account of the numerous other messengers in this bill I claim that these are not needed. In order that the question may not be misunderstood, I want to show exactly how many we have in this agricultural bill. In this one bill, for one department of government, we have, in the Secretary's office, 70 messengers; Farm Management office, 5 messengers; Weather Bureau, 166 messengers, on page 7, an unlimited number; Bureau of Animal Industry, 80 messengers; Bureau of Plant Industry, 167 messengers; Forest Service, 49 messengers; Bureau of Chemistry, 24 messengers; Bureau of Soils, 4 messengers; Bureau of Entomology, 12 messengers; Bureau of Biological Survey, 4 messengers; Accounts and Disbursements, 2 messengers; Division of Publications, 51 messengers; Bureau of Crop Estimates, 8 messengers; department library, 5 messengers; States Relations Service, 26 messengers; Bureau of Public Roads, 21 messengers; Bureau of Markets, 53 messengers; enforcement of insecticide act, 3 messengers; Federal Horticultural Board, 4 messengers; in all, in this one bill, 754 messengers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], a member of this committee, yesterday claimed that the 76 watchmen in the Secretary's office alone meant watchmen for all of the buildings in this department. I want to call his attention to the fact that that is not the case. Turn over here to page 6, under another bureau, and in addition to these 76 watchmen you will find 4 more watchmen provided for. Turn to page 34, under another bureau, and you will find 4 more watchmen provided for.

I want to say that if this is economy we are never going to be able to convince our people at home of that fact. I want to say that in the Department of Agriculture they do not need these 754 messengers. I want to say that they could get along with half of that number. And I hope before this committee quits, before they stop with his bill, I hope before they bring it to a vote, that the chairman will bring in an amendment—because that is the only way on earth we are ever going to change it—I hope the chairman will bring in an amendment cutting these 754 messengers down to at least 300, and then we would have about 200 too many.

I wish my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. PAIGE] would tell this committee what he knows about the number of useless employees down here in these departments. I wish he would tell the chairman, because he comes from the majority side of the House, and possibly the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture would act on his suggestion.

I know that if this good Republican, Mr. PAIGE, should get up here and tell you what he knows as to what one of the bureau chiefs has told him, maybe the chairman would bring in an amendment cutting these 754 messengers down to possibly two or three hundred. Mr. PAIGE may do it, too, because he is not afraid. He is one of the few men in this House who is not afraid. I hope he will take the floor in a few minutes and move to strike out a word or two words in some item and take the opportunity to tell you what he knows about it. He will tell you some facts that will astound you. They will not astound the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], because he knows. They will not astound the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], because he knows, and he has been trying to help me cut down the extravagance out of this bill. But we have not gotten a bit of assistance from this great Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, addressed to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I think that will explain the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask in that connection, without taking up the time of the House to do it, to put into the RECORD in connection with that letter my reply to it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have no objection to that. I think we can dispose of it more quickly in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the document submitted by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, February 11, 1920.

DEAR MR. HAUGEN: I am sending you herewith for your information a copy of a letter which the Secretary has just written to Representative BLANTON, with reference to certain statements made by him as to the number of messengers employed in the Department of Agriculture.

Very truly, yours,

F. R. HARRISON,
Assistant to the Secretary.

HON. G. N. HAUGEN,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

FEBRUARY 11, 1920.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: In the debate on the Agricultural appropriation bill for 1921 in the House of Representatives, Friday, February 6, I note your reference to the number of messengers employed in this department. You report a total of 743, which, in your opinion, is excessive. On page 2582 of the RECORD for February 6 you refer to "these hundreds of messengers who absolutely clog up every corridor of that department, so that it is hardly possible for a Member of Congress to pass." I can draw from your remarks only the inference that you believe this department to have 743 messengers in the city of Washington.

I wish to call your attention to certain facts in this connection, which throw an entirely different light on the matter. An analysis of the pending Agricultural appropriation bill indicates that 754 places, classified under the following titles, are provided: "Messengers," "Messengers or laborers," and "Messenger boys."

I invite your particular attention to the class "Messengers or laborers," which you appear to have included in your count of messengers. This classification is not accidental but is intentional, the obvious advantage being that it gives a certain flexibility in filling places with either messengers or laborers, as vacancies occur and the necessities of the work require. Of the 754 places in question 255 are in the field, leaving 499 located in Washington. Of this 499 a total of 194 are laborers, leaving 305 places in the bill for employees actually assigned to the work of messengers in the city of Washington. Nearly all of these employees, when not engaged in carrying messages, perform other simple but necessary tasks, such as the opening of mail, inclosing mail for dispatch, operating duplicating machines, and the like. If messengers were not employed on these minor operations, clerical help would have to be employed at higher salaries to do the work.

With special reference to the office of the Secretary, the pending bill shows 40 places as messengers or laborers and 30 as messenger boys. Of the 40 places as messenger or laborer 39 are occupied by laborers and 1 by a messenger. Some of the 39 laborers are used for cleaning the halls and toilets of seven buildings, including the Administration Building, and in addition perform other labor as may be required, such as moving furniture and supplies, weighing ice, helping to load and unload trucks, and the like. Others are assigned to laboring work in the mechanical shops. Twenty messenger boys and 1 messenger, a total of 21 employees, are doing the messenger work for the offices of the Secretary, Assistant Secretary, chief clerk, solicitor, appointment clerk, mechanical superintendent, and 6 other branches of the immediate office of the Secretary. Several branches of the Secretary's office are not located in the Administration Building, and the messenger service performed by the 21 employees mentioned above is not only from office to office within the Administration Building, but also from and to five other buildings, some of them at a considerable distance from the office of the Secretary.

It is important also, I think, to remind you that the Department of Agriculture occupies 42 separate buildings or parts of buildings in the city of Washington. Of these, 11, owned by the Government, are located on the Government's reservation between Twelfth and Fourteenth Streets, B Street north, and B Street south, in the Mall. The Public Buildings Commission has recently assigned to the Department of Agriculture portions of the Government-owned buildings known as Unit C, in Henry Park, and the old Council of National Defense Building at Eighteenth and D Streets NW, and part of 1418 Pennsylvania Avenue NW. In addition, the department occupies as offices and laboratories 18 rented buildings and for storage purposes 9 rented buildings. These various locations are widely scattered, and some of them, such as the seed warehouse at 339 Pennsylvania Avenue NW.; the Weather Bureau, at Twenty-fourth and M Streets NW., which is more than a mile from the Administration Building; the Forest Service, at 930 F Street NW.; the Bureau of Public Roads at 515 Fourteenth Street NW.; the Busch Building, at 710 E Street NW.; and the Homer Building, at Thirteenth and F Streets NW., are located at considerable distances from the Administration Building, in the Mall. This necessarily requires a considerable force of messengers for the carrying of communications from and to the Administration Building and between branches of the same bureau located in several separated buildings. Without an adequate messenger service the work of the department would be seriously delayed. Even to storage buildings it is frequently necessary to send messengers or laborers to procure supplies, handle incoming or outgoing freight, rearrange the contents of the building, etc.

In the RECORD of February 7, pages 2610 and 2616, I note your comment upon the item for watchmen under the office of the Secretary. This force is not maintained for guarding the office of the Secretary alone. It guards the Administration Building, in which the office of the Secretary is located, and 21 other buildings occupied by the department. All of the 42 buildings mentioned above are not watched by this force, as the quarters in Unit C and in the Council of National Defense buildings are guarded by the War Department watchmen stationed in those buildings. In some cases also one watchman is assigned during the night to two buildings. Storage buildings occupied by the department are not regular stations of the watch force, but as a rule they are visited during the night by the lieutenants of the watch. The force of 73 men is divided into three shifts of eight hours each and guards the Government's property night and day every day in the year. For administrative purposes the entire force is carried on the roll of the Secretary's office, but it guards the 21 buildings referred to above as well as the Administration Building. In all, 70 stations are covered by the three shifts of watchmen. During the day, when the buildings are occupied by the regular force of employees, fewer watchmen are maintained. There are 15 men on the day shift, 28 on the first night shift, and 27 on the second night shift. The entire force is directed and supervised by the chief clerk and the assistant chief clerk of the department; the assistant chief clerk of the department is also captain of the watch, and there is one lieutenant for each shift. For purposes of discipline and administration it is obviously wise to have the force of watchmen under one control, and this is the reason why the 73 watchmen and 3 lieutenants, to whom you refer, are carried in the bill under the office of the Secretary. The only other alternative would be to divide the item up in the appropriation bill among the various bureaus. In this there would be no advantage whatever, and the obvious disadvantage would be the greater difficulty in the control of the force.

Very truly, yours, E. T. MEREDITH, Secretary.

During the reading of the above the time of Mr. HAUGEN was extended five minutes.

Following is the letter submitted by Mr. BLANTON:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1920.

Hon. E. T. MEREDITH,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have your favor of the 11th instant, just received, wherein you mention my speech against allowing 743 messengers for your department and 76 watchmen for your office, and I note that you seem to take exception to my assertion "that messengers clog up your corridors until it is hardly possible for us to pass."

You, however, admit that you have in your department not 743 messengers, as asserted by me, but 754 messengers, whatever other services they may perform.

If you will carefully inspect the present Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12272, which we are now considering, you will find that these messengers are allotted to the following bureaus and offices in your department, to wit:

Secretary's office	70
Weather Bureau	166
Farm Management office	5
Bureau of Animal Industry	80
Bureau of Plant Industry	167
Forest Service	49
Bureau of Chemistry	24
Bureau of Soils	4
Bureau of Entomology	12
Bureau of Biological Survey	4
Accounts and Disbursements	2
Division of Publications	51
Bureau of Crop Estimates	8
Department library	5
States Relation Service	26
Bureau of Public Roads	21
Bureau of Markets	53
Enforcement of insecticide act	3
Federal Horticultural Board	4
	754

You say that some of these 754 messengers do work as laborers and in clerical capacities. If this is true, then it forces me to the other conclusion, that of the thousands of clerks and laborers allowed your department in other parts of the bill, we have given you many more than necessary.

Now, on page 6 of the bill, under the head of "Office of the Secretary," you are given 1 lieutenant of the watch, 2 assistant lieutenants of the watch, and 73 watchmen. You seem to indicate that no other watchmen are allowed your department. You will note on page 6 that 4 additional watchmen are given you, and again on page 34 of the bill that 4 more additional watchmen are given your department.

You will also notice on page 7 of the bill that an unlimited number of messengers are allowed you, so that in addition to the 754 messengers actually specified in the bill you have authority to employ an unlimited number in addition.

I noted with much gratification your assertion in the press at the time you assumed this office that you were going to retrench, but I must say that I am disappointed in this bill, as little is found therein. It appropriates for your department alone $30,540,034 for the coming fiscal year. If the farmers of this country received 100 per cent value for all of such money expended I would be willing to double or even treble this appropriation; but I feel sure that you will agree with me that, after all, the farmers and agriculturists of the United States are benefited very little by these enormous annual appropriations in their behalf.

In addition to the 754 messengers allowed you, and the 76 watchmen given your office, and the other watchmen allowed your department, if the farmers and stockmen of the United States only knew how many additional thousands of messengers and watchmen there are on the Government pay roll, given the many other departments here in Washington, they would feel almost inclined to abolish the Agricultural Department and many other departments.

Besides the salaries drawn by each of them, they all get a bonus of $240 additional each year.

Now, Mr. Secretary, note the following excerpts from speeches of other Congressmen made on my various amendments to cut down this messenger service in your department:

Mr. MONDELL said:

"It is no doubt true there are too many. Those of us who visit these departments believe there is an unnecessary number of clerks and probably an unnecessary number of messengers in many of them."

Then Mr. MANN of Illinois, the great leader on that side of the House, said:

"Now, I am inclined to agree very largely with some of the suggestions made by the gentleman from TEXAS. I have no doubt there are too many messengers in the Agricultural Department and in every other department of the Government. The Committee on Agriculture has more important duties to perform than finding out what each one of the 700 messengers in the department is doing. I am inclined to think that it would not hurt anybody in the end if we very materially reduced the number of messengers, who are now so thick that they fall over each other in every department." [Applause.]

You will note that he received applause.

This is what Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, a member of the Committee on Agriculture, said:

"There are too many employees. [Applause.] Why does the bill still provide for too many? Because the Committee on Agriculture was unable to get assistance or suggestions from heads of bureaus as to where cuts could properly be made in the bill, cuts that the majority of the committee said were necessary. * * * We could not eliminate the excess; we could not tell which clerk, which watchman, which messenger should be refused, and we received no suggestion from anyone connected with the department as to which of them could be eliminated. * * * And another thing that makes the number of employees in that department larger than it ought to be is that every one of them is under civil service, and time after time the heads of the bureau, in answer to inquiries, have told us that there are clerks and other employees on the rolls who are incompetent. We asked why incompetents are not dismissed, and the answer was that they are under civil service; that if one is to be gotten rid of there must be charges and a trial, so the bureau hesitates, and that is one of the reasons they do not proceed against anyone."

Now, from Mr. MADDEN, the majority sage on departmental affairs, I will read what he says on pagese 2611 and 2612 of the RECORD:

"I think that it will be admitted by every man here that if there ever was a time when we should pare to the bone that time is now. It is conceded by every impartial observer that in all the branches of the Government service in the District of Columbia we have more than 40,000 people who are not needed, but you can not get the cooperation of any man in the Government service to eliminate them from the pay roll. * * * And I am perfectly willing to enter upon a campaign now to assist in the elimination of every unnecessary employee.

"Mr. BLANTON. Then vote for my amendment.

"Mr. MADDEN. I will. I intend to vote for the gentleman's amendment. * * * We had about 30,000 people on the pay roll in Washington when the war came on, and to-day we have 110,000. Does anyone believe that 110,000 clerks are needed here in these days of peace? Not at all."

Now, let us see what was said by Mr. HAUGEN, the chairman of this committee. Here is what he says on page 2612 of the RECORD:

"It was suggested to a representative of the department that he might indicate what cuts could best be made in the bill. He indicated that he would like to accommodate the committee, but I inferred that it would be embarrassing to him to suggest a cut in one bureau and not in another. * * * The committee can not go to the departments to find out how many messengers they must employ and how many they need. We must take their word for it. * * * We may have more messengers here than we ought to have, and I think they have more in the departments than they ought to have."

Now, let us see what Mr. TILSON, the expert parliamentarian from Connecticut, says about this matter on page 2613 of the RECORD:

"Contrary to what has been done in most other cases, this particular item has been increased and the number of employees as well in a considerable number of instances. This item in 1918 carried $418,000 plus; in 1919 it carried $440,000 plus; in 1920, the current law, it carries $491,000 plus, a jump of $50,000; and now in this bill there is another jump of over $35,000 in this one item. If we ever intend to get back to normal, to anything like where we were before the war, it is necessary not only to not increase but to cut wherever possible."

You will note, Mr. Secretary, that Mr. MANN, the former Republican minority leader, and one of the greatest statesmen who has ever served in the House, said "that the messengers are so thick that they fall over each other in every department."

You will also note that Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, a member of the committee, said that one of your bureau chiefs admitted that there are incompetent employees in your department, but that no one would assume the responsibility of discharging them.

I am hopeful, Mr. Secretary, that you will see that at least the incompetent and inefficient ones are discharged. Note the following from my speech yesterday:

"The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said that there are 40,000 useless, idle clerks too many here in the city of Washington.

"Mr. MADDEN. And I repeat it.

"Mr. BLANTON. And he repeats it."

In conclusion, Mr. Secretary, let me remind you that our Government is now facing a deficit of over $3,000,000,000, and somebody must lead a determined fight for economy and retrenchment, an economy that is more than a mere lip economy, but an economy that is real and that will sure enough retrench, so that the taxes of the people may be lowered rather than raised. I am ready to cooperate with you in every way possible.

With kindest wishes, I am

Very sincerely and cordially, yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, including a special investigation of the Hessian fly and the chinch bug, $145,660.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, at this time I desire to offer a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY: Page 58, after line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the European corn borer in Massachusetts, New York, and other States, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect in these States or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $500,000: Provided, That of this sum $250,000 shall be immediately available."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it as being new legislation unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. RUBEY. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to make the point of order or to reserve it?

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri if the committee considered this matter?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order with reference to the proviso, which makes part of the sum available, but not the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, after line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the European corn borer in Massachusetts, New York, and other States, and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect in the States or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $300,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that on the ground that the amendment is new legislation unauthorized by law, and it is not germane to the paragraph following which it is offered, which provides, between lines 15 and 17, for investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage plants and special investigations of the Hessian fly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman contend that the corn borer is not an insect?

Mr. BLANTON. From the manner in which the amendment is drawn, the Chair will note in connection with this paragraph that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the further point of order that the gentleman makes?

Mr. BLANTON. That it is new legislation and not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. RUBEY. I do not think the paragraph is subject to a point of order. It certainly can not be subject to a point of order because it appears at this point in the bill. This is the Bureau of Entomology, that deals with this subject entirely, and this amendment would be in order, so far as germaneness is concerned, at any point during the consideration of this particular bureau. In addition to that I desire to say that this item appeared in the last appropriation bill. I have asked to insert the paragraph in identically the same language that it was carried in the last appropriation bill and at the same place in the bill in which it was carried.

Under the general clause establishing the Department of Agriculture, if we can not appropriate for a pest of this kind, which bids fair to destroy the entire corn crop of the country, then I think it will be very difficult for us to legislate on any question. I do not concede the point of order. I do not think the language which I have offered is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that was offered as an amendment from the floor last year and did not come from the Agricultural Committee. It was not in the nature of legislation, but merely an amendment carried on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it can be contended successfully that this amendment is not in order because it is offered in this place in the bill. It is a provision for the expenditure of money under the Bureau of Entomology and would be in order, so far as the location is concerned, at any place in the bill relating to the Bureau of Entomology, following the first paragraph, which defines the general scope of the work.

It is not legislation, as the gentleman from Texas contends. It is an appropriation, and, of course, must be authorized by law in order to overcome the point of order.

I have not before me the organic act establishing the Department of Agriculture. My impression is that it is broad enough to authorize investigations of insects injurious to agriculture. If this amendment is held out of order, then the next paragraph, providing for the investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, and so forth, is also out of order, and the succeeding paragraph, for the investigation of insects infesting truck crops, including insects affecting the potato, sugar beet, cabbage, onion, and so forth, would also be out of order.

Now, I am under the impression—and it is only an impression at this time—that it has been held heretofore by Chairmen that under the organic act it is within the power of Congress, as authorized by law, to make appropriations for the investigation of insects injurious to agriculture.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the further point of order that it is introducing a new subject. The Committee on Agriculture have rights that individual Members of the House have not in bringing in appropriation bills. That was called to the attention of the House the other day by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] in citing a decision by Mr. Speaker Carlisle.

For instance, the Committee on Agriculture have the right to bring in various subjects that a Member on the floor could not offer in the way of an amendment, because when they bring in the Agricultural appropriation bill it is notice to each Member of the House what items are to be taken up and considered by the House of Representatives in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with respect to this appropriation bill. Members are not put on notice as to other items of $300,000 or $500,000, such as were just offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], that the committee has not recommended. Now, if the Committee on Agriculture after consideration of this item had recommended it, I would not have made the point of order against it.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. The only reason I make this point of order is because this item did not come from the Agricultural Committee. It did not come from the committee last year, but was offered on the floor by way of amendment. I made a point of order against it at that time, but upon the urgent request of the gentleman who offered it I withdrew the point of order. But now another year has passed. The Agricultural Committee again failed to bring it in. Why have they failed?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a matter as to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has the floor. The only reason I make the point of order is because the Agricultural Committee, in framing this bill, after allowing a proper hearing on matters in the bill, did not see fit to put in this item of $300,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a matter affecting the merits and not addressed to the point of order. Now, my friend from Texas says it is not in order to introduce new subject matter. After all this is a question of bugs, and it is not within the power of the Committee on Agriculture, by naming specific bugs, to exclude Congress from the right to name other bugs if they want to. The subject matter is bugs and the investigation of bugs. We have the right not only to investigate the chinch bug which destroys corn, but also the corn borer which destroys corn. It is just naming a new kind of bug.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]—

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the European corn borer in Massachusetts, New York, and other States, and to provide means for the control and spread of this insect in these States or elsewhere in the United States, in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, and the Department of Labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $300,000.

The Chair overrules the point of order that the point is not germane to the particular paragraph or place in the bill which it follows.

With reference to the point of order that the amendment introduces legislation unauthorized by law, the Chair finds that the organic act establishing the Department of Agriculture provides that there shall be a Department of Agriculture to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and most comprehensive sense of that word; and further, that the Secretary of Agriculture is to procure and preserve all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence and by practical and useful experiments, an accurate record of which shall be kept in his office, by the collection of statistics and by any other appropriate means within his power; and then it provides for the collection of valuable seeds and plants.

It will be noticed that with reference to this authority very broad and general language is used, and apparently the intention was in providing for this department to permit a wide latitude in whatever action might be taken either by Congress or by the head of the department. This amendment is offered to a place in the bill having to do with the Bureau of Entomology, which is for the investigation of insects affecting vegetation. In the view of the Chair the amendment proposes to meet an emergency and to provide for investigation and to provide a means of control and prevention of an insect which is destroying an agricultural crop; and the Chair is inclined to rule that it is in order to offer the amendment and that it does not violate the rule against new legislation or the introduction of a new subject. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, if I may I would like to have the attention of the House on this particular item for just a few moments. I want to explain the situation so that the House will thoroughly understand why this provision was not included in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

We made an appropriation for this work of $250,000 in the last Agricultural appropriation bill. The Committee on Agriculture had hearings last month on this particular subject. It was not included in the estimates this year for the reason that there was pending before the Committee on Appropriations of the House a special supplemental estimate sent in through the Treasury Department. The Committee on Appropriations along last summer, in the first deficiency bill which it brought in, failed to include this item. Now, what happened? Another estimate was sent to the House of Representatives. I hold a copy in my hand. That was dated December 15, 1919. When this deficiency appropriation came in the usual way, through the Secretary of the Treasury, it reached the Speaker's desk and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations for the reason that it contained a provision which made the money, $500,000, immediately available, and was therefore in the nature of a deficiency. So this supplemental estimate came from the Secretary of Agriculture in the regular way and was sent to the Appropriations Committee and did not come to the Agricultural Committee. That is the reason it is not included in this appropriation bill.

Now, this is a proposition that is on a par with a number of other appropriations that have been made. The corn of this country is one of the greatest and most important crops of the country. Take Missouri, my own State, and the adjoining States of Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, and so forth. We raise 50 per cent of the corn raised in the world. The State of Illinois alone raises one-tenth of all the corn raised in the world. Here is a pest that came into this country and we are trying to stop it before it gets to the great corn belt. This appropriation is on a par with two other appropriations that we have made in recent years.

A few years ago we went into the State of Florida, where we had the citrus canker, and it was feared that it would destroy the citrus industry in Florida and other Southern States. We appropriated half a million dollars for that. We have cleaned up that pest down there in Florida.

In the southern part of Texas there came in the pink boll worm, and we all feared that would destroy the cotton crop of the South. Immediately we made an appropriation, went down there, and cleaned up the pink boll worm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Now, here is a worm that came in before we established a quarantine. The quarantine was established, I believe, in 1912. If we had established a quarantine 10 or 15 years sooner, we would not have had to contend with this corn borer. It is supposed to have been brought in here from Hungary by the importation of broom corn. We made an appropriation last summer and they have been working with that money. The State of Massachusetts has appropriated $100,000 and the State of New York has appropriated $100,000. Their legislatures are in session now and they will cooperate with us, and the United States Government and these States can probably stop the corn borer where it is now and keep it from spreading out and growing into the corn belt throughout the Central West. For that reason I offer this amendment. I do not think it will be opposed by any member of the committee. We are all for it. We did not put it into the bill because, as I have explained, the matter was pending before the Appropriations Committee on a deficiency bill about the time that we reported this bill to the House, and therefore they waited for the Appropriations Committee to take action.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The deficiency bill, of course, could not cover the same space of time supposed to be covered by this bill. Why was no estimate sent to the Committee on Agriculture—because the department did not know enough to do it?

Mr. RUBEY. No; if the gentleman will read the estimates and the hearings on the bill and the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, he will see that it is all set forth there. The Chief of the Bureau of Entomology discussed this item in the committee hearings. The estimates had been sent to the Appropriations Committee and it was stated that if the amount was not allowed by the Appropriations Committee they would send in supplemental estimates.

In this table of estimates the statement is made that this matter is pending before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That shows the absolute lack of knowledge in the Agricultural Department in making estimates.

Mr. RUBEY. No; that was the first estimate sent in in July. This came up before the 1st of December.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Appropriations Committee only has jurisdiction over deficiencies for this fiscal year.

Mr. RUBEY. The statement is made in the Book of Estimates that the first deficiency bill has passed both Houses and that it included no additional funds for the corn borer and that the department will therefore submit a further supplemental estimate. The Secretary of Agriculture sent this estimate through the Secretary of the Treasury on the 15th of December, and thought that it would go to the Committee on Agriculture, but it did not go to the Committee on Agriculture, because it had in it a proposition for immediate use of the money, and so it went to the Committee on Appropriations. As I say, the Secretary of Agriculture thought it would go to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope the Department of Agriculture will have somebody over there, with its 40 or 50 solicitors and law clerks, who knows that an estimate for the next fiscal year relating to agriculture does not go to the Committee on Appropriations and that the estimate for deficiencies does not go to the Committee on Agriculture. It seems to me it was a stupid performance on the part of the Department of Agriculture. Can not they get along with less than $300,000?

Mr. RUBEY. I do not think it is possible. There is an outbreak in Massachusetts, two in New York covering 800 square miles, one outbreak in the southern part of New Hampshire, and two, I think, in the northwestern part of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And I believe there is an outbreak in New Jersey.

Mr. RUBEY. Not only that, but it is necessary for them to watch carefully the territory in the immediate vicinity where these shipments of broom corn were made a few years ago.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment with a proper amount. My State has recently issued a quarantine against bringing goods from Massachusetts or New York on account of the corn borer, and other Western States will probably do the same thing. Somebody has got to investigate the corn borer, because we do not want it out West.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has referred to the note in the Book of Estimates. The note states that the estimates for the control of the European corn borer have been omitted, and, further, that the estimates will be submitted later. There is no question that the proposition has merit, but the question now is, Are we going to legislate in the regular manner? The estimates submitted to Congress by the Secretary were referred to another committee—the Appropriations Committee. That committee is taking care of this proposition as far as the current year is concerned. When that committee has disposed of the proposition, the department states that it will submit an estimate in the regular way to our committee. This committee will then give the department's estimates consideration. The committee has always been fair in this matter. As gentlemen will remember, last year the department estimated $25,000. The committee gave $250,000. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] asks $300,000 in his amendment. The department estimates $500,000 for the remainder of the current fiscal year, which estimate was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. State officials and entomologists ask $2,000,000. Are we going to be governed by these guesses and suggestions, or are we going to rely on the experts who have investigated the matter and await the department's estimates so that we can act intelligently in the matter? It is true there is some criticism as to the work that has been done, but I am not going to point it out here, for it is unnecessary. After the department's estimates have been properly received and after the matter has been given proper consideration, the committee will report the sum which it thinks will be necessary to effectively carry out the work for next year.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. RUBEY. When will we have another opportunity? Not before we get another appropriation bill, and the borer is at work all over the country now.

Mr. HAUGEN. At the rate that we are going on this bill we will have ample opportunity to take up the matter with the department and still insert it in this bill. At this rate we will probably be here for a week longer. The department can surely submit an estimate in that time.

Mr. RUBEY. We have the estimate here that went to the Committee on Appropriations in regular form.

Mr. HAUGEN. It has been customary for our committee to act on estimates submitted to our committee and not to other committees. It is suggested that we ignore the department, the other committee to which the estimates were sent, and make an appropriation without estimates from the department or an agreement by the committee. What are estimates for, if not for advice and information? It is possible that $500,000 will be needed, possibly $300,000 will be sufficient, or $2,000,000 may be required, as suggested by many. It is too important a matter and involves too much to justify our appropriating here in the dark, especially when the matter is pending before another committee, which is fully as competent to deal with it as this committee.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. Let me ask the gentleman this, and I think it will be fair: Suppose we ask unanimous consent that this item may be passed over, to be returned to later.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am perfectly willing to do that. It is far too important a matter to guess at.

Mr. RUBEY. So that we can take the matter up and confer with the Secretary of Agriculture and before the bill is completed return to it, so that we may be able to agree on what we should do.

Mr. HAUGEN. I concur with the gentleman. This is an important item. The people of my State are as much interested in it as the people of any State. It is too important to proceed with in the dark. We should have the benefit of the judgment of those who have investigated the matter. It can just as well be brought up in the regular manner.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Did the department submit any estimate at all to the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. The department did not.

Mr. CARTER. This estimate submitted to the Committee on Appropriations was submitted for the current year?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. It is to supply a deficiency, which emphasizes my contention that the matter should be given proper consideration and not be hastily disposed of by guess. We must provide a sufficient amount. That estimate to take care of the deficiency during the current year went to the Committee on Appropriations, and very properly so.

Mr. CARTER. Has there been no estimate submitted for the next fiscal year?

Mr. HAUGEN. No. The department stated when the regular estimates were submitted that it would submit estimates later when the Appropriations Committee had disposed of the estimates pending before it. So far all the estimates for the corn borer propose to make the money immediately available, and naturally and properly have been referred to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized for five minutes on this item.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. GOOD. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then I ask unanimous consent that this matter may be passed over, with the privilege of returning to it later after the committee has had an opportunity to confer with the department and secure an estimate.

Mr. GOOD. I desire to speak on this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the matter may be returned to later. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Reserving the right to object, I desire to address the committee on this item for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in the last session, as I recall, an estimate for a deficiency of $250,000 was submitted for the eradication of the European corn borer, and the Committee on Appropriations heard the Department of Agriculture very extensively on this subject. During the present session of Congress an estimate for $500,000 was submitted, and the department appeared before the committee again, and we heard them, although at that time they said the condition had not changed since the time they appeared before us theretofore.

Gentlemen ought to get the matter straight in their minds with regard to this so-called European corn borer. It is an insect that has affected not only corn in those localities where it has been discovered, but it affects practically all vegetable growth. It is found in weeds, in the timber; it is found in the vegetation in the back yards, corn and oats in the field; and we had before us the pictures of Federal employees working in a 50-foot back yard pulling up tomato vines and everything of that kind and destroying them. It is not contended—and nobody appeared before any committee or will appear before any committee and contend—that we can exterminate this pest, no matter what the appropriation. The methods followed, I think, to a practical man, have been so foolish that there is not a man here who would attempt it and spend his own money in that way.

What are they doing with the money appropriated? They are going out into the cornfields and taking the farmers' corn and shredding it and steaming it. They are going out into the farmers' cornfields and raking up the cornstalks for the farmers and burning them. They are cutting the weeds and burning them that he should cut and burn. They are simply wasting the money.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I read in the hearings, and I have read them thoroughly, where you asked a gentleman if that would not be the proper method, and he said it would not be.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but that is how they are actually spending the money and the department practically concedes there is nothing that can be done to exterminate this pest. It does not believe there ought to be a dollar of money expended in the way they are expending it, but justify their estimate on the theory that it will satisfy popular clamor when money is available for such purpose. That in view of the power to regulate, it does believe there ought to be some quarantine regulation with regard to sending seed corn to the West from infected areas, and I think that has occurred. Now, so far as the spread of the bore is concerned, this same broom corn went out into the Middle West and into the Mississippi Valley in shipments from the East, but so far the department has not found a single case of corn borer west of western New York. So far, they have found it only in sweet corn, practically, and in garden vegetation, oats, and weeds. And the method that has been employed with the money already appropriated, according to the unanimous opinion of the subcommittee on deficiencies, was an entire waste. They had pictures there of Federal employees, five or six of them, in a little 50-foot back yard, leaning on their hoe handles and fork handles, drawing Federal money, attempting to clean up some one's back yard. Such waste of public money would be comical if it was not such a tragedy. It did not impress the committee. And I will say to the gentleman that a majority of that committee come from corn-growing States, vitally interested in this matter, and it was the opinion of this committee that every dollar expended for exterminating this pest would be wasted.

Mr. RUBEY. May I ask the gentleman when that picture was taken?

Mr. GOOD. I think it was taken last fall.

Mr. RUBEY. The appropriation went into effect last July. The State of Massachusetts appropriated $100,000, and instead of putting their own State men in control of it they put it under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture, who sent his men down there to do the work under the Massachusetts men.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will read the hearings he will find that they certainly do not commend themselves to the good judgment of the gentleman from Missouri or the good judgment of other Members of this House. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee, and I think it was the opinion of the men that came before the committee, that they could not exterminate this pest, and practically the only thing that was urged was some money for the quarantine. We felt that the appropriations carried in the Agricultural bill were sufficient to enforce all the quarantine law with regard to seed corn that was being shipped between the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit the unanimous-consent request, in order to give the chairman of the committee and myself and other members of the committee an opportunity to confer with the Department of Agriculture. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be passed over, with the privilege of returning to it before we complete the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Not that the amendment be passed, but with the privilege of returning to it later. Withdraw the amendment and ask the privilege of returning to it.

Mr. RUBEY. Just let the amendment be considered as pending.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then, let us vote on the amendment and dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUBEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 26.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. RUBEY took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 28.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $125,000, of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMAS: In the place of the figures "$125,000" in line 21 on page 58, insert, "$140,000," and after the word "available" in line 22, insert the following: "Of said sum $67,000 shall be immediately available, $42,000 of which shall be used for investigation and work in connection with the control of insects and worms injurious to tobacco."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, there is an appropriation in this bill of $125,000 for the investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, among which are included insects affecting tobacco, and of this sum $25,000 shall be immediately available. This amendment simply increases the amount of the appropriation, and increases the amount which shall be immediately available. I think the amendment is in order. I think it is in order to offer an amendment to increase the appropriation, because I have observed many amendments of this kind have been offered in various bills and usually the sky is the limit if the person offering the amendment can get it through. I think that this amendment is perfectly germane. If the gentleman from Illinois desires to make the point of order, he can do it, and the Chair can pass upon it. I understood that he made it and did not reserve it.

Mr. CANNON. I will make it now.

Mr. THOMAS. All right; let the Chair pass upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Let the amendment be read again.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, heretofore about $27,000 has been appropriated for an investigation of tobacco insects that affect growing tobacco, particularly what the Department of Agriculture calls the "tobacco hornworm." But when I used to pull worms off tobacco we called them just plain old-fashioned "green tobacco worms."

I notice in this bill, gentlemen, that about $189,000 is proposed to be appropriated for the destruction of the barberry bush. I can tell you how to destroy barberry bush without the appropriation of a single cent. That is to take a hoe and cut them down and burn them and keep that up until you have eradicated them. That is the only way to kill bushes. [Laughter.] I have tried it many a time on sassafras and persimmon sprouts. [Laughter.] It is the most effective thing in the world.

Gentlemen, I ask in this amendment an appropriation of only $42,000, an increase of $15,000, for the purpose of conducting investigations to eradicate the tobacco hornworm. Investigations along this line have been made for the last several years by the Department of Agriculture, and that department has discovered a remedy which, if applied to the plant, will kill the worm, and that is arsenate of lead. The department proposes to obtain 9 square miles in Todd County, Ky., and Montgomery County, Tenn., in the largest tobacco-raising region in the world, for the purpose of conducting experiments to see if it can not get rid entirely of the tobacco worm.

There is not another agricultural product that is taxed by the Federal Government, so far as I am informed; and tobacco, which is raised almost exclusively by the farmers of this country, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, paid into the Federal Treasury over $206,000,000. And yet we are asking only the modest sum of $42,000 to conduct this experiment, which, if successful, will save a great deal of farm labor in this country. And in view of the fact that barberry bushes get $189,000, I think this House ought to appropriate the sum asked for the benefit of the farmers who raise tobacco, which is the third largest money crop, I believe, in the United States, and which pays to the Federal Government the only revenue paid by any agricultural product. I think you ought to be willing to donate this small sum of $42,000, even if you have to take it off the $189,000 that goes to barberry bushes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN of Illinois). The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Raising tobacco, gentlemen, is the hardest of all farm work. After it is planted, or set out, as we call it, and it grows up a little, then comes worm time, and that is a mighty bad time on tobacco, and farmers have to pick the worms off by hand. In order to raise a crop of tobacco, you have got to worm every plant of that tobacco every week in order to preserve it from the ravages of the worm. Tobacco is topped at various heights, running from 10 to 16 leaves, and when you worm tobacco you have got to go down the row and take it leaf by leaf to pick the worms off of it; and the worms are not on top of the leaf, gentlemen. Some of you, I suspect, especially those who live in the frozen North, do not know that. [Laughter.] The worm stays on the underside of the leaf, and you have got to raise the leaf up and look under it, and sometimes you will probably see a dozen little tobacco worms on one leaf, and you must pick them all off and mash and kill them between your fingers. [Laughter.] By the time you come out of a tobacco patch on Saturday night, after worming tobacco, having on the suit of clothes, of course, that you have worn all the week, you have got so much tobacco gum on you that your folks hardly know you when you go home. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, this appropriation was asked for by Dr. Howard, who is Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, Department of Agriculture. Here is a memorandum that I have from him, sent to me by Mr. W. D. Hunter, the head of the Southern Field Crop Section, in which he says:

Memorandum for Dr. Howard.

It is recommended that an estimate be submitted for an increase of $15,000 in the funds provided for tobacco-insect investigations during the coming fiscal year.

For some years the investigation of tobacco insects has been conducted under an allotment of $27,000. With the increased amounts which must be paid for salaries, livery, and other necessary expenses the amount now available is not sufficient to conduct properly the work which should be undertaken in the interest of the tobacco industry. The investigation has reached a stage which requires more intensive and extensive experiments. A remedy for the tobacco hornworm has been discovered, but the most economical application of that remedy can only be determined by a series of farm experiments sufficiently wide and separated to give an average of conditions. One of the most important problems which now requires attention is the number of dosages which fit in best with general operations on the farm—that is, can labor not otherwise occupied be used to destroy the tobacco hornworm by hand economically at any stage instead of applying an insecticide? Another question requiring attention is whether the amount of poison applied should be only sufficient to kill the worms upon the tobacco at the time or strong enough to keep the tobacco free of worms for a considerable period. If it is feasible to apply sufficient quantities to protect the tobacco for some time the requirements for Burley, one-sucker, and broad-leaf tobaccos must be determined. There are also questions relating to dusting machinery which need to be investigated. It is likely that great improvements in the present machinery can be made as the result of further investigation.

In order to intensify the work along the lines indicated an increase of at least $15,000 in the funds available is absolutely necessary.

Yours, very truly,

W. D. HUNTER.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more. I do not occupy much of the time of the House, gentlemen.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Kentucky may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a communication here from a gentleman in Todd County—James S. Linebaugh, a large tobacco grower—right adjacent to the Tennessee line and to the district of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. The writer says:

We are very anxious for Prof. A. C. Morgan, who is in charge of the tobacco-insect work in this section, to run an experiment, having a certain area in Todd County, Ky., and Montgomery County, Tenn., under the department's supervision, to determine the fact whether or not the tobacco worm can be exterminated.

These experiments will require a great deal of work, as you will see from a short outline of the work, as follows:

Prof. Morgan proposes to take charge of an area of about 3 miles square, containing about 9 square miles, the tobacco on these farms to be sprayed with arsenate of lead, as is usually done; then the department to take charge and destroy all abandoned plant beds; to destroy all suckers after the tobacco is cut, or to poison same, so that no worms will be allowed to mature and infest that area the following year.

I believe the experiment will be of great benefit to the tobacco growers.

Dr. Howard recommended to the Secretary of Agriculture that an increase of $15,000 be made.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Inasmuch as the Government has already spent a good deal of money for the purpose of developing arsenate of lead to destroy the tobacco worm, does not the gentleman think that as a matter of good business and ordinary common sense this Government ought to provide for a proper and practical demontration in behalf of the farmer?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. At Clarksville, Tenn., about 12 or 13 miles from the Kentucky line, there is a laboratory which has been there for several years in charge of Prof. Morgan, of the Agricultural Department. It was erected there for the purpose of making these investigations, and they have proceeded far enough to find a remedy that will absolutely destroy the worm on the tobacco plant. Now they want to experiment further so as to find a remedy that will entirely eradicate the tobacco worm.

In that part of the country work in tobacco takes more time during the year than all the other crops on the farm, and if this remedy can be found it will be a great thing for the general production of the country in other farm products, because it will enable great numbers of farm hands who have devoted their time almost exclusively during the summer season to the getting of the worms off the tobacco plants to devote their time to other farm work and will enable farmers to raise greater amounts of corn, wheat, and other kinds of farm products. I trust the gentlemen who vote against this amendment will be compelled to chew barberry root and smoke barberry leaves in place of tobacco. [Applause.]

The Republican Party demanded with crocodile tears of patriotism that Mr. Wilson return to this country and call into immediate session the "onliest" Congress, so it could at once pass much-needed legislation to reduce the high cost of living, and yet it has been in session many months and the cost of living has steadily increased, and the profiteer, as he always does under Republican control, has waxed fat and insolent. The most this House has done in an alleged effort to reduce the high cost of living is to repeal the tax on ice cream and soda water, cut to the quick the Agricultural appropriation bill, which is a bill in the interest of farmers, and pass an outrageous appropriation for the eradication of the barberry bush, claimed to be an infant of lusty growth that causes rust on wheat, though few, if any, wheat farmers have ever heard that it would do so. Many grain fields were within a few rods of the alleged infected barberry bushes and the wheat was not infected with rust.

The sanitary wisdom of those working for barberry bushes and an appropriation is wonderful, and is fully appreciated by this Congress in the donation of about $189,000 to eradicate an imaginary evil, while at the same time the appropriation for eradicating hog cholera was reduced $100,000.

This Republican Congress opposes an increase of $15,000 for the eradication of the tobacco hornworn. This appropriation at present is only $27,000, and tobacco is one of the largest money crops raised in the United States and is the only agricultural product that pays any revenue tax to the Government. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the revenue collected by the Government from tobacco products was over $206,000,000. The money value of the tobacco crop, as estimated by the Department of Agriculture, for 1918 was $402,264,000 and $542,547,000 in 1919, but the Republican Party opposes a slight increase in the appropriation to lighten the labor of the toilers in the tobacco fields, while it cheerfully appropriated $5,777,842 for looking after national forests, situated chiefly in the North and West. This Congress also appropriated $52,330 for classification and exchange of bugs and other insects. I presume that sum was for paying "boot" in swapping bugs with our allies.

The Weather Bureau also came in for an appropriation of $1,879,010. I do not know what the $10 is for, but I do know most people have no more faith in the weather prognostications of that bureau than they have in the groundhog, and in addition there are scores who believe that most any old farmer can give that bureau six and the go and beat it as a weather predictor.

But why enumerate? A volume would not record the legislative sins of the Republican Party. Word has been handed around that expenses must be cut so that party can make a record for economy this Congress. This Congress will pass the Esch-Cummins railroad bill. That bill will saddle on the taxpayers a debt of $2,000,000,000 or more in the way of railroad subsidy. They make the specious plea and untrue allegation that it is for the purpose of repealing an alleged Government ownership law under which they affirm the railroads are operated. There is no such law and never has been. There has been and now is Government operation, but not ownership. Regardless of the Esch-Cummins bill the railroads under the law and the proclamation of the President will be returned to the private owners the 1st of March, and the bugaboo of Government ownership is a scarecrow erected by those who are making a raid on the Treasury in the interest of the railroads to frighten the timid.

The Esch-Cummins bill violates the Constitution in at least two particulars; that is, it seeks to fix wages, which is a matter of contract between the parties; and it takes private property for public purposes without compensation; and so the railroads will grow fatter than ever on the taxes wrung from the people.

I say the bill will pass. The corridors of the Capitol have been thronged with the mightiest railroad lobby that has been seen in this city in many years—poor widows and orphans, children I presume who are holders of railroad securities, though all of them, I have noticed, are silk or other costly "hatted" persons wearing fine coats and "pants" and most of them diamond breast plates.

The bill will pass. The Republican campaign committee needs campaign funds, and many of the leaders of that party are old adepts at frying the fat out of corporations. Many Republicans will hang back, as they are opposed to the bill, and a few may vote against it, but the Republican House steering committee will get busy, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the ringmaster of the entire aggregation, will crack the party lash and make the hides of the recalcitrants pop like new hogskin saddles, and they will fall over one another when voting time comes to rush into the Republican fold. So why should the Republican Party care anything about a farmer or an agricultural bill when they can cut the agricultural appropriations in the interest of economy and thereby be enabled to appropriate more to the railroads and Wall Street holders of securities.

The next day after the conference report of the committee on the Esch-Cummins bill was made to the House railroad securities advanced rapidly in Wall Street, and experts estimate that stock gamblers cleared a billion and a quarter dollars in a single day on railroad securities.

Wyoming, the State of the gentleman, Mr. MONDELL, is essentially a Republican cattle-raising State. We are told that there is a herd of 10,000 elk now facing starvation in Jackson's Hole, in that State, and the Bureau of Biological Survey has been buying hay at a cost of more than $60 per ton to feed them, notwithstanding which there is danger that the herd will perish. Several years ago a winter range was set apart in Teton Forest reserve for this herd of elk, but cattle has been permitted to graze there in the early summer and their use of the reserve has left nothing for the elk. The range has been practically destroyed owing to overstocking with cattle, and a jack rabbit would starve where 10,000 elk were supposed to subsist. In the past few years the number of cattle has trebled, while the number of elk has greatly decreased. Cattlemen pay 50 cents for each adult beef animal pastured on this range, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] insists that the Government make an appropriation to pay $60 per ton for hay to feed the elk while cattlemen who rule Wyoming politically shall pay only 50 cents a head for cattle eating the grass that by law was set apart for the elk. Some more Republican economy.

It may be that Republican Senators and Representatives are prophets not without honor in Wyoming as well as Washington.

The trouble with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and his steering committee is they have lost their rudder as well as their rabbit's foot and are dashing toward the rocks. They are now beset by many legislative political ills—such as compulsory military training, as to which they have suddenly developed a serious case of cold feet until after the election—which even that eminent leader and political physician of the Congressional campaign committee [Dr. FESS] is unable to diagnose and properly prescribe for.

In fact the entire aggregation is in the condition of the crying baby. They want to do something, but do not know just what except as to one thing, and that is to assist Wall Street and the holders of railroad securities all they possibly can.

"John," said an anxious mother to her little son, "what is the matter with baby?" "I don't know what to do with him," replied John, "he's dug a hole in the ground and wants to bring it into the house."

Mr. MONDELL and his steering committee have dug many holes and would like to bring them into the house away from the public sight, but do not know just how to go about it. This increased tobacco appropriation should be passed. There are Republicans who are patriotic enough to vote for it. It is solely in the interest of the farmer and the toiler in the tobacco fields.

There is a class of city fiction writers employed by daily papers whose vision is narrow and limited, whose gray matter is thin, and who believe that the farmer was foreordained to raise food for them at and below cost, but if something is not done to get people back on farms and at work instead of loafing around cities and demanding that the Government support them this same class of people will feel an emptiness of stomach and the gnawing of hunger at the place where their food used to be.
